TOOK ALL THE CASH.

A Wisconsin County Treasurer Held Up While at Work in His Office.

VIROQUA, Wis., Jan. 1.—While County Treasurer John C. Johnson was working in his office in the court house Saturday evening two strangers entered the office and presenting fire arms made the treasurer surrender. They gagged and bound him and forced him to open the vault, from which they extracted between $4,000 and $5,000. They locked him in the vault, where he remained till near 11 o'clock. On the discovery of the robbery couriers were sent in all directions and the wires used in hopes of Apprehending the Robbers.

Johnson was serving the last day of his second term and was prepared to turn the affairs of the office over to his successor. Not an hour before the robbery he had closed the final settlement with the finance committee of the county board. Mr. Johnson and a younger brother remained and closed up some work. Treasurer Johnson says his brother had not more than left the building when he heard footsteps coming through the hall, and a pull at his office door, which was locked. Thinking that his brother had returned for something, he stepped to the door, unlocked it and found himself with revolvers drawn, who commanded him to "keep his head shut or have it blown off." He was forced to unlock the heavy vault door, then the large safe and the combination on the safe deposit box within. This done, Mr. Johnson was nearly strangled by having a handkerchief forced into his mouth and another put over his mouth and tightly drawn at the back of his head. His hands were drawn behind his back and securely bound with strong cord. The money was hastily secured and stowed away in the overcoat pockets of the plunderers. The booty bagged, the desperadoes closed the vault door on Johnson and made their exit from the office, locking the door and taking the key with them.

Confronted by Two Masked Men

BAPTIZED WITH BLOOD.

Terrible Battle Occurs in the New Mining Camp of San Juan, Colo.

DENVER, Dec. 29.—The San Juan mining camp has followed the precedents of all great mining camps by baptising itself with human blood. A courier arrived in Bluff City during the morning and reported a terrible battle Tuesday morning, in which over 100 shots were exchanged. He reported eleven killed and a large number wounded. George Ferguson, an old prospector, and James Cody, known as "Blind Jim," one of the best known characters in Arizona and New Mexico mining camps, are among the slain. The courier was in a

and had left the grounds after the last shot was fired to obtain medical aid. A private dispatch during the afternoon from Dolores to John Eddy, a Denver mining man, confirms the terrible report. The trouble grew out of a dispute over certain claims which had been staked out. There are nearly 5,000 men in the fields and there has been very little attention paid to the people staking out claims. The prospectors have simply devoted their time to prospecting and scouring the sands to find the most promising location.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Four Persons Lose Their Lives in a Kansas Fire.

OSAWATOMIE, Kan., Dec. 30.—One of the most destructive fires to life and property ever experienced here occurred during the night. Three large two-story dwellings on Crouch avenue, owned by William Chestnut, caught fire from natural gas and were entirely consumed, nothing being saved. Four persons were cremated alive and several made miraculous escapes in their night clothes. The names of the dead are: Mrs. Louise Kindle, Miss Griffith, an infant child. Miss Fletcher, a servant.

Children Burned to Death.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The house of William Phillips, a colored laborer, living near Stony Brook, L. I., was destroyed by fire. Four small children who were locked in the house were horribly burned. Two of them were dead when discovered, and the others died soon after.

Celebrated Emancipation Day.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 3.—The Afro-American citizens took possession of the city Monday and celebrated Emancipation Day with booming honors. Thousands of colored people from the surrounding country flocked to town.

The Latest in Men's Scarfs.

White silk scarfs are worn in the afternoon and dark scarfs in the morning. The shapes are the large four-in-hand, tied in a small knot, with broad flowing ends, and the wide puffed Ascot scarf. The handsomest white scarfs are in fine birdseye patterned silks that are soft and lustrous, and these are chosen for day weddings and receptions for groom, best man, ushers and guests. The novelty just offered for morning wear is the four-in-hand scarf of bright Scotch plaid silk. More familiar scarfs are of subdued coloring of intricate Persian designs or of small brocaded figures. Olive brocaded scarfs are worn with brown suits by men who are fond of novelties. Russian blue scarfs are brocaded in small black designs. Dark green grounds ~~have~~ orange arabesque patterns.

A navy blue silk, called brussels twill, powdered with white spots or small horseshoes, is chosen by Englishmen or men with English tastes for scarfs all the year round. Black satin scarfs are still worn all day, and narrow black ties are worn in the evening at stag parties. White lawn ties for full evening dress are wider than those of last season and should be tied in the new bow that has the strap quite wide and flat instead of being folded. Extreme styles of black cravats are tied in a large bow, with butterfly ends.—Harper's Bazar.

Rather Unreasonable.

Little Girl—I don't see why teachers has to be so mean.

Aunty—What has yours done?

Little Girl—In the 'stronomy lessons last term she asked me how many moons Jupiter had, and I said five, and she marked me a miss 'cause the book said four. Now she says Jupiter really has five moons, and I wanted her to mark that miss off, and she wouldn't.—Good News.

Reason to Be Proud.

Fond Mother—My child, you will always have something to be proud of. You were born on the queen's birthday.

Sweet Child—Dear me, mamma, were we twins?—Exchange.

COMMISSIONERS PROCEEDINGS.

Minutes of the Meeting of the Board Held Dec. 20th, 1892.

The board met on December 20th for the last meeting of the year, with every member present. The report of the committee in the matter of the Terrebonne and Red Lake Falls road was submitted; said report recommending that the petition be granted. The report was accepted and Commissioners Erwin and DeMers appointed a committee to secure right of way for said road.

Petition read to detach certain territory from school district No. 60 and 61 and attach same to No. 36. Hearing set for January meeting.

The Register of Deeds called for more money for clerk hire and the board decided to appropriate $650 for the purpose of finishing the work for the year.

Bill of Red River Dalen for court calendars was referred to a committee with instructions to report at next meeting.

The members of the board who remain on deck for the coming term passed resolutions congratulating themselves upon their good luck in remaining and extending condolence and taffy to those who go out into the cold, cold world to live like ordinary folks for the future.

The following bills were decided to be not proper county charges: John Carlson's, F. O. Johnson's, C. Mathieson's, M. Gulbrandson's and Dr. A. Nelson's.

The bills of Sheriff Grundysen, Chris Widenhoeffer, Nels Nelson, E. P. West and I. Barrell were referred for correction.

Another Old-Timer Goes.

On Tuesday evening H. A. Mason and wife left for their new home in Michigan. "Herb," as he is best known, came to Crookston in the early day. On account of weak eyes he was incapacitated for general business and opened a peanut, confectionery and pop-corn stand in one corner of the post office room. This humble beginning soon out-grew his limited quarters and he rented a large building and added largely to his stock until, when he sold out recently, he was doing a large business on the corner of Main and Robert streets. Herb is a rustler from way back, is enterprising and public-spirited, ever ready to sacrifice time and money for the upbuilding of our little city, and there is many a man left that could be better spared than Herb. He leaves many warm friends here who will unite with the JOURNAL in a hearty wish for his future prosperity, while they secretly hope that he will yet return to Crookston to live.

Kirsch on Home Industry.

Commissioner Kirsch—cunning old fox—got in a very nice plug for the Times at the opening of the session of the new board. He reported on a bill of the Red River Dalen which had been referred to him. The bill was for printing court calendars and amounted to some $75.00. Mike said he wrote to the Grand Forks Herald for a price on the job and they gave him $100.00, so he had concluded that the Dalen's bill was all right. In explaining why the board had kicked on the bill, Kirsch said the Times had printed them for $65 and they thought the Dalen was overcharging. He forgot to say that calendars differ and that the last calendars may have contained more cases than when the Times printed them. But the funny part of the joke was that Mr. Kirsch said he believed in patronizing home industry. Why did he send to Grand Forks then for a bid when there was at least another printing office in the city that could do the work as cheap and as well as the Times or the Dalen or the Grand Forks Herald?

Was it L. G. Wood?

Going down on the N. P. train on Friday evening of last week somebody handed the conductor a pass made out in the name of Senator L. G. Wood and when requested to sign his name, wrote "L. G. Wood" but it was so different from the signature on the pass that the conductor was suspicious and requested him to identify himself further by showing some letter or paper or any document he might have about him. This the man utterly refused to do and when informed that unless he did so he would be obliged to put up for his fare and forfeit the pass, he produced a fat pocket-book and producing a ten dollar bill handed it to the conductor who kept the pass and handed back the change. The question is "if that was Senator Wood why did he pay his fare rather than comply with a reasonable request, and if it was not him who was it?"

The Enterprise is Jealous.

Hallock Enterprise:—It is quite amusing to see the accounts in the Crookston papers of the capture of Geo. Schneider by Chief Gonyea. The facts are that as an officer he did just what he was wired to do by the marshal of this city, and was told to search the butter where he would find the money. Let honor be given to whom honor is due. Chief Gonyea did only as directed by the marshal of this city, or as the marshal of this place would at any time do for Chief Gonyea were he so ordered.

DR. BRIGGS UPHELD.

Charge of Heresy Against the Noted Divine Fails to Be Sustained.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The session of the New York presbytery which is sitting as a court on the trial of Professor Briggs, was begun promptly at 2 p. m. The voting on the first charge was begun at 4 o'clock and the vote on the sixth charge was completed when the presbytery adjourned, shortly before 6 o'clock. The result of these ballots was then announced to the reporters. The result was a great surprise for on all of the six counts the vote was adverse to the sustaining of the charges.

The Vote on the Several Charges.

On the first charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that the reason is a source of divine authority, 60 voted to sustain the charge and 68 against. On the second charge, which accuses Professor Briggs with teaching that the church is a source of divine authority, there were 55 votes cast in favor of sustaining the charge and 71 against. The closest vote was on the third charge, that Professor Briggs taught that the scriptures contained errors of history and fact. On this charge the vote was 61 to sustain and 68 against the charge. After this vote had been taken two or three of the and others refrained from voting on the last three charges. On the fourth charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that Moses was not the author of the Pentateuch, the result was 58 for and 72 against. The vote on the fifth charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that Isaiah did not write many of the chapters of the book bearing his name, was 49 for and 70 against. The vote on the sixth charge, accusing Professor Briggs of teaching that sanctification is progressive after death, was 57 for and 69 against.

Will Be Appealed.

The case will be appealed to the general assembly, which will meet in Washington early in the spring. The assembly will appoint a commission consisting of fourteen unprejudiced members to act on the appeal. The friends of Dr. Briggs were greatly pleased with the result. They had calculated on a majority ranging from four to six.

HOSTILE TO DIAZ.

A Proclamation by Mexican Insurgents Boldly Announces the Fact.

MONTERRY, Mex., Jan. 3.—The Mexican government through the efforts of General Reyes, governor of the state of Nueva Leon, has secured positive evidence implicating two hundred prominent Mexicans of the state of Tamaulipas and the Texas frontier in the present revolutionary movement. This evidence is in the nature of a secret revolutionary pronunciamento, distributed among those believed to be in sympathy with the cause.

This document is signed with the names of 200 men. It outlines the plan of revolution and the policy of the proposed new government.

EPIDEMIC OF TYPHUS.

New York's Health Department Busy Fighting the Disease.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Five additional cases of typhus fever were discovered during the day, making in all forty-eight cases that have developed since Dec. 1. These cases are all from the lodging house at 34 Bayard street, except one at Ward's Island. Nearly all the attention of the health department is now centered on the Bayard street house. There are fifty-one persons in quarantine in the house. Physicians examine them every hour and as soon as the fever develops the sufferer is removed to the island. Dr. Cyrus Elson, of the board of health, said that he did not think the outbreak had anything to do with the cases brought here in the Messila last spring. It is possible, however, that the disease may have been brought here from Mexico, where it is raging.

NO ARSENIC FOUND.

The Deaths Among the Arkansas Convicts Not Caused by Poisoning.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—Dr. J. J. Robertson, penitentiary physician, has returned from St. Louis bringing the report of Dr. Curtman, who has been holding tests for three days of the viscera taken from the bodies of two dead convicts. Dr. Curtman held eight tests, each one resulting the same, showing the absence of arsenic. This settles the poisoning theory, and many now believe that the disease among the convicts is a type of cholera.

Fire in an Insane Asylum.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 31.—A special to The Wisconsin from Sheboygan, Wis., says: An overheated stove caused a fire at the county insane asylum at 3 o'clock this morning, in which Chester Carver, the night watchman, aged 60, was suffocated. Superintendent A. J. Whiffan was seriously burned in endeavoring to save Carver. The pecuniary loss amounted to $500.

To Test Dynamite Guns.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, Lieutenant Schroeder, has left the Brooklyn navy yard for Port Royal. She passed out of Sandy Hook at 8:39. The vessel will go direct to Port Royal sound, where the final test of her great dynamite guns will be made. The tests will be made early next week.

A Wisconsin County Treasurer Held Up While at Work in His Office.

VIROQUA, Wis., Jan. 1.—While County Treasurer John C. Johnson was working in his office in the court house Saturday evening two strangers entered the office and presenting fire arms made the treasurer surrender. They gagged and bound him and forced him to open the vault, from which they extracted between $4,000 and $5,000. They locked him in the vault, where he remained till near 11 o'clock. On the discovery of the robbery couriers were sent in all directions and the wires used in hopes of Apprehending the Robbers.

Johnson was serving the last day of his second term and was prepared to turn the affairs of the office over to his successor. Not an hour before the robbery he had closed the final settlement with the finance committee of the county board. Mr. Johnson and a younger brother remained and closed up some work. Treasurer Johnson says his brother had not more than left the building when he heard footsteps coming through the hall, and a pull at his office door, which was locked. Thinking that his brother had returned for something, he stepped to the door, unlocked it and found himself with revolvers drawn, who commanded him to "keep his head shut or have it blown off." He was forced to unlock the heavy vault door, then the large safe and the combination on the safe deposit box within. This done, Mr. Johnson was nearly strangled by having a handkerchief forced into his mouth and another put over his mouth and tightly drawn at the back of his head. His hands were drawn behind his back and securely bound with strong cord. The money was hastily secured and stowed away in the overcoat pockets of the plunderers. The booty bagged, the desperadoes closed the vault door on Johnson and made their exit from the office, locking the door and taking the key with them.

BAPTIZED WITH BLOOD.

Terrible Battle Occurs in the New Mining Camp of San Juan, Colo.

DENVER, Dec. 29.—The San Juan mining camp has followed the precedents of all great mining camps by baptising itself with human blood. A courier arrived in Bluff City during the morning and reported a terrible battle Tuesday morning, in which over 100 shots were exchanged. He reported eleven killed and a large number wounded. George Ferguson, an old prospector, and James Cody, known as "Blind Jim," one of the best known characters in Arizona and New Mexico mining camps, are among the slain. The courier was in a

and had left the grounds after the last shot was fired to obtain medical aid. A private dispatch during the afternoon from Dolores to John Eddy, a Denver mining man, confirms the terrible report. The trouble grew out of a dispute over certain claims which had been staked out. There are nearly 5,000 men in the fields and there has been very little attention paid to the people staking out claims. The prospectors have simply devoted their time to prospecting and scouring the sands to find the most promising location.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Four Persons Lose Their Lives in a Kansas Fire.

OSAWATOMIE, Kan., Dec. 30.—One of the most destructive fires to life and property ever experienced here occurred during the night. Three large two-story dwellings on Crouch avenue, owned by William Chestnut, caught fire from natural gas and were entirely consumed, nothing being saved. Four persons were cremated alive and several made miraculous escapes in their night clothes. The names of the dead are: Mrs. Louise Kindle, Miss Griffith, an infant child, Miss Fletcher, a servant.

Children Burned to Death.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The house of William Phillips, a colored laborer, living near Stony Brook, L. I., was destroyed by fire. Four small children who were locked in the house were horribly burned. Two of them were dead when discovered, and the others died soon after.

Celebrated Emancipation Day.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 3.—The Afro-American citizens took possession of the city Monday and celebrated Emancipation Day with booming honors. Thousands of colored people from the surrounding country flocked to town.

The Latest in Men's Scarfs.

White silk scarfs are worn in the afternoon and dark scarfs in the morning. The shapes are the large four-in-hand, tied in a small knot, with broad flowing ends, and the wide puffed Ascot scarf. The handsomest white scarfs are in fine birdseye patterned silks that are soft and lustrous, and these are chosen for day weddings and receptions for groom, best man, ushers and guests. The novelty just offered for morning wear is the four-in-hand scarf of bright Scotch plaid silk. More familiar scarfs are of subdued coloring of intricate Persian designs or of small brocaded figures. Olive brocaded scarfs are worn with brown suits by men who are fond of novelties. Russian blue scarfs are brocaded in small black designs. Dark green grounds have orange arabesque patterns.

A navy blue silk, called brussels twill, powdered with white spots or small horseshoes, is chosen by Englishmen or men with English tastes for scarfs all the year round. Black satin scarfs are still worn all day, and narrow black ties are worn in the evening at stag parties. White lawn ties for full evening dress are wider than those of last season and should be tied in the new bow that has the strap quite wide and flat instead of being folded. Extreme styles of black cravats are tied in a large bow, with butterfly ends.—Harper's Bazar.

Rather Unreasonable.

Little Girl—I don't see why teachers has to be so mean.

Aunty—What has yours done?

Little Girl—In the 'stronomy lessons last term she asked me how many moons Jupiter had, and I said five, and she marked me a miss 'cause the book said four. Now she says Jupiter really has five moons, and I wanted her to mark that miss off, and she wouldn't.—Good News.

Reason to Be Proud.

Fond Mother—My child, you will always have something to be proud of. You were born on the queen's birthday.

Sweet Child—Dear me, mamma, were we twins?—Exchange.

COMMISSIONERS PROCEEDINGS.

Minutes of the Meeting of the Board Held Dec. 20th, 1892.

The board met on December 20th for the last meeting of the year, with every member present. The report of the committee in the matter of the Terrebonne and Red Lake Falls road was submitted; said report recommending that the petition be granted. The report was accepted and Commissioners Erwin and DeMers appointed a committee to secure right of way for said road.

Petition read to detach certain territory from school district No. 60 and 61 and attach same to No. 36. Hearing set for January meeting.

The Register of Deeds called for more money for clerk hire and the board decided to appropriate $650 for the purpose of finishing the work for the year.

Bill of Red River Dalen for court calendars was referred to a committee with instructions to report at next meeting.

The members of the board who remain on deck for the coming term passed resolutions congratulating themselves upon their good luck in remaining and extending condolence and taffy to those who go out into the cold, cold world to live like ordinary folks for the future.

The following bills were decided to be not proper county charges: John Carlson's, F. O. Johnson's, C. Mathieson's, M. Gulbrandson's and Dr. A. Nelson's.

The bills of Sheriff Grundysen, Chris Widenhoeffer, Nels Nelson, E. P. West and I. Barrell were referred for correction.

Another Old-Timer Goes.

On Tuesday evening H. A. Mason and wife left for their new home in Michigan. "Herb," as he is best known, came to Crookston in the early day. On account of weak eyes he was incapacitated for general business and opened a peanut, confectionery and pop-corn stand in one corner of the post office room. This humble beginning soon out-grew his limited quarters and he rented a large building and added largely to his stock until, when he sold out recently, he was doing a large business on the corner of Main and Robert streets. Herb is a rustler from way back, is enterprising and public-spirited, ever ready to sacrifice time and money for the upbuilding of our little city, and there is many a man left that could be better spared than Herb. He leaves many warm friends here who will unite with the JOURNAL in a hearty wish for his future prosperity, while they secretly hope that he will yet return to Crookston to live.

Kirsch on Home Industry.

Commissioner Kirsch—cunning old fox—got in a very nice plug for the Times at the opening of the session of the new board. He reported on a bill of the Red River Dalen which had been referred to him. The bill was for printing court calendars and amounted to some $75.00. Mike said he wrote to the Grand Forks Herald for a price on the job and they gave him $100.00, so he had concluded that the Dalen's bill was all right. In explaining why the board had kicked on the bill, Kirsch said the Times had printed them for $65 and they thought the Dalen was overcharging. He forgot to say that calendars differ and that the last calendars may have contained more cases than when the Times printed them. But the funny part of the joke was that Mr. Kirsch said he believed in patronizing home industry. Why did he send to Grand Forks then for a bid when there was at least another printing office in the city that could do the work as cheap and as well as the Times or the Dalen or the Grand Forks Herald?

Was it L. G. Wood?

Going down on the N. P. train on Friday evening of last week somebody handed the conductor a pass made out in the name of Senator L. G. Wood and when requested to sign his name, wrote "L. G. Wood" but it was so different from the signature on the pass that the conductor was suspicious and requested him to identify himself further by showing some letter or paper or any document he might have about him. This the man utterly refused to do and when informed that unless he did so he would be obliged to put up for his fare and forfeit the pass, he produced a fat pocket-book and producing a ten dollar bill handed it to the conductor who kept the pass and handed back the change. The question is "If that was Senator Wood why did he pay his fare rather than comply with a reasonable request, and if it was not him who was it?"

The Enterprise is Jealous.

Hallock Enterprise:—It is quite amusing to see the accounts in the Crookston papers of the capture of Geo. Schneider by Chief Gonyea. The facts are that as an officer he did just what he was wired to do by the marshal of this city, and was told to search the butter where he would find the money. Let honor be given to whom honor is due. Chief Gonyea did only as directed by the marshal of this city, or as the marshal of this place would at any time do for Chief Gonyea were he so ordered.

DR. BRIGGS UPHELD.

Charge of Heresy Against the Noted Divine Fails to Be Sustained.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The session of the New York presbytery which is sitting as a court on the trial of Professor Briggs, was begun promptly at 2 p. m. The voting on the first charge was begun at 4 o'clock and the vote on the sixth charge was completed when the presbytery adjourned, shortly before 6 o'clock. The result of these ballots was then announced to the reporters. The result was a great surprise for on all of the six counts the vote was adverse to the sustaining of the charges.

The Vote on the Several Charges.

On the first charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that the reason is a source of divine authority, 60 voted to sustain the charge and 68 against. On the second charge, which accuses Professor Briggs with teaching that the church is a source of divine authority, there were 55 votes cast in favor of sustaining the charge and 71 against. The closest vote was on the third charge, that Professor Briggs taught that the scriptures contained errors of history and fact. On this charge the vote was 61 to sustain and 68 against the charge. After this vote had been taken two or three of the and others refrained from voting on the last three charges. On the fourth charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that Moses was not the author of the Pentateuch, the result was 53 for and 72 against. The vote on the fifth charge, accusing Professor Briggs with teaching that Isaiah did not write many of the chapters of the book bearing his name, was 49 for and 70 against. The vote on the sixth charge, accusing Professor Briggs of teaching that sanctification is progressive after death, was 57 for and 69 against.

Will Be Appealed.

The case will be appealed to the general assembly, which will meet in Washington early in the spring. The assembly will appoint a commission consisting of fourteen unprejudiced members to act on the appeal. The friends of Dr. Briggs were greatly pleased with the result. They had calculated on a majority ranging from four to six.

HOSTILE TO DIAZ.

A Proclamation by Mexican Insurgents Boldly Announces the Fact.

MONTEREY, Mex., Jan. 3.—The Mexican government through the efforts of General Reyes, governor of the state of Nueva Leon, has secured positive evidence implicating two hundred prominent Mexicans of the state of Tamaulipas and the Texas frontier in the present revolutionary movement. This evidence is in the nature of a secret revolutionary pronunciamento, distributed among those believed to be in sympathy with the cause.

This document is signed with the names of 200 men. It outlines the plan of revolution and the policy of the proposed new government.

EPIDEMIC OF TYPHUS.

New York's Health Department Busy Fighting the Disease.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Five additional cases of typhus fever were discovered during the day, making in all forty-eight cases that have developed since Dec. 1. These cases are all from the lodging house at 34 Bayard street, except one at Ward's Island. Nearly all the attention of the health department is now centered on the Bayard street house. There are fifty-one persons in quarantine in the house. Physicians examine them every hour and as soon as the fever develops the sufferer is removed to the island. Dr. Cyrus Elson, of the board of health, said that he did not think the outbreak had anything to do with the cases brought here in the Messila last spring. It is possible, however, that the disease may have been brought here from Mexico, where it is raging.

NO ARSENIC FOUND.

The Deaths Among the Arkansas Convicts Not Caused by Poisoning.

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 3.—Dr. J. J. Robertson, penitentiary physician, has returned from St. Louis bringing the report of Dr. Curtman, who has been holding tests for three days of the viscera taken from the bodies of two dead convicts. Dr. Curtman held eight tests, each one resulting the same, showing the absence of arsenic. This settles the poisoning theory, and many now believe that the disease among the convicts is a type of cholera.

Fire in an Insane Asylum.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 31.—A special to The Wisconsin from Sheboygan, Wis., says: An overheated stove caused a fire at the county insane asylum at 3 o'clock this morning, in which Chester Carver, the night watchman, aged 60, was suffocated. NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, Lieutenant Schroeder, has left the Brooklyn navy yard for Port Royal. She passed out of Sandy Hook at 8:39. The vessel will go direct to Port Royal sound, where the final test of her great dynamite guns will be made. The tests will be made early next week.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

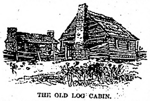
AT JACKSON'S HOME.

THE HISTORIC MANSION OF THE HERO OF NEW ORLEANS.

What the Ladies of Tennessee Are Doing to Preserve The Hermitage and Also the Cabin in Which the Warrior and Statesman Spent His Boyhood.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

Englishmen are proud of their soldiers. "Hearts of oak" they call them. The oak is a majestic tree, unmoved by storms and defying hurricanes. But the tough, sinewy, gnarled and knotted hickory is our synonym for the audacious, persistent and fiery American soldier, whose type reached perfection in Andrew Jackson.



THE OLD LOG CABIN.

"Old Hickory!" Superb sobriquet! Though years have drifted over his grave the principles of the statesman live and the memory of the soldier is green. And every patriot loves him for what he said at Washington and for what he did at New Orleans.

Though a Democrat of the old school Andrew Jackson belonged neither to party nor section. The nation claims him as one of its great men and famous warriors. There is now a golden opportunity for the nation to show in what reverence his memory is held and to raise its hand against the vandalism of greed which would sweep away a most precious landmark of history—The Hermitage—Jackson's old home near Nashville.

The general assembly of the state of Tennessee has assigned to the care of the Ladies' Hermitage association, of Nashville, the house and tomb of General Jackson and twenty-five surrounding acres to improve and preserve in lasting memory of the hero of New Orleans.

This property was purchased years ago by the state from the adopted son of General Jackson, with the proviso that his wife remain there during her life. Mrs. Jackson died three years ago, when the state handed over the historic mansion to The Hermitage association.

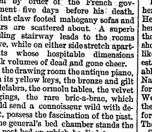
When the energetic and patriotic southern gentlewomen who formed this association took possession of the noble mansion they found ruin and decay everywhere prevalent upon the estate. The little log cabin where "Old Hickory" lived for fifteen years was a complete wreck. "Its chimney was falling down and its roof was caving in." Up at the brave old mansion affairs were not much better. The roof leaked, the plaster had fallen in all the rooms, and the wall paper was discolored and peeling. Outbuildings were tottering, fences tumbling down, and the melancholy of ruin was fast settling over the entire place.

The mansion has been roofed, plastering and paper have been repaired, fences, drives and outbuildings put in shape and the log cabin fully restored, even to the kitchen fireplace, before which "Uncle Alf," the ancient negro body servant of the general, still sits, and gazing in its ruddy flames lives over the eventful past.

The Hermitage is a magnificent specimen of colonial architecture. The approach through a long avenue bordered by grand old trees is indescribably picturesque. Across its antique porticoes and massive pillars brush low, drooping boughs, and the warm sunshine touches the old house with loving fingers. The great carved door, with its resounding knocker, stands open. Enter the old fashioned hall, long and broad enough for a modern ballroom. It is papered with highly colored scenes and incidents in the life of Telemachus.

This paper was bought by General Jackson in France in 1837 and is in an excellent state of preservation. The pictures hang on the walls just as Jackson left them. There are two very fine portraits of Mrs. Jackson, by Earle, and any number of portraits of the general, the most interesting perhaps being that taken by order of the French government five days before his death. Quaint claw footed mahogany sofas and chairs are scattered about. A superb winding stairway leads to the rooms above, while on either side stretch apartments whose hospitable dimensions speak volumes of dead and gone cheer.

In the drawing room the antique piano, with its yellow keys, the bronze and gilt candelabra, the ormolu tables, the velvet hangings, the rare bric-a-brac, which would send a connoisseur wild with delight, possess the fascination of the past. In the general's bed chamber stands the four post bed on which he died.



THE HERMITAGE.

The great mansion is a vast treasure house, literally crammed with relics and souvenirs of priceless value. There is a quantity of General Jackson's personal articles of jewelry and clothing, his watch, seal, cornelian ring, topaz breastpin, gold pen and pencil, tobacco box, walking stick, slippers, flesh brush, dressing gown and a marvelous regalia of beads presented to him by Sam Houston, of Texas.

There is his library, a collection of several hundred volumes, nearly all of which contain his autograph. There is an extensive collection of snuffboxes, one of which belonged to Lafayette and was presented by himself. There is a wilderness of curios, medals, coins, pipes and swords, among the latter being the one presented Jackson by the citizens of New Orleans in commemoration of the famous battle.

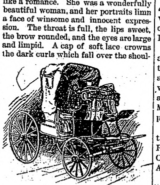
There are all the beautiful old mahogany, the rosewood, the mother of pearl, the gilt and the damask of those days. There are pitchers, vases, lamps, candelabra, andirons, clocks, statuettes, servers, mirrors, candlesticks, china and silver, including the family tea service. There is a silver dish which belonged to Decatur, a letter from Jefferson, an exquisite porcelain miniature of Mrs. De Witt Clinton, presented by herself and accompanied by a letter couched in stately persiflage of that day; an armchair presented by the wife of Chief Justice Taney, George Washington's office chair, a small panel from the floor of Napoleon's room at Longwood, St. Helena, a piece of candle found in Cornwallis' hut at the surrender of Yorktown and sent to Jackson with the request that he light it on every recurring 8th of January, and a penholder made from a portion of the tree under which Washington first unsheathed his sword in defense of American liberty.

The general's state coach is preserved as well as his carriage, made of a portion of the old ship Constitution.

In cupboards and closets are stored away many rare old bits of faded finery and coquetry. There is the full set of pearls and topaz presented by New Orleans women to Mrs. Jackson. There is a beautiful pink brocade worn by Jackson's niece at the court of Berlin, and the wedding gown of the wife of Jackson's adopted son, a Miss Yorke, a Philadelphia belle. This dainty combination of lace and satin has been worn as a wedding gown by brides of three successive generations.

"All houses wherein men have lived and died are haunted," says Longfellow, and The Hermitage is no exception. It is peopled, to the imaginative visitor, with a company of illustrious shadows, among which perhaps the phantom of gentle Rachel Jackson moves with the most tender and melancholy interest, seeming indissolubly blended with every nook and corner of the home to which she was devoted, and from which destiny decreed she should not wander.

The story of Rachel Jackson's life is like a romance. She was a wonderfully beautiful woman, and her portraits limn a face of winsome and innocent expression. The throat is full, the lips sweet, the brow rounded, and the eyes are large and limpid. A cap of soft lace crowns the dark curls which fall over the shoulders. Mrs. Jackson possessed a lovely disposition and deep personal piety. In her youth she contracted an unfortunate alliance with one her inferior in every respect, and from whom she was divorced. The love of General Jackson for his amiable and interesting wife amounted to idolatry, and during his momentous career he never escaped from the influence she left behind her. He wore her miniature on his heart till his death, and, no matter what his cares or pleasures, at the close of each busy day the president retired to a quiet room to commune with the portrait and the Bible of his dead wife.



JACKSON'S COACH.

Mrs. Jackson cared very little for the honors of this world and longed for nothing so much as the hour when her husband would finish with politics, for he assured her that when that time arrived he would become a Christian. When Jackson was elected president his wife said to those about her: "For Mr. Jackson's sake I am glad; for my own I never wished it. I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in that palace in Washington."

It was while making preparations for her departure from the dearly loved Hermitage and the little chapel built by her husband for her own especial use that this gentle soul received the rude shock which caused her death. She was like a mother to every servant on the estate, and wishing to leave all comfortable for the winter made a trip into Nashville to buy supplies and clothing for those who were dependent on her. Weary from her shopping she went into the parlor of a hotel to rest while waiting for the family coach to carry her back to The Hermitage.

Suddenly she heard her name spoken in an adjoining room and her character basely and cruelly calumniated. For some time she sat there, pale and cold, listening to accusations against herself which had been freely circulated during the campaign, but which her chivalric husband had carefully kept from her knowledge. The popular tradition adds that she was seized with spasmodic disease of the heart, from which a few nights later she died.

The grief of Jackson was agonizing, and from that hour he seemed to live to avenge her wrongs. Probably during no other administration of the government has personal feeling entered so largely into official appointments as in the offices filled by Andrew Jackson. Did he have the slightest suspicion that a man had neglected to espouse the cause of his beloved wife he lost no time in removing him. Upon her tomb he caused her virtues to be enumerated and her good deeds recited, ending the glowing tribute with these touching and eloquent words: "A being so gentle and so virtuous slander might wound, but could not dishonor. Even death, when he bore her from the arms of her husband, could but transport her to the bosom of her God."

For the Good of Others

Rev. Mr. Williams Heartily Endorses Hood's Sarsaparilla.

We are pleased to present this from Rev. A. A. Williams, of the Sillsbee street Christian Church, Lynn, Mass.:

"I see no reason why a clergyman, more than a layman, who knows whereof he speaks should hesitate to approve an

and worth, from which he or his family have been signally benefited, and whose commendation may serve to extend those benefits to others by increasing their confidence. My wife has for many years been a sufferer from severe for which she found little help. She has tried many things that promised well but performed little. Last fall a friend gave her a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It seems surprising what simply one bottle could and did do for her. The attacks of headache decreased in number and were less violent in their intensity, while her general health has been improved. Her appetite has also been better. From our experience with

Nervous Headache

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I have no hesitation in endorsing its merits."

I'M A GONE GOOSE

THIS IS THE CRY OF

COMPETITORS,

But don't stop to bewail the unfortunate goose when we are offering boy's three-piece silk mixed suits for $4.00. We defy competition on these. If you added a handful of dollars to this price you would just about strike the figure ordinarily demanded. They are a positive curiosity of cheapness—a little bonanza for a quick buyer. It takes something like courage to treat prices with such scant ceremony, but we are taking the bull by the horns, and you get the benefit of it. So as to give you a chance to recover from your astonishment, we will add that we are also offering rare bargains all over the house.

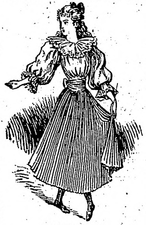
FASHIONS

STYLES FOR GIRLS.

Attractive Models for Evening Frocks, Day Dresses and Wraps.

Evening frocks are now an important consideration in children's dress. A novel kind for a little girl has a white woolen yoke and sleeves, embroidered in color to match the rest of the dress and made in electric blue, orange or some other vivid coloring, in a rich plush falling in unbroken line to the ankles. Another charming little dress is a green plush cut somewhat after the fashion of a student's robe, opening at the sides over an underdress of a light eau de nil silk, gathered across the bust.



A DANCING DRESS.

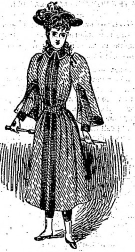
Our first cut shows a pretty dancing dress for a girl of fifteen. It is a graceful model entirely of wool crepon in a pale turquoise hue; the skirt is accordion plaited; the sash, tied in two short bows, is edged with narrow silk embroidery. A full, soft frill of fine white Malines lace gives a finish to throat and sleeves.

The French style of evening dress for young girls is simple white, with a colored stripe or flowered pattern; the skirts made plain and a little trained; the waists round, gathered into wide waistbands of bright color. Sometimes wide sashes are tied at the back in a baby bow and long ends, or else colored satin corselets are worn.

For quite little girls the fashionable party dress is made with the round waist, full skirt, just covering the knees, and full sleeves.

Two or more colors and an equal number of fabrics are sometimes included in a child's dress. Wool costumes in reps, diagonals, bouche and rough materials in general, of the rich colors so suitable for winter, are more stylish than smooth surfaced goods. Perhaps most popular in every grade of material are the Scotch and fancy French plaids. Zouave and other short jackets are in favor, and full, round waists, with fullness confined by a wide belt, figure among the newest models. With these are worn full, straight skirts, most of which are no longer made very long for little children, but reach just below the knee.

In out of door wraps children are admirably catered for. Cloth jackets, with double or triple "coachman's capes" edged with fur, represent stylish and luxurious models. Little fawn coats, with Russian belts and fully gathered waists, are warm and cozy looking, and there are little round cloaks with pointed capes and yokes, sometimes made in red, with hanging sleeves, bordered with beaver, but more usually with no sleeves at all. For a warm, serviceable wrap the long cloak or mantle that entirely covers the dress is much liked, and may be worn hanging full or belted in, as shown in the second cut. This garment for a girl of fourteen is of rough cloth of smoke gray color. The trimming is a coarse 2-inch black braid. The waistband fastens with a handsome silver filigree clasp.



A GIRL'S CLOAK.

Money Was No Object.

The circumstance is worth recording in connection with the refusal of Mr. Andrew Lang and Mr. J. M. Barrie to undertake a lecturing tour in America, that not so long ago repeated overtures were presented to the three most widely known Englishmen of the century, requesting them to address audiences in the principal cities of the United States. It is some years now since Mr. Gladstone definitively relinquished the thought of crossing the Atlantic, and long before the decease of Charles Haddon Spurgeon and of Lord Tennyson—to both of whom requests were at one time somewhat persistent—the invitations had ceased.

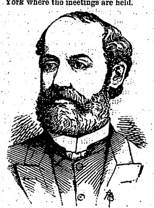
American Ministers in London.

American ministers seem to be getting very popular in London. Dr. Pierson is fully installed at the Metropolitan tabernacle, and now Dr. Pentecost has accepted an invitation to occupy for a time at least the pulpit of the Marylebone Presbyterian church. Dr. Pentecost is a Congregationalist, and it is not improbable that he may consent to be the permanent successor of Dr. Donald Fraser.

THE GAVEL IN USE.

Moderator Bliss Has to Be Busy at the Briggs Trial.

The Briggs heresy case is one of the most notable affairs in the history of Presbyterianism. In fact, according to the New York Tribune, it is considered to be one of the most important ecclesiastical investigations in the last half century. Not since the heresy trial of Albert Barnes, resulting in the split of the Presbyterian church, has so much interest been manifested in religious circles, and this interest is shown in the large attendance in the Scotch church in New York where the meetings are held.



DR. JOHN C. BLISS.

Besides Dr. W. C. Young, the president of Center college, and the moderator of the general assembly, who opened one session with prayer, there have been many well known clergymen present besides those composing the court, and the laymen and lay women have also shown a lively interest in the proceedings. The galleries are filled at each session, but so far there has been little attempt "to speak to the galleries," the members confining their remarks to the members of the court. As it is a judicial case that is under consideration, the moderator insists that there shall be no applause. One afternoon the venerable Charles Butler, the president of the board of directors of the seminary, entered the church and sat in the seat directly behind Dr. Briggs, whose inaugural address was delivered upon his transference from the Hebrew chair to the chair of Biblical theology founded by Mr. Butler.

Dr. John C. Bliss, the moderator of the presbytery, is making a strenuous effort to keep the brethren to their texts, but it is difficult for him, even with his gavel in hand, to suppress a great deal of discussion that would apparently better be left unsaid. If he errs, it is in his earnest desire to give fair play to both sides, and to prevent, if possible, a decision which shall result in an exception being taken or a complaint on appeal being made.

The trial is expected to last for some time.

Anecdote of Sherman's Son.

A detachment of soldiers were told off to take charge of young Tom (now Father) Sherman while crossing the pontoon bridge across the Potomac when the armies of the country were coming to Washington to take part in the great review there in 1865. He was then about eight years old.

One of the men asked him if he expected to grow up as smart a man as his father, the general, and he promptly answered, "No!" "Why?" was the next question. "Well," he replied with the same readiness, "there are plenty other men who have grown up, and why ain't they as smart as my father?"—Philadelphia Times.

During the Sixteenth century all widows were required to dress in the plain robes worn by conventual orders

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars, ($300.00) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jedire Draper and Alice Mariah Draper, his wife, to The Security Trust Company, a corporation bearing date the 4th day of September, A. D., 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of October, A. D. 1890, at 8.40 o'clock a. m., in book 52 of mortgages, on page 447, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lots fifteen and sixteen (15 and 16) of block eighty-two (82) of Kretzschmar's Addition to Red Lake Falls according to the recorded plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

THE LIQUOR HABIT CURED!

HAVE YOU A FRIEND, near or remote, who has fallen a victim to the tyrannical appetite for liquor or morphine. Are you interested in having him released from the bondage—a bondage worse than death? What would you not give in time or money to enable him to break the galling chains of appetite and give him power to stand upon his feet in the dignity of his true manhood? Can this be done? you ask. Yes. Induce him to take the Silver Ash Treatment at Moorhead, Minn., and the diseased condition will be cured, the appetite for drink will be destroyed and he will be a man again. We know it will cure him. The institute is located on Front Street, over Mackall's drug store; H. D. Scott is manager and Dr. D. C. OFFICIAL PAPER, CITY OF CROOKSTON.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar and Fifty Cents, if paid in advance to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum to any address.

WHAT will "Paul Pants" Bodine do with his outfit now, which he recently purchased from McGrew on the strength of assurances that he would get the county printing? Better take it out on your claim in the woods, Paul—and grow up with the country.

THE twenty-sixth annual meeting of the state horticultural society will be held at Minneapolis on January 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1893.

An extensive program has been prepared, and liberal premiums will be given for exhibits of apples, grapes, cranberries, plants in pots, cut flowers, vegetables, honey, etc. Programs may be had by applying to A. W. Latham, Excelsior, Minn.

DESPITE the fact that a great many are complaining of hard times, our subscription list continues to grow encouragingly and we have commenced the new year adding names to our list with encouraging rapidity. Where once in a while some one drops out two or three or four steps in to fill the vacancy, and it is a great pleasure to us to know that our list is growing encouragingly. For this fact we wish to thank our friends again and renew our promise to make the JOURNAL better than ever before. We can do it with your help, friends.

THE holiday issue of that excellent paper, the Breeder's Gazette, was one of the most handsome that has come to our table this season. The Breeder's Gazette, as its name implies, is especially adapted to the requirements of breeders and is the best paper of its kind in the United States, in fact it is an invaluable and on the farm. Many of our readers know what it is, and any who have never seen a copy and would like to do so, can be accomodated by calling at this office. If desired we will secure it for any subscriber to the JOURNAL.

THAT large amount of strong opposition that the St. Paul Globe found existing against Senator Davis just after election, somehow seems to have dwindled away somewhere and it would require a powerful magnifying glass to find much of it floating about the capitol building in St. Paul when the legislature is in session. The Globe, having started to kick up a row in that quarter tried its hand on the speaker-ship question and tried to make out that Lee was tied up soul and body by the monopolists—and succeeded as well as in the case of the senatorship. Poor old Globe.

THE "smelling committee," appointed by the New York stockholders of the Northern Pacific to see why the road did not pay, made a trip over the entire line, and report that the only reason why the road does not pay is because it has been building too many non-paying branch lines—for which the directors are responsible. It is a pity that a road having such broad gauge liberal management, splendid equipments, elegant rolling stock, good train service and accomodating employes as the Northern Pacific has should not be a paying concern.

THE Rev. Dr. Briggs of New York, who has been tried by the New York presbytery for heresy, has been acquitted of the charges preferred against him. He was charged with teaching: first, that the reason is a source of divine authority; 2d, that the church is a source of divine authority; 3d, that the scriptures contained errors of history and fact; 4th, that Moses was not the author of the Pentateuch; 5th, that Isaaiah did not write many of the chapters in the book bearing his name; 6th, that sanctification is progressive after death. Dr. Briggs can now enter the lecture field and amass a fortune.

THE heterogeneous editor of the Dalen—Mr. Bydal—is a candidate for receiver of the local land office, and is said to have good backing. Mr. Bydal's democracy is unquestioned, and the work which he has done for the party entitles him to consideration at the hands of the president. His valiant services for Kelso—the democratic candidate for congress from this district—proves that he is an unflinching, uncompromising, dyed-in-the-wool democrat. The Crookston Times—the democratic organ of the county—did on more than one occasion during the campaign testify to the Dalen's invaluable services in supporting Mr. Kelso. This should be sufficient to secure a land office appointment—or anything else—for that matter.

THE Red River Dalen is said to be in declining health—due probably to an admixture of politics and also that the nickels dropped in the slot haven't worked into the right grooves.

M. E. KIRSCH was re-elected as chairman of the county board. Mike has come pretty near running the board for a number of years and it looks as though he hadn't lost his grip yet.

ROBERT ANDERSON was seated as a county commissioner at the last meeting of the board, despite the protest made by Montague & Bucklen on behalf of Mr. Rhinehart, who is contesting Mr. Anderson's election.

THE legislature was organized on Thursday, the House selecting our candidate for speaker, Wm. E. Lee, and defeating our candidate for engrossing clerk, Bronson Strain. The republicans organized the Senate, and a Crookstonite, Henry Burkhardt, Jr., was given a position—that of assistant file-clerk. Now, if the members are expeditious a short session is all that is needed to transact the business that will come before it.

PARTIES are ungrateful. Look at poor Tveitmoe, of the Tribune. After all the soul-inspiring orations which he made for the people's party last fall, and the amount of brain-work which he put in on the Tribune, he was left out on the printing deal—and the board is composed of four people's party men and one democrat. What excuse can they offer poor Tveitmoe? He button-holed all the members—except Mike—held secret confabs with them, etc., but it didn't work—he didn't have the "stuff." Oh, well, perhaps they will get a job for him—county lecturer, or something of that kind.

WHATEVER else our populist representatives may do they should work for the drainage bill when that document comes before them for consideration, and if they are in earnest in their professions of great regard for the welfare of the people they will do it. This is a matter that politics should cut little figure in, as it is so clearly in the interests of the people of the Red River Valley, in fact of the whole state, that all parties should be directly interested in passing a bill to remedy the evil. Every year this country loses a vast amount of money on account of the lands being too wet to sow at all and this can never be remedied until a system of drainage is adopted. If our representatives are alive to our interests there is no reason why something cannot be done in the matter. What will you do, gentlemen?

WHILE Senator George does not favor in full the pending anti-option bill, he believes it will yet pass. He says "I have no idea that the senators will resort to revolutionary methods. Debate upon the bill will run the usual course. The senator has a disposition to hear the anti-option to its close. I do not know how many of the gentlemen desire to speak on it, and of course cannot approximate a date when it will be put to a vote. Some of the opponents of the bill may have endeavored to delay it until after the holidays in the belief that the appropraition bills would crowd it out, but they can have no such effect. If necessary we will hold night sessions and Friday and Saturday sittings. I believe that the bill will pass. It is true that all of the great dailies of the contrary are on the side of the option men, but it will pass. At any rate it may be set down as a certainty that if the bill is defeated the principles which it embodies will ultimately crystalize into law. The sentiment of the people is behind it. The farming instinct is for it. I would rather trust farmer instinct than editorial genius."

THE "REFORM" BOARD.

THE annual printing deal—or rather steal—has again been gone through in this county. At the meeting of the new county board—the "reform" board—last Tuesday the county printing for the year 1893 was awarded to the Crookston Times, McIntosh Times and East Grand Forks Courier. Of course the Crookston Times—as usual—will get the lion's share of the spoils, as neither one of the other papers have a job printing outfit, and of course McKenzie will have to do the job printing. The other papers can publish the proceedings, and McKenzie can print a few copies of the delinquent tax list for them to put in their papers as supplements.

The JOURNAL put in a bid—which was much lower than the ones accepted—but the "reform" board care nothing for economy. The combination between the three papers named had been made, the commissioners had been "fixed," and the deal went through. The thing was dead easy. McKenzie had his man Kirsch—who is for the Times first, last, and all the time—Lanman had Demers and Duffy had his collar on Commissioner Anderson. The three made a combine and the job was put through.

What a farce! If the board wanted to run the county affairs in an economical manner—which they were elected to do—why would they not let the printing as they would any other work for the county—to the lowest responsible bidder? The commissioners excuse themselves on the ground that by publishing the proceedings in these three papers they would reach more taxpayers and the county can afford to pay more for publishing them. A flimsy excuse. The law requires them to publish the proceedings in only one paper in the county and they overstep their authority when they authorize more than one paper to publish them. And as a matter of fact every enterprising paper in every county publishes the commissioners' proceedings—whether paid for it or not—as a matter of news. The poor printer—who makes his living out of his paper—isn't in it at all in Polk county. It's only the fellows who have money who can get a whack at the public pap. Look at them. There's McKenzie, who has made thousands of dollars out of this county and is likely to make thousands more; then there's Duffy, who runs a mortgage and loan office in East Grand Forks and has made considerable money that way—but don't own a dollar's worth of type and runs the Courier as a mouthpiece and gets it printed in Grand Forks; and Lanman, of McIntosh, also makes his living by loaning money to farmers and runs the Times as a side issue. And these are the kind of people who control the county board. Ye gods! Just think of this "reform" board being controlled by money loaners. It costs a great deal to have a reform, but the people want it and we suppose they ought to have it.

The JOURNAL will have a few more words to say next week in regard to the "reform" board and some other people who are not keeping in the middle of the road.

OUR POSITION.

One of our farmer subscribers at Euclid writes the JOURNAL that, as the JOURNAL does not endorse the wild theories of the people's party, he sometimes thinks that the JOURNAL is not in sympathy with the toiling masses and the farmers in this country, and gives as his reason the fact that the JOURNAL supports the republican party principles. We take occasion to answer his letter publicly in order to call attention to an idea that seems to have sprung up in the minds of very many farmers, and that idea is that a man, or a paper cannot support republican principles and be in sympathy with the toiling masses, nay more that a man cannot be honest and be a republican at the same time. Now that is right where we take square issue with our Euclid friend, (who, by the way is an honest, hardworking American farmer, a man who reads and thinks a great deal, and a man whom we believe would scorn to do a dishonest deed or knowingly do wrong,) because the JOURNAL is just as deeply interested in the welfare of this upper country (and especially Polk county) as is anybody in it. If our friend has followed the teachings of Donnelly and Fish, and has placed implicit confidence in everything they advise he cannot be blamed so much for his erroneous ideas, for those men have tried to instil that idea into the minds of their followers and have urged them to implicitly believe everything that Donnelly and Fish say and not to take or read any republican papers—just as if Messrs. Donnelly and Fish were a sort of little gods whose ideas on all subjects were infallible and worthy of acceptance without questioning. Contrast their position with that of S. M. Owen—a man who is worthy of more confidence in a minute than Donnelly and Fish in all their lives. A man who seeing the evils that exist has honestly tried to remedy them and has not insisted because of that fact that he must be awarded an office, and a man who constantly urges farmers to read up on all sides of a question so that they may be fully posted, while Mr. Donnelly has been constantly before the people asking for an office of some kind or other to reward him for his invaluable services. His very attitude, showing plainly that he is not willing to work for the good of the farmers unless he is rewarded is against the fundamental principles of the old Farmers Alliance, which is that the office must seek the man and not the man the office. In spite of this fact the farmers allowed Donnelly and Fish to down Mr. Owen, a man who never sought an office but was only striving to help them because he thought it right to do so—a man who, time after time declined to accept an office when his friends sought to urge it upon him, whose every effort has been to benefit mankind, while every move that Donnelly and Fish have made has been to further their own individual or political ends. The JOURNAL is not opposed to the farmers alliance as it was organized, believing that it could have been made as powerful an instrument for good as was the old grange. One great drawback to a farmer's life is its isolation—this the alliance sought to overcome together with many other evils, some of which sprang from this isolated life, and others that could be met and overcome by consultation one with another—methods which are as far from the ends and aims of the people's party of today as the east is from the west. The only allusion that the people's party advocate makes to the evils of which the farmers complain is to make the assertion that all of these evils can be cured by legislation—but, mind you he never tells you how that can be accomplished. Your people's party candidate for office assures you that, if you will elect him and his ticket your sorrows will all end; that he will remedy all of these evils and in nine cases out of ten he has no definite idea how he would go to work to do so if he wanted to—and he seldom has any other interest in the matter than his own election. The JOURNAL has watched this matter very closely all through this agitation and has faithfully sounded notes of warning even at the risk of losing popularity with some farmers who had become so impregnated with Donnellyism as to be unable to see any salvation for the country except such as would be afforded by the people's party. Had we been dishonest, or demagogic, we would not have taken such risks but we have the firm conviction that our advice to farmers not to allow the alliance to be dragged into politics is right and events so far have all proved the correctness of our position. Not only is the people's party already in the throes of dissolution but the alliance itself is wrecked, and will cut no figure in the further progress of the country. The JOURNAL will continue in the future, as it has ever striven in the past to faithfully work for the best interests of Polk county and the Red River Valley and will advocate no measures that are opposed to those interests wherever they may crop out.

Who Supports Them!

Looking up the number of saloons and license required to run them, last week our reporter found that there are 85 saloons in Polk county, 55 of which pay a license of $500 each annually—a total of 27,500, and the balance $25 each, $755, or a grand total of $28,250 per annum just for the privilege of doing business for one year. Add to that the expense of clerk hire, rents, &c., and the total cost of running these saloons is something appalling and gives something of a hint of the enormous amount of money required to make the business profitable, to say nothing of the costs incurred by that traffic. While we are grumbling about high taxes and hard times does not this item suggest one source of taxation that is wholly superfluous? That could just as well be dispensed with?

Asked for Continuance.

CHEYENNE, Wy., Jan. 3.—A motion for continuance to the May term was filed in the district court on behalf of the regulators who raided into Johnson county last spring and killed two alleged cattle thieves. The motion for postponement was argued by Judge Ballard, of Denver, for the state and Walter R. Stoll for the prisoners. A decision will be made at 9 o'clock in the morning. Twenty-three of the forty-four defendants were in court.

It is reported that our government is seeking to have the concession from Colombia for the Panama canal diverted to the United States.

A Chicago detective says that Tascott did not kill Mr. Snell, and that the real murderers are in Chicago and furnishing Tascott money to keep away.

Theodore Winters has received and accepted an offer of $45,000 for a suckling colt, a full brother to Yo Tambien, the transfer to take place in the colt's yearling form. This is the largest price ever paid for a yearling.

Looking glasses of polished bronze or silver were a necessary adjunct to the toilet in ancient as well as modern times.

For pains in the chest there is nothing better than a flannel cloth saturated with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It will produce a counter irritation without blistering, and is not so disagreeable as mustard; in fact is much superior to any plaster on account of its pain-relieving qualities. If used in time will prevent pneumonia. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

"For the past two or three years I have been subject to cramping pains in the stomach," says Mr. W. A. Baldwin, a hardware merchant of Boonville, Dallas Co., Iowa. "I have tried a number of different remedies; the best one being Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea remedy. One or two doses of it always cures me." Sold by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

DEMOCRATS GO OUT

TROUBLE OCCURS AT THE OPENING OF THE MONTANA LEGISLATURE.

Democrats Withdraw from the House, Leaving It Without a Quorum—A Dual Body the Probable Result of the Fight Between the Parties.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 3.—Monday was the date for the meeting of the Montana legislature. As predicted in these dispatches there was trouble in the organization of the house. Under the law the state auditor is the officer who is required to call the roll of the house. Before proceeding he announced that, while Hamilton, Democrat, of Choteau, had a regular certificate of election, he was aware of the existence of a writ of mandate issued by the supreme court which adjudged Hamilton's certificate as false. As Leech, who would be benefitted by the supreme court's decision, had not presented to him any evidence of his election, he said that he had determined to of Hamilton and Leech from the roll. When the members were sworn Hamilton advanced to the bar to take the oath with his certificate in his hand, but the auditor would not administer it and threatened to call in the United States marshal to remove him. The Democrats sprang to their feet and warned the auditor to be careful, and for a moment a conflict was imminent, but Hamilton took his seat and the other members were sworn in. With Hamilton eliminated and Davidson, a Democratic member, on the sick list, the house stood 25 Democrats, 25 Republicans and 3 Populists. Two of the Populists went over to the Republicans and one to the Democrats, giving the latter 26 votes and the former 27.

Democrats Withdraw.

The statute provides that after the auditor calls the roll his duties are at an end. However, he kept the chair and called on the house for nominations for temporary officers. The statute provides that the oldest member in the service shall do this. The Democrats and the one Populist, when they realized that Auditor Cook was carrying out what they conceived to be a well-concocted plan, got up and left the twenty-seven Republicans behind. As there are fifty-five members of the house, this left the Republicans but they nevertheless elected Populist Matthews temporary speaker, a temporary clerk and sergeant-at-arms and then adjourned till 5 p. m. The Republican's hope by that time to have Leech, Hamilton's opponent, in town with a certificate issued by the county clerk of Choteau county before the recanvass there is completed.

The Democratic members of the house have been in caucus all the afternoon, but what they have concluded to do is not known. It is probable they will have Hamilton sworn in by a justice of the peace, and with Davidson and one Populist organize a house of twenty-eight members, just a majority. The Democratic senators announce that they stand ready to recognize such a body.

REPUBLICANS LOSE.

A Decision Rendered Which Will Give Wyoming a Democratic Senator.

CHEYENNE, Jan. 2.—The supreme court has decided the Carbon county cases, holding that while there were technical defects in the certificates of nomination, still they were not of such a vital nature as to invalidate the election. A peremptory mandate was issued to the state canvassing board compelling it to count the Carbon county returns, thus giving the certificates of election to the Democrats in the house. While the Republicans still have one majority on joint ballot the house will never seat this one, because his certificate was secured through a clerical error. It is now conceded that the Democrats and Populists will elect the next United States senator.

CAUCUS NOMINEE.

William E. Lee Named for Speaker of the Minnesota House.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 3.—The Republican members of the house met in caucus last evening and named William E. Lee, of Todd county, for speaker and Fred A. Johnson, of Ramsey, for chief clerk. These nominations will be indorsed by the full house at its opening session. Some of the followers of Allen J. Greer refused to go into caucus, but they are so few that they will cut but little figure in the election. Interviews with both senators and representatives indicate that Senator Davis will be easily renominated. Sixty-nine representatives and twenty-six senators declare that they will vote for Davis.

The Republican senators were in caucus until nearly midnight, and when they adjourned it was learned that they had engineered a surprise on the Democrats. They had succeeded in getting Senators Wood, Mott and Dedon, Populists, to caucus with them, and thus secured twenty-eight men, just a majority. Edward H. Folsom, of Taylors Falls, was nominated for secretary, J. G. Fowler, of Mankato, for first assistant and Eugene E. Benn, of St. Peter, for sergeant-at-arms.

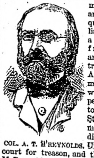
Wisconsin Officers Inaugurated.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 3.—The Democratic state officers were inaugurated at noon without demonstration. The senatorial contest grows warmer. Knight Mitchell and Bragg about equally divide the 82 Democratic votes, and no one is at all likely to have 42, or a majority, in the Democratic caucus at the outset or even very soon thereafter. The legislature convenes Jan. 11, but the latter part of this week will witness the battle in full blast here.

HE WAS A SOLDIER BOLD.

The Military, Public and Private Careers of a Brilliant Irishman.

Colonel Andrew T. McReynolds, of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave a quiet reception on Christmas to a few old friends in honor of his eighty-fourth birthday. He was born in Ireland and came to America at the age of twenty-two, locating first at Pittsburg. He was a member of the once famous Duquesne Grays, and as an ensign marched with General Scott to suppress the nullification troubles in South Carolina. Two years later he removed to Detroit, studied law, was admitted to the bar, and by his eloquence and brilliancy soon won a place in the front ranks among the Detroit attorneys. Among the famous cases in which he appeared was as attorney for King Strang, the Mormon leader indicted in the United States court for treason, and through Colonel McReynolds' efforts acquitted. He took an early and active interest in politics. In 1837 he was elected an alderman in Detroit, and two years later was one of the delegates to the national convention in Harrisburg which nominated William Henry Harrison, grandfather of the present occupant of the White House, and he is probably the only survivor of that convention, of which Horace Greeley and Historian Bancroft were also members. When the Toledo war broke out—a dispute between Michigan and Ohio over boundary lines—McReynolds marched to the seat of war as a major, and then marched home again, as did the belligerents on both sides, without firing a gun.



COL. A. T. M'REYNOLDS.

In 1847 he was elected to the state legislature as a senator to represent Detroit, and with ex-Governor Alpheus Felch shares the honor of being the oldest living member of that body. While still a member of the legislature the Mexican war opened. He resigned his office, and receiving a commission from President Polk went to Mexico as a captain in the Third dragoons. He won promotion by gallant service and returned to Detroit with an arm shattered by a musket ball. He was living in Grand Rapids, Mich., when the late war broke out, and was among the first to respond to the call for troops. He was given a commission as colonel, raised the first volunteer cavalry regiment of the war in New York city and served throughout the contest, receiving honorable mention for services at Gettysburg. After peace had been declared he returned to Michigan. He continued in active practice of his profession up to his seventy-fifth year and then retired. Colonel McReynolds has been a member of the Masonic fraternity for sixty-three years. He has been commander of the Michigan department G. A. R., delegate to the national encampment, and is now president of the National Mexican Veterans' union. His wife, a lineal descendant of Elder William Brewster, one of the original Pilgrim Fathers, is still by his side, and their married life covers more than sixty years.

Caused by Change of Fare.

The "befoh de wah" colored man was noted for the brilliant whiteness of his teeth, a quality which is not inherited by his descendants of the present day. Nowadays the teeth of the negroes do not seem to be nearly so good as those of his brother. The reason is to be found in the change of food. The slaves had plenty to eat, but the food given them was of the simplest kind. Pork, meal, potatoes and such vegetables as they raised themselves formed their bill of fare. Now they eat all sorts of indigestible stuff, outdoing the white people in this direction, showing a particular fondness for candies and sweetmeats. The consequence is that in a single generation the ivory teeth of the slave have given place to the decayed fangs of the freedman.

More Railways for Turkey.

The sultan of Turkey has made a vigorous break through the trammels of national tradition and has given the order that Turkey shall take a place in the march of civilization. He has granted concessions for the construction of long railways which will open up his territory to the east, the north and the south, all having their termini at Constantinople. One road is to run to Damascus, and another, the Tigris and Euphrates railway, to the Persian gulf. The concessions have been granted to German and Belgian firms, English firms being entirely left out.

Costa Rica's Swedish Colony.

The government of Costa Rica has entered into a contract with Mr. Charles Berggren for the establishment of a Swedish colony in the agricultural districts of the republic. The contractor has bound himself to bring 100 colonists, each with a capital of at least $600, to whom the government will convey the title in fee simple of 500 hectares of ground as soon as the land has been cultivated. All personal effects of the colonists will be admitted free of duty.

The Cuban Sugar Export.

During the ten months from Dec. 1, 1891, to Sept. 30, 1892, 51,408 tons of sugar were exported from the island of Cuba to Europe, while during the same period 360,400 tons were shipped to the United States. There were 42,911 tons of sugar on hand in the island on Sept. 30 last. The sugar crop of 1892 is placed at 965,519 tons, as compared with 815,516 tons in 1891, 645,894 tons in 1890 and 526,439 tons in 1889.

Cost of Coal.

A careful estimate recently made places the total American and English coal consumed in the republic of Mexico at 24,000 tons a month. The price amounts to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 a year.

PROSPEROUS YEAR.

BUSINESS LARGEST EVER KNOWN IN THE UNITED STATES.

Extraordinary Progress Made in Various Manufacturing Industries—Failures for the Year Less in Number and Losses Than Since 1886.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

The most prosperous year ever known in the United States has closed, with strongly favorable indications for the future. From nearly all points comes the report that the holiday trade has been the largest ever known. For the year the volume is about 10 per cent. larger than last year and the largest ever known. Railroad earnings in December show an increase of about 3 per cent. over last year, and for the year an increase of about 5.5 per cent. Foreign trade has been smaller than last year in volume of exports at New York, $7,800,000 in value for the past four weeks, and at cotton ports about $10,000,000 less, but imports at New York have been about $7,000,000 larger than last year, the largest total of imports ever known in any year. The unprecedented purchases for consumption have resulted in 1892 from so that manufactures have made extraordinary progress. The year closes with wool, cotton and silk machinery all employed and stocks on hand much lighter than usual, while the trade for the coming season already exceeds the capacity of many mills. The output of dry goods is extraordinary, while cotton goods are strong with a tendency to higher prices. Sales of wool at the chief markets have been 309,000,000 pounds against 266,000,000 last year, and foreign imports have been the largest ever known. Money disturbance has passed for the present and enormous disbursements for interest and dividends on Jan. 1 are likely to make the markets easier for the time, but it is believed that more exports of gold may follow the New Year's settlements.

FAILURES FOR 1892.

They Are Less in Number Than in Any Year Since 1886.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The number of failures occurring in the United States in the year 1892 as reported by R. G. Dun & Co. is 10,344, being a less number than in any year since 1886, and showing a difference in favor of the present year, as compared with 1891, of 2,029. The indebtedness of the failures for the past year also shows a marked decrease, being $114,000,000 in 1892, as against $189,000,000 in 1891, and a nearly similar amount in 1890. The largely augmented number of traders and the enormous increase in transactions in the year render these figures very significant. Only one in every 113 traders in the United States succumbed in 1892, as against one in every 93 in 1891 and one in every 102 in 1890. The average liabilities of the failures in the last year was $11,000, being the lowest average reported since 1878.

HAD A BAD DAY.

Mr. Blaine's Physician Says His Patient Is Slightly Worse.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—"Mr. Blaine is not as well as he was Sunday," said Dr. Johnson during the evening. "He has not, however, suffered a relapse, such as that which occurred fifteen days ago. Mr. Blaine simply is not as well as he was Sunday. Mr. Blaine has his good and his bad days like most other invalids. There is nothing in his present condition to excite alarm."

There was a rumor on the street that Mr. Blaine had suffered a relapse, but later intelligence has a more reassuring effect and it is not thought anything seirous threatens him for the present.

To Train Jim Hall.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—George Kline, of Beloit, Wis., the well known trainer, passed through Chicago Monday on his way to New York to superintend Jim Hall's training for his fight with Fitzsimmons, in New Orleans, March 8. According to Kline, Hall will train near New York city. Ten days before the fight he will leave for New Orleans. Kline is confident he will train a winner.

Michigan Senatorial Fight.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 3.—Several of the candidates for United States senator have arrived here and established their headquarters. Foremost among them are Senator Stockbridge, who hopes to succeed himself, and ex-Governor Cyrus W. Luce. Both candidates are confident of winning the fight, but if some of the Republicans bolt the caucus one of the many dark horses will, it is thought, stand a show for the place.

Insures White's Election.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 3.—A sensation has been caused by the withdrawal of W. W. Fell, Democrat, from the senatorial contest. He and his chief supporters declare in favor of Stephen M. White, the only other Democrat in the field. This practically insures the election of White to succeed Charles N. Felton, Republican.

City Records Being Eaten Up.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The city records, documents worth millions of dollars, are in constant danger of destruction by fire and mice because the authorities have not appropriated more to insure their proper protection. Mayor Gilroy is responsible for this statement.

Didn't Toast the Queen.

LIMERICK, Jan. 3.—The mayor of the city gave a banquet during the evening to the Parnellite and anti-Parnellite priests. The principal toast of the evening was "Ireland as a Nation." All the customary toasts to the queen, etc., were omitted.

INSTINCT IN ANIMALS.

The Influence Which Urges Birds to Change Their Home with the Seasons.

To the older philosophers instinct was a far more wonderful thing than it appears now. They asserted that all the actions of the lower animals were performed through instinct, and explained that they possessed this faculty in lieu of intelligence, which was the peculiar attribute of man. This was, however, soon exploded by the demonstration of the possession of intelligence among animals and of instinct by man. Indeed the later philosophers have come to believe that almost all the actions of man are influenced if not controlled by instinct alone.

The tendency to migration of certain species of animals is plainly referable to this hereditary influence. Originally, no doubt, migration occurred because food was more easily found in one locality than in another. The hereditary memory, so to speak, pointed out the place where more food was to be obtained with less exertion. Gradually other surroundings suggested themselves as agreeable to the embryo mind, and and these, repeated through many generations, created that unthinking tendency toward a particular place or climate regardless of its original fitness.

Almost all our ideas are gained from association, and it is fair to imagine that the constant and repeated association of a particular locality, with a pleasurable sensation—the satiation of hunger, for example—would soon identify the sensation with the place. Then would be evolved the sentiment of home, a sentiment which we feel only more keenly than the lower animals because it is associated not only with the place where there is something to eat, but because of other pleasurable sensations associated with it, as they are as constantly found in the same locality.

It is a mistake to regard the migratory instincts of animals as unerring. Every woodsman has observed how a particular species of bird will apparently desert a certain locality for another for one or more seasons. Occasionally this may result from choice, but it seems altogether more probable that it is from some mistake on the part of the birds themselves. Their generally accurate course has been deflected by some circumstance, and they have made their homes elsewhere. In the case of stragglers this is particularly marked. They rarely succeed in rejoining the main body to which they originally belonged, and are forced to be content with whatever suitable place may be found.

Migratory animals and birds are almost always gregarious—that is, they live and especially they travel in compact flocks or herds. They do this for one reason only—that the wisdom of a number is greater than that of any one. Any error in the route would be detected by one or another and thence communicated to the whole flock. Once in a while they are all mistaken, and then some incoming steamer serves as a point of rest for the tired little wings, or some hitherto unknown country becomes the new home of the home seekers.

But there is much that is very wonderful and awe inspiring in the instinct that guides them. If indeed it is merely the reflex of the memory of long departed ancestors—if the thoughts as well as the sins of the father descend to remote generations, what tendencies and inclinations are we transmitting to our children which may in later generations develop to good or evil? Are we steering a straight course, like the old gray goose?—Baltimore Sun.

Tidal Waves of Humanity.

The increase or decrease of population by natural or artificial causes and the distribution of mankind over different parts of the globe are the dominant factors of the history and condition of the human race. The rise and fall of nations and of empires, the progress or decline of civilization and the domination of man over the uncultivated parts of the earth are all due to the waves of population which are driven by various causes to new scenes of existence and new seats of power.

These tidal movements of humanity have occurred over and over again at many periods of the world's history, but with great irregularity. There have been times when the increase of population has been slow and its habits sedentary. There have been times when the whole human race seems to have been in motion, driven by some mysterious impulse to seek new lands to cultivate and new homes.—Edinburgh Review.

Another Function of Fishes' Ears.

Sharks have lately been affording contributions to science. The biologists have been vivisecting them for the purpose of finding out about the functions of the ear, which in fishes is made to some extent on the same pattern as in man. The fact has been known for some time that the ear is not merely an organ of hearing. It has to do with the sense of equilibrium. Light has been thrown on this matter by removing portions of the auditory apparatus of sharks, which are thus rendered unable to maintain their balance in the water. The part on which this faculty seems to depend is the "labyrinth," and the same effect is produced by cutting the nerves communicating with it.—Washington Cor. Boston Transcript.

A Costly Prayer Book.

Queen Elizabeth used to carry about with her suspended by a chain of pure gold, a book called "The Golden Manual of Prayer," a dainty volume of 300 pages, bound in "hammered virgin gold." One side of this costly volume gave a representation of "The Judgment of Solomon," the other the "Brazen Serpent on the Cross in the Desert."—St. Louis Republic.

The First British Steamboat.

The first steamboat in Great Britain was the Comet, forty feet long, built in in 1812 for the navigation of the Clyde; but before this time Fulton and Livingston had begun to build steamers at Pittsburg.—Syracuse Journal.

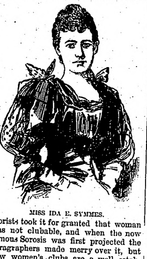
CLUB LIFE OF TODAY.

THIS IS THE AGE OF CLUBS, AND SOME OF THEM ARE QUEER.

The Argonaut, Sea Serpent, Shaw-wa-nos-so-way, Storm King, Titans and Triple Alliance—The Thirteen and the Eccentric Antisuperstition Clubs and Many Others.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

Cain and his club have furnished the jokers with matter for many a pun, and in the old comic almanacs the wife who feared her fate would be that of Abel because her husband was too devoted to his club was a familiar figure. From Aristophanes to Artemus Ward the humorists took it for granted that woman was not clubable, and when the now famous Sorosis was first projected the paragraphers made merry over it, but now women's clubs are a well established institution.

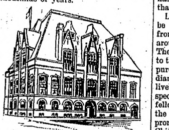


MISS IDA E. SYMMES.

The Manhattan, Union, Knickerbocker and a few other New York clubs are known of all readers, and the Union league on one side and the famous Iroquois club of Chicago on the other are powers in politics. In fact, this is the clubbing age. So numerous are clubs that the ordinary nomenclature is exhausted, and when a new one is organized the choice of a title is recognized as the task of the most learned and versatile member. There is, for instance, the Whitechapel club of Chicago, whose name suggests the ghastly, and whose performances, if reports lie not, are worthy of its name.

There is also the Argonaut club of Chicago, with its quarters on a boat that was never launched. In New York city, in addition to those well known, are the Catholic, the University, the Tenderloin, the Vaudeville, the Hoot, the Thirteen and the Clover clubs, the Colonial, the Eccentric, the Federal, the Down Town, the Clergy, the Snowshoe, the Triple Alliance and many others of a social or literary nature, besides a long array of those composed of the foreign born, each bearing a name designating the nation.

The Thirteen club has for its avowed object "to combat injurious superstitions." The Eccentric is much the same, and membership is limited by the merciless restrictions, "The abolition of myth and substitution therefor of science and reason, the possession of ideas and original thought, and the faculty of expressing the same orally or in writing in prose or verse." Evidently such a club is to be very select, and has entered on a work which bids fair to last it some thousands of years.



LAKESIDE CLUBHOUSE.

The Holland society, as its name implies, collects documents and data on the settlement of New Netherlands, traces the connection between the old families and their kinsmen in Holland, and generally cultivates a sentiment of reverence for the Dutch ancestors of the Knickerbockers. It is of course strong among the Four Hundred, and has done a great and valuable work for local history. The Salmagundi is an old and famous organization of artists. The Triple Alliance, oddly enough, has nothing to do with Germany, Austria and Italy, or with American politics. It is simply a union of dealers in carpets, furniture and upholstery.

The objects of the Players, Press, Mineralogical, Turtle, Chess, Authors, Glee, Jockey, Driving, Riding, Fencing, Jersey Cattle and Merchants' clubs are shown by their names, and there are separate clubs devoted to the raising and improving the breeds of fox terriers, spaniels, mastiffs and collies, aside from the innumerable kennel clubs. The Cremation club wants mankind to dispose of the dead by burning, and its members agree to be thus disposed of after death. The Titans consist of "first class business men and good fellows," not one of whom is under six feet high.

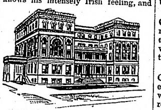
The Storm King club takes its name from its summer home on Storm King mountain, and finds its amusement in collecting historical relics of the Hudson valley and vicinity of New York generally. And in all the New World there is no richer field. The mammoth and his contemporaries first, and then in succession the mound builder, Indian, Dutchman, colonial enterpriser and Revolutionary patriot have literally sown the region with rich remains. At present the club is industriously exploring some ancient mounds and marking the graves of the last Indians to die in the valley.

The Sea Serpent club is composed of ship news reporters of the New York dailies, and its latest social function was a banquet given to Mr. Emil Boas, long the agent of the Hamburg-American Packet company. He is but thirty-eight years old, but has been in the company's employ twenty years and is a noted linguist, speaking the principal European tongues with fluency and having a smattering of others, including the Chinese. Somewhat akin to the Sea Serpents are the Argonauts of Chicago, though the latter consist largely of railroad men. Two years ago this club was organized and obtained possession of a landing place at the end of the Illinois Central railway's pier.

Far out in the lake, at the end of the long wharf, stands their peculiar clubhouse called the Argo. It is a clubhouse in a ship which could be launched, but probably never will be. As the club is the Argonaut and the clubhouse the Argo, so the membership is limited to fifty-one, the number assigned by Greek mythology to the famous crew which made the often sung voyage in search of the golden fleece. Since June 1, 1891, the Argo has stood at the pier's end looking as if just ready to be launched—a two storied structure with a roomy deck, where the Chicago Argonauts enjoy themselves and keep cool in the hottest weather.

No other club in Chicago will be so handsomely housed as the Lakeside, which was organized in 1884 and now has 250 members, when its new place is finished. It stands at the southwest corner of Grand boulevard and Forty-second street and will have five high stories and an apex roof, the whole making it nearly the equivalent of an ordinary ten story structure. The whole boulevard front will be occupied by its handsome parlors, and it will have a banqueting hall 54 by 92 feet, and an assembly hall 70 by 121 feet exclusive of the large stage, besides many other rooms for club use. The structure will be chiefly of buff Bedford stone and will rank among the finest buildings in Chicago.

Still another Chicago institution worthy of note is the Gaelic club, composed originally of Irishmen, but now containing Scotchmen also, and all devoted to the study and culture of the Gaelic language and literature. This club owes its origin to the election of Hon. John F. Finerty to congress. All the world knows his intensely Irish feeling, and when compelled to leave his paper, The Citizen, and go to Washington he put the scholarly T. O'Neill Russell, of New York, in charge. Mr. Russell is an enthusiast on the Gaelic, which he speaks and reads with musical fluency, and soon got other Irishmen interested, and so the club was formed, with Mr. Russell president and Maurice Crean secretary.

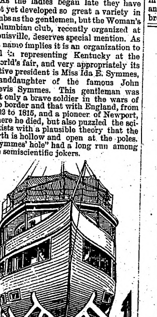


SHAW-WA-NOS-SO-WAY CLUBHOUSE.

With a class of 180 intelligent Irishmen and Scotchmen such rapid progress was made in the study that in a few months Gaelic was the vernacular of the club. They declare with one voice that it is a language very easily acquired, though it certainly does not look it in print. Two ladies of the class, teachers in the Chicago high schools, testify that in eight months they learned it sufficiently to translate English into Gaelic at sight. No club in the country has a more enthusiastic membership than the Gaelic.

Last on this list of Chicago clubs must be the Shaw-wa-nos-so-way, so named from the Indians who once ranged around Lake Shawano in Wisconsin. The name has no particular bearing as to the nature of the club, as it is almost purely a social affair, and will study Indian antiquities only when it has no livelier amusement. It will make a specialty of hunting up good clubable fellows from other cities who may visit the World's fair, especially members of prominent clubs, and will try to make Chicago like home to them.

As the ladies began late they have not yet developed so great a variety in clubs as the gentlemen, but the Woman's Columbian club, recently organized at Louisville, deserves special mention. As its name implies it is an organization to aid in representing Kentucky at the World's fair, and very appropriately its active president is Miss Ida E. Symmes, granddaughter of the famous John Clevis Symmes. This gentleman was not only a brave soldier in the wars of the border and that with England, from 1802 to 1815, and a pioneer of Newport, where he died, but also puzzled the scientists with a plausible theory that the earth is hollow and open at the poles. "Symmes' hole" had a long run among the semiscientific jokers.



EXTERIOR OF ARGO CLUBHOUSE.

The honorary president is Mrs. J. Lawrence Smith, and among the members are Mrs. Henry Watterson, Mrs. Basil Duke, Mrs. John B. Castleman, Mrs. Patty Semple and others bearing names long honored in Kentucky.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The First National Bank of Appleton has been authorized to commence business with a capital of $50,000.

The Bank of Fairfax closed its doors last week. Small depositors lose about $10,000 and the county of Renville about $3,000.

Miss Mary Mahoney, of Mankato, was killed near Madelia last week in a runaway, while returning to a school she was teaching.

Christopher Olson, who died at Albert Lea last week, was one of the oldest settlers in Freeborn county, having went there in 1856, or thirty-six years ago.

Frank Giefer, on trial at Mankato for murder in the first degree, has been found guilty. His attorneys will attempt to save his neck by asking for a new trial.

The Northern Granite company shipped from their granite quarry at Sauk Rapids last week by the Northern Pacific a train of twenty-seven cars of stone for St. Louis.

Conductor Nickey and Engineer Mullaney, who were held responsible by the coroner's jury for the recent railroad accident at Nelson, have been arrested, charged with manslaughter.

J. H. Todd, cashier of the St. Paul and Duluth depot at West Duluth, has left for parts unknown, and auditors are now going over his accounts, which are said to show a shortage of $2,000.

Joseph Bobleter, state treasurer, has filed his official bond of $400,000 with William R. Merriam, Frank A. Seymour, Edward M. Saunders, Robert A. Smith and William Dawson as sureties.

John Huggett, residing near Warren, has struck a vein of natural gas, which he is using for fuel in his home. It is believed that extensive natural gas fields underlie Marshall and Kittson counties.

Annie Murphy, the noted forger, who on Oct. 27 succeeded in swindling the two national banks of St. Cloud of $1,500 and was afterwards captured in Alabama, has been brought to St. Cloud to stand trial.

Mrs. S. C. Merrell, an artist of Lake City, was assaulted by an unknown man, while returning home the other evening. The city has offered a reward of $250 for the arrest and conviction of the ruffian.

The charter of the Duluth, St. Cloud, Mankato and Austin railroad has expired, and it is not likely any effort will be made to revive it. Work on the road never advanced further than the preliminary surveys.

It is estimated that 22,536 turkeys were given as Christmas presents to their employes by Minneapolis manufacturing firms. The Pillsburys head the list with 740, and the Northwestern Milling company stands second with 400.

Great Northern surveyors are at work between Turtle Lake and Park Rapids. Whether the object of the company in laying out the line is for the purpose of building a branch or merely to get an accurate description of the country cannot be learned.

The St. Paul Clay Car Seal company, with a capital of $25,000, will begin operations at South St. Paul about Jan. 12. This new enterprise is for the purpose of manufacturing a patent car seal considered by many railroad men superior to any now in use.

O. S. Belden, of Fair Haven, under arrest for grand larceny, was bound over to the grand jury in $300 bail. Belden is charged with procuring boys in the neighborhood to steal goods from other merchants, which goods he bought from the boys for little or nothing in trade.

A telegram has been received from Port Townsend, Wash., announcing that Charles E. Ames, son of Dr. A. A. Ames, of Minneapolis, while engaged in repairing the government telegraph line between Port Angels and Cape Flattery, in Washington, became stiff from cold and fell from a pole forty feet high, breaking his neck.

THE GOLDEN CAVES.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS, "M. QUAD."

COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, 1892

The gun was fished out of his wagon and brought forward. It was the old fashioned buffalo rifle, carrying a bullet like a cavalry carbine, and its owner had brought along a few charges for it. It had scarcely been loaded when the renegade stepped out from the crowd with a white flag and advanced to within pistol shot of the fort. Then he halted and sung out:

"Boys, you have made a brave defense, but it's no use in trying to hold out agin us. Thar's over two hundred of us yere yet, as you kin see by countin up, and you don't show sense by holdin out."

"What do you want of us?" demanded the captain.

"Waal, when I summoned ye the other day all we wanted was fur ye to turn back. Ye refused to, and ye've killed a couple of warriors and wounded a lot more. We can't let ye off quite so easy now."

"What are your terms?"

"Now ye begin to talk sense. If ye want to walk out and leave the wagins and horses fur us I'll give ye my word ye shall go in peace. That's lettin ye off powerful easy, being as the reds are mad all the way through."

"Shan't we also leave our guns and revolvers behind?" asked the captain in sarcasm.

"As to that," replied the renegade, taking him seriously, "it might be a good ijee. It would show yer faith in us."

"You captured one of my men over the ridge an hour ago."

"We did. That is, we didn't capture him, but axed him to stop with us for a visit. He's injoyin hisself as hearty as you please."

"Let him count your numbers and come in and give us the figures. If you are as strong as you say we may decide to surrender."

"We—we couldn't do that, ye know. That's raything agin the rules of war. However, the minit ye march out we'll set him free to jine ye."

"It's no use!" called the captain in decided tones. "We won't talk surrender until the man comes in."

The renegade returned to his friends and held a brief council, after which he came forward to say:

"Boys, I can't hold 'em in much longer—no, I can't. Ye must cum to terms or take the consequences."

"Won't you release the man?"

"We can't. It would only make one more to fight us."

"Then go back to your friends and tell them we'll shoot down every horse, burn every wagon and shoot each other before we surrender!"

There was a general howl of rage among the Indians when this news was communicated, but no movement to attack. A water hole in the bed of one of the gullies furnished them and their ponies with a limited supply of the liquid, and they knew that the beleaguered white men could not obtain a drop. It was only a question of time when the climax would come. The redskins were therefore content to preserve an irregular circle around the fort and wait.

Noon came.

Of a sudden each suffering horse pricked up his ears, held his head high and gazed intently toward the east.

"The soldiers!" whispered a dozen men.

"No—rain!" replied the captain, as he pointed to the sky.

All looked to see a black cloud looming up over the ridge a mile away, and in a moment there was a flash of lightning and a heavy peal of thunder.

"Rain—rain—rain!" shouted the men as they rushed here and there like so many boys, but under the orders of the cool headed captain the greater part of them were soon at work to profit by the heaven sent shower.

Everything which would catch or retain water was spread out on the ground, while the canvas covers of the wagons were arranged in folds and pouches. They were scarcely ready when the storm broke. The rain poured down copiously for half an hour, and by that time all suffering had ended, and the supply on hand was enough for three days.

"Let us give three cheers," cried one of the more enthusiastic men as the storm passed away and the sun showed its face again.

"Hark!" whispered the captain. "The gal is giving thanks to God. She is right. We should pray instead of cheer!"

The downpour of rain had shattered the plans of the redskins. They could no longer be held to the siege, knowing that the climax was indefinitely postponed, nor could the bombastic talk of the chiefs bring them up to another assault. They were ready to go, but before moving off they had one last card to play. Better for the renegade he had not meddled with it.

Huntley, the man who had been taken prisoner, was now brought forward, the white man holding one arm and a stalwart warrior the other. When within speaking distance he said:

"Captain, they have got me, and they declare that if you don't surrender they'll burn me alive!"

"We are sorry for you, Jim!" replied the captain, "but you know what surrender would mean. They would butcher every man of us inside of ten minutes."

"But think of me," wailed the man in sorrowful tones. "Think of the tortures they will inflict before they kill me!"

"It's bad, Jim—terrible bad! I'd give an arm to have you inside with us this minute."

"But I can't die—oh, I can't die!" shrieked the man.

The captain seemed to be thinking, and the prisoner knelt down, clasped his hands and wailed out:

"Captain, for the love of God, do something for me! Come out here and talk it over and make them an offer. They'll let you come and go safely."

"It is only a trap for you!" shouted half a dozen voices at the captain.

"Aye, lads, I know it, but I'd take almost any risk for poor Jim. He's nigh scart to death, and seeing what's in store for him, we can't blame him.

Then raising his voice he called to Huntley:

"Keep up bravely, Jim. We can't help you just now, but the time may come within an hour. Don't give up yet."

Few white men have been known to fire on a flag of truce, no matter how treacherous the enemy who bore it. Huntley had been brought forward under one, and it was respected. Had one of the trainmen gone out with a flag he would have been shot down or made prisoner, and the others ridiculed for their confidence.

When the three had returned to the lines the captain asked for Peter's heavy rifle. I had been carefully loaded for the occasion, and the captain rested it across the rocks and waited a minute until the renegade came into view. Every man in the inclosure held his breath and watched for the result of the shot. It was a minute before the sights covered the renegade, but when the rifle cracked he was seen to throw up his arms and fall heavily to the earth.

There was a howl from the Indians and a cheer from the fort, but both were drowned in a volley of musketry, a chorus of yells and the thunder of horses' feet. The relief party had arrived.

"Out of this, boys, and go for 'em!" shouted the captain as he caught sight of a large body of cavalry charging down the slope.

It was quick work. The Indians had been caught napping, and their only idea was to get away. In a quarter of an hour the last one of them had been chased out of sight, and those who counted up the corpses counted thirty-eight. In that struggle to wipe out the wagon train the Indians lost, as was afterward confessed, a total of ninety-five men, and their sole offset was one prisoner.

Joe had found the party in a grove fifteen miles from the forks. They had come on as the nature of the ground would permit, dreading that they might be too late, and their arrival had at last set the little band free. There was cheering and shouting and wild enthusiasm as the battle ended and the men rushed to shake each other's hands.

Bess had hidden herself in the wagon to give thanks to God and indulge in a little cry when some one sprang upon the seat and held out his hand. The figure was dressed as an Indian, and she screamed in terror.

"Not a redskin, but Joe!" laughed a voice she was longing to hear.

"And you did this for—for us?" she stammered as she moved toward him.

"For—for us, but more particularly for you," he replied as he seized her hand.

CHAPTER VIII.

What of Huntley?

In the confusion and excitement no one had thought of him, but after matters began to calm down a little his friends began to make anxious inquiry. He was last seen a moment before the renegade was shot. The attack on the Indians had been so sudden that many of them had fled on foot, and it was hoped that those having the prisoner in charge would leave him behind in their panic.

A search was made for two miles around, but no trace of the captive could be found. Hurried as they were the savages had managed to run him off. When this fact became generally known more than one man sadly shook his head and muttered:

"Poor Jim! Better for him if he were lying here a corpse!"

The party of soldiers and hunters were anxious to get on, and an hour after the fighting had ceased the wagon train moved out of the inclosure in good shape, and with no fear of being again molested for days to come. Most of the dead warriors were stripped of their ornaments, at least, while arms and ammunition were carefully gathered up. No one thought of burying the dead. The Indians would return for that purpose. If not, let the wolves and vultures have their feast.

Let us trace the fate of Huntley. You may be one of those who believe that the Indian has been grievously wronged. You may believe he has the sentiments attributed to him by novelists. You may have read that the feeling of mercy has a lodgment in his heart.

When the man rode out of the fort on his scout he firmly believed that the Indians had withdrawn. He was a brave man. None but a brave man would have periled his life to back his opinions in the face of the warnings he received. When he rode out for half a mile and turned to the left the last doubt vanished. The Indians had withdrawn. He had made assertions and proved his sagacity.

Next moment, as he disappeared over the crest of the ridge, he found himself in the midst of a horde of Indians lying in concealment. He uttered one loud, farreaching shout of astonishment, and was pulled from his horse to be menaced to silence by tomahawk and knife. But there was no need to menace him.

A great terror seemed to have frozen the blood in his veins. He could not have cried out again had they pricked him with their knives. He was dumb. He was helpless.

The captive's signal of alarm had been heard and understood at the fort, and the Indians, angered that their trap had been exposed, now showed themselves, and affairs turned as related in the previous chapter.

Brave men have no fear of bullet, grape and canister when charging a battery. Men go to the gallows without flinching. The fear of death itself makes but few cowards. It was what would be before death that broke this strong man down and held him in chains of terror. He looked about him with horror in his gaze. His bronzed face grew deathly white. His lips had that bloodless, blue look which the lips of the dead carry.

It was not until he had been cruelly beaten about that he partially threw off the horrible incubus and secured strength enough to go forward and make the appeal he was told to make. He heard his own voice, but he could not recognize it

Huntley had been mounted to be taken away before the attack came. Indeed he and the two warriors guarding him had already made a fair start to the southwest and were beyond pursuit. After a ride of ten miles over the broken ground a halt was made at a grove which appeared to be an old camping ground. As the Indians fled before the vengeance of the whites they made for this grove, and at length all who had escaped death were reunited here.

A score of tigers starved for days could not have been in worse temper. Wounded and unwounded alike thirsted for vengeance. Had they held a hundred prisoners each one would have been put to the torture, and yet the sufferings of all would not have placated the defeated and decimated band.

They had but one.

Fifty enraged savages rushed at him to chop him to pieces with knife and tomahawk, but the chiefs restrained them. A speedy death would be too merciful and deprive them of anticipated enjoyments. As soon as the scouts posted on the distant ridges signaled that the white men were moving for the forks there was no occasion for further delay.

Huntley's demeanor had undergone a change. That dumb terror which had made a woman of him had passed away and his own brave spirit had returned to make a man of him. He reproached himself for his cowardice in begging of the fiends to spare his life. He thirsted for revenge. He exulted over their bloody defeats.

Let a pack of wolves follow on the trail of a brave man and he may seek to outrun them—dodge—escape. He will fear them. Let them drive him into a cul de sac from which there is no escape, and he will turn and fight them, even with bare hands, and die fighting.

A sapling was cut down and driven into the ground for a stake, and a dozen savages ran about to collect fagots for a fire.

Huntley's eyes blazed. His bonds had become loosened and his guards were watching the preparations. Uttering the hunter's warwhoop and wrenching himself free in the sudden effort, he twisted a tomahawk from the belt of the nearest savage and began to lay about him.

He could not escape. He realized that he would be quickly overpowered and tortured with additional fervor for every blow he struck, but he dashed here and there with the strength of a giant and the frenzy of a madman.

Crash! Crash! Crash!

The Indians were taken by surprise by the hunter's sudden break, and then there was such a terrible change in his looks that they shrank away appalled. His whine of supplication had changed to shrill yells of defiance; his eyes no longer betrayed a terror stricken soul.

Swish! Sweep! Crash!

He buried the sharp tomahawk to the eye at every blow. He followed them up as they fell away before him. As they cried out in alarm he shouted in defiance.

It was a momentary panic. They could have shot him down, but the chiefs kept shouting orders not to do it. The frenzied and desperate man had killed two and wounded three when he was driven to bay and found himself surrounded. He stood panting for a moment with his exertions, while the blood dripped from the sharp tomahawk upon the green grass.

To the right—to the left—in front—in rear—the circle was closing in upon him. There was no escape.

With lightninglike movements the man swung the tomahawk about him, cutting and gashing himself in a dozen places, and as a rush was made he tottered and fell like some great tree which had lived out its century and was weary of further life. Blood was spurting from several veins and arteries, and ere he could be dragged to the stake and bound life had fled. When this fact became known there was a general howl of rage and disappointment, and a dozen savages fell upon the poor body with the fury of fiends. They scalped it. They severed the head and kicked it about for a football. They cut off hands and feet and flung them about. They hacked and cut and slashed and gave themselves up to their devilish passion for blood and revenge, but the poor body was beyond feeling.

For every Indian revealing the honest courage of the white man there are a thousand skulking cowards.

For every redskin feeling the sentiments of humanity there are a thousand who delight in the tortures of a child.

For every savage who has rewarded the kindness of the white man with another act of kindness a hundred have laid in wait for his life.

So called humanitarians say that the Indian has hereditary rights because he was here when the white man came. So were the wolves, bears, panthers and serpents.

They shed tears because he has been pushed back from the shores of the Atlantic to the plains of the west. That is the march of progress. Every civilized and enlightened country on earth has exterminated its original population, even when hapless and defensive.

The American Indian has no prototype. He stands out on the records of civilization as the most crafty, cruel, treacherous and vindictive of earth's inhabitants. He has never shown mercy and never asked for it. He expects to kill and be killed. He hates civilization—industry—cleanliness—law and order. He delights in drunkenness, theft, lust, hypocrisy, revenge and murder.

He is good only when used as a fertilizer.

DR. L. L. CARMER.

Stricken Down with Heart Disease.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty, as well as a pleasure, to publish, unsolicited, to the world the benefit received from DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE REMEDIES. I was stricken down with Heart Disease and its complications, a rapid pulse varying from 90 to 140 beats per minute, a choking or burning sensation in the wind pipe, oppression in the chest, much pain in the region of the heart and below lower rib, pain in the arms, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, weakness and general debility. The arteries in my neck would throb violently, the throbbing of my heart could be heard across a large room and would shake my whole body. I was so nervous that I could not hold my hand steady. I have been under the treatment of eminent physicians, and have taken gallons of Patent Medicine without the least benefit. A friend recommended your remedies. She was cured by Dr. Miles' remedies. I have taken three bottles of your New Heart Cure and two bottles Nervine. My pulse is normal, I have no more violent throbbing of the heart. I AM A WELL MAN. I sincerely recommend every one with symptoms of Heart Disease to take Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies and be cured.

MORTGAGE SALE

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and forty two and fifty hundreths dollars, ($542.50) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by James Strader and Mary A. Strader his wife, mortgagors, to John R. Hare, mortgagee bearing date the first day of November, A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the first day of November A. D. 1883, at 3:35 o'clock p. m., in book N. of mortgages, on page 227, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lot eight (8) in block five (5) in Clements' First Addition to the original townsite (now city) of Crookston according to the plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county in Polk county and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the fourteenth day of January A. D. 1893, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at anytime within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

NEW YEAR'S, '93

A NEW YEAR'S HYMN.

New life and light! new rapture and new joys!
New hopes, though all these fail, to light my days.
Oh, take my heart's delight in these thy gifts;
My thanks and praise, O Lord! my thanks and praise!

Dusty the way has been, and long and dark;
Even now I scarce dare hope, for hope betrays.
O faithless heart, to him who cares for thee,
Give now thy thanks and praise! thy thanks and praise!

Surely the sun will shine throughout the land;
Surely her miracles will work the spring;
Life stands revealed where all seemed drear and dead.
O heart! my heart! thou mayst give thanks and sing.

Sing and rejoice! Ever give thanks and sing!
Life rules! Death is not, though it seem to be!
Love sleeps not! God is an eternal king!
His thought shall reach even to my heart and me!

—Philadelphia Ledger.

AN OLD FOGY'S MONEY

"Here's your newspaper, Uncle Nat," said Gladys Fane. "I've aired it myself, to make sure that there isn't the least particle of damp about it. And your slippers—oh, here they are! Is the screen just in the right place? And now I'll go and see about the coffee—I have such a nice French recipe for making it that Louie Alden sent me from Paris."

All this time Esther Ellis stood quietly by the window, looking out at the snow which was falling—falling, a cloud of blinding, eddying white, blotting out the tall fir trees, thatching the gateposts with eider down and covering the carriage drive with a mantle of velvet softness.

Esther was tall and slight, with dreamy blue eyes, brown hair brushed back from her temples, and a delicate, nervous mouth. She had none of her cousin Gladys' dimpled beauty nor tropical richness of complexion, and she felt the contrast painfully in her heart.

"Pull the shade down a little, Esther," said Mr. Fane sharply. "Don't you see how the light is blinding my eyes? But you never notice things as Gladys does."

Esther obeyed hastily.

"You needn't jerk it so," said Uncle Fane. "Now shut the closet door—it has been squeaking these five minutes on its hinges in a way to set a man's teeth on edge."

"I didn't observe it, uncle."

"That's exactly what I'm saying—you don't notice my comfort or discomfort as Gladys does. Gladys, now, is really fond of me. Look at these slippers; she has crocheted them for me while you were sitting dreaming over your novels."

Esther opened her lips as if to speak; then she closed them again.

The slippers had assuredly been Gladys' gift to Uncle Fane; but was it possible Gladys had concealed the fact that she (Esther) had done all the work at Gladys' coaxing request?

She was too honorable to betray the little diplomatist, who just then came in with the tray of coffee and eggs, but all the same she felt the injustice in her heart.

Uncle Fane was rich and childless. He had taken the orphan, Esther Ellis, to bring up—and his brother, a keen Philadelphia lawyer, had sent Gladys to make him a prolonged visit on the chance of her being able to ingratiate herself into the affections of the rich old man.

"Oh, papa," pleaded Gladys, "it will be worse than Egyptian bondage! I hate old people!"

"But you don't hate money—do you, Glad? And there's no reason you shouldn't be this old man's heiress as well as Esther Ellis."

"Oh, Esther Ellis! I can cut Esther Ellis out easily enough," said handsome Gladys, with an exulting laugh. "And she wouldn't know how to spend it if she had it, the poor spirited thing! Well, I suppose it's worth a little hard work to get hold of old Uncle Fane's shekels, and he certainly can't last forever!"

So Gladys had come, smiling and sweet voiced, to the old stone house, and Esther's affectionate little heart was sore with jealous pangs, all the more bitter because they were unuttered.

"Uncle, darling, can't we have a New Year's party at the old house?" Gladys had suddenly burst out one day. "The down stairs rooms could be thrown into one so beautifully, and I could find such lovely spruce and hemlock boughs in the woods to decorate the doors and cornices, and this is just a nice distance by railroad for people to come. Please, uncle, say that I may!"

"No, my dear," said Mr. Fane, setting his lips together in that Napoleonic way he had when he particularly meant things. "I hate parties and confusion, and when my poor wife died from pneumonia, brought on by sitting in a draft at somebody's paltry birthday party, I vowed a vow that no such foolery should ever go on in this house."

"Yes; but, uncle, we won't"——

"No!" said Uncle Fane.

And even Gladys had not the audacity to press matters further.

"It's too bad," pouted Gladys to her cousin Esther. "He's a perfect old dog in the manger. Does he suppose nobody ever is to be young any more because he is old?"

"He has a right to his own way in his own house, Gladys," remonstrated Esther.

"You are as bad as he is," said Gladys.

On this particular day, when the breakfast was removed, Esther brought in the little writing desk, bestrewn with papers, at which she ordinarily wrote to her uncle's dictation, but the old man waived her impatiently away.

"Call Gladys," said he. "She is a quicker amanuensis than you are, and she writes a round, clerklike hand. I'll have Gladys do the copying for me henceforward."

Gladys flashed a triumphant glance across the table at her cousin, and Esther, meekly replying, "Very well, uncle," went away to cry in her own room.

For, shy and reticent as she was in her manner, she really did love Uncle Fane.

"He's failing—I'm sure he's failing!" said Gladys to Esther. "He went to sleep twice while I was writing that tedious nonsense about stars and parallaxes and asteroids to his dictation and slept a good long time, and he's actually going up to Philadelphia to read that mass of four syllabled dullness to some scientific convention or other. When I heard that I made up my mind and wrote off a lot of letters while he was napping to some nice young people I know."

"Letters, Gladys! What for?"

"To invite them to a merry gathering here to the Old Year out and the New Year in," laughed Gladys. "I told Susie Lapham to order the supper from Datori's, and I authorized Jim Le Convray to engage a pianist and two violinists. Now don't look so horrified. Uncle Nat will be none the wiser, and he'll be enjoying himself at his scientific convention, so why shouldn't we go in for a bit of fun too? And if you know what color is most becoming to you, Essie, you'll order a heliotrope dress for the occasion. You are quite decent looking in heliotrope!"

"I shall certainly countenance no such affair, Gladys!" said Esther decidedly. "Nothing is further from my thoughts than openly to disobey Uncle Nat."

"But you won't betray me, Esther? You wouldn't be so dishonorable?"

"It would be still more dishonorable to deceive Uncle Nat!" protested Esther. "Promise me, Gladys, to abandon the whole affair!"

And to her great relief Gladys promised, pouting and ready to cry, however.

Going to Philadelphia was a great event in Mr. Fane's life. Twice—three times Gladys had to copy the somewhat prolix paper which he proposed to read before the members of his scientific club, and at the very last it was taken out of her hands and sent to a typewriting young damsel in the neighborhood.

His portmanteau was carefully packed and repacked; a score of directions was reiterated to every one in the house, and at last he went away, tucked carefully up in the sleigh, with fur gloves, silk mufflers and arctic rubbers without end.

"What a dreadful old molly coddle he is, to be sure!" said irreverent Gladys.

And when the cutter came jingling back from the station she beckoned to little Cæsar to stop.

"I'm going to the station myself," said she.

"Oh, Gladys, what for?"

"To send half a dozen telegrams or so," said the city young lady composedly, "to hurry up matters about my New Year's party."

"Your New Year's party! I thought you had given it up, Gladys."

"Not I. If you don't want to come to it, Miss Stiff-and-prim, you needn't. But I mean to have it, all the same!" and Gladys danced merrily off to the sleigh, and whirled away like a laughing sprite into the brilliant winter sunshine.

New Year's eve came, and for a wonder it neither rained, sleeted nor snowed. The roads were like firm, beautiful alabaster; the sky all studded with glittering stars; the air just cold enough to be bracing and invigorating. The Fane house was illuminated from garret to cellar, the band was clashing out gay music, and the train from Philadelphia had brought a goodly number of young people in gala array, who were to be reenforced by the neighbors, all of whom were bound over to secrecy.

Gladys, in a blue silk dress, draped with clouds of azure tulle, which had been charged to Uncle Fane's account, was receiving them most graciously, and the tide of gayety was at its highest when the head waiter came to ask her if it was her pleasure that the supper should be served.

"Let's go down and look at the table, Jim," she said to young Mr. Le Convray, who seemed to act as her regent in chief, "to make sure that it's all right before we invite our friends to eat, drink and be merry."

"Who's that old cove just coming in at the opposite door—the caterer himself," said facetious Le Convray, "or some tramp who has smelled the frying oysters and chicken croquettes under the kitchen windows?"

Gladys dropped her escort's arm and grew pale as ashes?

"Uncle Nat!" she gasped.

"A happy New Year, my dear," said Uncle Nat, chuckling. "You hardly expected to see me here, did you? A fine supper this you have prepared. I'll just drink a cup of coffee and eat a little of this very excellent chicken salad before I go up to my room. You see, the old man isn't quite so ignorant of what is going on as you supposed he was."

"Esther has turned spy and informer!" cried Gladys. "I never, never will forgive her!"

"Not at all, my dear; not at all," said Uncle Fane. "But I chanced to find among the pages of my astronomical manuscript a half finished letter from yourself to some city friend, in which you described in a very spirited way me and my household, and your intention of outwitting both me and Esther Ellis by giving a New Year's party in defiance of us both. Esther, you said, was too loyal to the old fogy to hear of such a thing, but that you were going to have your own way in spite of her. Very well, my dear; you've had it. But there's another thing you haven't got, and won't have, and that is one solitary, single cent of the old fogy's money! Hush! What's that? Ah, the bells in the village steeple ringing in the New Year!"

At the same moment little Essie, dressed in a gray flannel wrapper, came running down stairs and flew into Mr. Fane's arms.

"Uncle Nat! Oh, Uncle Nat!" she cried.

"Here's one who is glad to see me, at all events," said Mr. Fane, a slight quiver in his voice. "A glad New Year to you, Essie! And we'll keep it together, you and I, all the rest of the years that God gives me! And of all the presents that I could have your love and constancy are the best and sweetest!"—Saturday Night.

New Year's Song.

Come, new year,
And strew pale roses for thy sister's bier!
Loves are turned cold that at her birth leaped high.
When thou art old, thou, too, forgot, shalt lie,
With all thy golden glories faded, sere.
Come, new year!

Sleep, dead year!
For dear delights are flown, and days are drear,
For oh, for oh, bleak lie the fields and bare;
Woe is me—woe—winter is everywhere;
With eyes that see not, ears that never hear,
Sleep, dead year!

Come, new year!
But silently! Let fall no foolish tear
For cankering care, or grief, or joy gone by,
Since all must yield to age and change, and die,
With past joys cherished, perished, days once dear.
Sleep, dead year!

Sleep, dead year!
Soon on spring's breast your violets shall peer,
Burst from earth's casket for thy pleasuring,
Purple and gold, her tender treasuring.
Hark! the first robin, singing loud and clear!
Come, new year!

One Sunday Newspaper.

The Globe-Democrat of Sunday contained 42 pages and 294 columns. The total number of words contained in that issue was 598,000. The number of "ems," counting the matter as one-half agate, one-half nonpareil, was 2,352,000. The number of separate pieces of type handled by the compositor in preparing that issue was 5,880,000. If the columns of type composing that issue were placed end to end they would form a solid column of type 1,754 yards long, or, laid in line, would extend from the Mississippi river to Seventeenth and Olive streets. If the lines of type composing that issue were placed end to end the result would be a line of type 8,920 yards long, about 2½ miles, or extending from the river to Vanderventer avenue. The words contained in that issue would make 21,802 book pages of 250 words each, and 85 volumes of 250 pages each, with 142 pages over. To print the issue of that one day required 48,752 pounds of specially prepared paper.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Clever Reply from a Cracker.

A big passenger train full of northern people was temporarily halted in a dreary sand plain where the only object in sight was a woebegone looking cracker sitting on a sand dune busily engaged in doing nothing. In the train was a "smart Aleck," who thought that he would have some fun with the cracker. So he put his head out of the window and called out, "My friend, this appears to be a pretty fine country you have here."

"I reckon," replied the native without looking up. "How much of a population have you in this town?" continued the smart Aleck as he winked at his friends in the car. "Waal," replied the cracker, "'bout 10,000, I reckon, and nary a fool among them. We did send for one last week as a specimen, but derned ef we thought he'd come so soon."—New York Tribune.

Order to Show Cause on Filing Petition to Sell Land.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss In Probate Court Special Term, December 15th, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Peter G. Alsson deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. P. Sandberg setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of the real estate of which said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court on Monday the 16th day of January 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said administrator to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 15th day of December, A. D. 1892.

[36-38] C. M. BENSON, Judge of Probate.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind in morals, politics, science literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Dec. 1st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars ($300.00) which became due January 1st, 1892, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Henry Steege, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Robert J. Montague, mortgagee, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1891 and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1891, at 3:10 o'clock p. m., in book 49 of mortgages, on page 417, and the said Robert J. Montague having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable, and there is now justly due and claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of one thousand thirty-seven dollars ($1,037), and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section thirty-one (31), in township one hundred and fifty (150), of Range forty six (40), excepting therefrom the west three hundred feet which is platted into lots, and the railroad right of way of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company; also excepting that portion lying on the northeast side of said railroad and within five hundred feet of the centre line of Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to Crookston, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the Court house, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 14th day of January, A. D. 1893 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 1st, A. D. 1892.

ROBERT J. MONTAGUE, Mortgagee.

DEFOREST BUCKLEN, Atty. [33-39]

Application for Liquor License.

To the Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota:

The undersigned, Fred Sargent, hereby makes application for a license to be granted to him to sell intoxicating liquors for a period of one year from the first day of January, 1893. The place where the said business is to be carried on is designated as follows: Room 8 in Reckitt block on first floor, facing Second street. Said applicant prays that such license be granted to him pursuant to the ordinance of said city of Crookston and the statutes of said state of Minnesota, in such case made and provided.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 12, 1892.

FRED SARGENT.

Will be heard by city council at regular meeting Tuesday evening, January 10th, 1893.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, issued out of and under the seal of the District Court, in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, upon a judgment rendered and docketed in the said court on the 31st day of December, 1886, in an action wherein Johnson & Marshall are plaintiffs, and Joseph Grover and Mary Grover are defendants, in favor of the said plaintiffs, and against the said defendants, for the sum of one hundred and sixty two and 50-100 dollars, which execution was directed and delivered to me as sheriff in and for the said county of Polk, I have this 14th day of December A. D. 1892, levied upon all the right, title and interest of the said defendants Joseph Grover and Mary Grover in and to the following described real estate, to wit: Lot eight (8), in block twenty-eight (28), of Kretzchmar's addition to the village of Red Lake Falls according to the plat thereof now on record in the office of register of deeds of Polk county, Minnesota, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, and appurtenances thereto, all the above described property being situated in the village of Red Lake Falls, county of Polk and state of Minnesota.

Notice is hereby given that I the undersigned, as sheriff as aforesaid, will sell the above described real property to the highest bidder, for cash, at public auction at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on Tuesday, the 7th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, to satisfy the said execution, together with the interest and costs thereon.

Dated December 14th, 1892.

ARNY GRUNDYSEN, Sheriff of Polk county, Minn.
By Simon Paul, Deputy.

CHAS. E. BOUGHTON, Attorney for plaintiff. [36-42]

In District Court.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss.

In the matter of the estate of H. A. Wyand, insolvent. At Crookston, Minn., December 13th, 1892, it appearing to the court by satisfactory proof and the files in the above entitled matter that Charles E. Sawyer has duly entered upon the discharge of his trust as receiver of said insolvent estate, and has filed his bond herein as required by law;

Now, on the application of A. A. Miller attorney for said receiver, it is ordered that all persons whomsoever having claims against the said H. A. Wyand existing on the 10th day of October, 1892, present the same duly verified, with the proof thereof, to said Charles E. Sawyer, at the First National Bank of Crookston, Crookston, Minn., on or before the 15th day of January, 1893, for allowance.

The first of the year is a good time to form resolutions—and one good resolution is to resolve to subscribe at once for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

S. L. Collins received a box of Brown's Selects as a New Years present from the boys in his stables. Collins looked as pleasant a boy with a new little red wagon.

Saake, the Robert street jeweler, says his holiday trade was excellent—far better than he had supposed it would be and he says he is now on deck for anything that may happen.

Comrade C. Snyder came down from the woods on Saturday to enjoy the New Years day with his family. He has 200 cords of wood already cut and expects to get his 1000 out all right enough.

Max Ericsson went to St. Paul on Friday evening of last week to enter upon his new duties as proprietor of the California Winehouse, corner of Cedar and Seventh streets. He will be back in a day or so for a short stay.

Wm. Trenke came down from the the woods last week with a lame horse. Says there are as many as 150 four-horse teams at work in Bagley's camps. They are having fine weather for their work this winter and the result will be an unusually large cut.

The Carolyn Gage company being unable to make their engagement at Grafton, owing to the big fire at that place put in the evening at the opera house in thiscity on Saturday, playing "A Double Wrong" to a big house. This company made a big hit in our city while here and will no doubt do well should they come again.

The funeral of August Walters on Thursday afternoon was one of the largest events of the kind ever in Crookston. The Odd Fellow, the A. O. U. W., and the G. A. R. Post, to all of which societies Mr. Walters belonged turned out, while hundreds who belong to no society were in attendance. Mr. Elmer preached an eloquent and affecting sermon.

Senator Henry Keller passed through the city on Friday evening on his way to St. Paul from a trip to Grand Forks. The senator says he has disposed of his interest in the binding twine patent and will confine his attention strictly to his manufacturing business hereafter. At present he is working his full force to its utmost capacity trying to keep up with his orders for bobsleds.

Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, of St, Paul, have gone out of the type business and will hereafter handle only stationery, in which line they will continue to be the leading house in the state. This move became necessary owing to the formation of the type trust that, in the future intends to run everything in that line. Mr. Baker, who was manager of the type department has accepted a position with the trust in Buffalo, N. Y., and has gone there to enter upon his new duties.

The fire department was called out at noon last Saturday to put out a blaze which had started in the basement of the Vance block which was occupied by the Crookston Hay and commission company as a storeroom. An oil stove which was in the basement got out of order and finally the bottom dropped out of it, allowing the oil to run out on the floor and become ignited. The department responded promptly to the alarm, and put out the fire before any material damage was done.

On Thursday last an individual became so thoroughly identified with tangle-foot as to wholly lose control of his team that he was attempting to drive home with and the result was a runaway. The team collided with the hydrant at the Medical hall wrecking the harness and pitching the man out. The man was picked up, taken to the city lock-up and allowed the night in which to sober up departing for his home in the morning.

The Women's Auxiliary to the World's Columbian Fair will be greatly obliged to any person or persons, throughout the state of Minnesota, who will assist them by giving any information whereby they can collect relics, curios, works of all kind pretaining to the Indians. The smallest item will be gladly received and anyone desiring to communicate on the subject will address Mrs. Henry S. Judson, chairman on Ethnology and Aachaeology, Morris, Minn.

Several business men are contemplating putting in power and running their own electric lights, claiming that the Crookston Water Power and Light company charges too exhorbitant prices for their electric lighting. Several have been up to see our little gasoline engine work and they seem highly pleased with it and think it is just the power they need. We know of one firm that has fully decided to write for prices with the full determination to do its own electric lighting.

The Carolyn Gage company interested a good audience at the Grand on Thursday night in "A Double Wrong," which is a re-vamp of "The Pearl of Savoy," and "Linda" gotten up especially for this company. The company is exceptionally strong and Lew A. Warner, in his specialties is heavy—way out of sight, and he was encored to the letter every time. The audience showed its appreciation by frequent applause. Should this company ever re-visit this city they will no doubt receive a hearty welcome.

A. Kelsey, of Fargo, N. D., was in the city last week visiting his son W. E. Kelsey. Although he has lived in the Red River Valley for years, this was Mr. Kelsey's first visit to Crookston, and like everybody else he was favorably impressed with our city.

Commissioner DeMers has a conscience. Yesterday it smote him. Approaching a JOURNAL man he said: "Well, you don't look very mad." "No" replied the scribe, "what should I be mad about?" "I expect we'll catch it," said DeMers, "but don't give it to us too hard." If he had voted on the printing deal as his conscience told him, he wouldn't be afraid of the consequences.

The success of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in effecting a speedy cure of colds, croup and whooping cough has brought it into great demand. Messrs. Pontius & Son, of Cameron, Ohio, say that it has gained a reputation second to none in that vicinity. Jas. M. Queen, of Johnston, W. Va., says it is the best he ever used. B. F. Jones; druggist, Winona, Minn., says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is perfectly reliable. I have always warranted it and it never failed to give the most perfect satisfaction." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

The Oakes company of Swiss Bell Ringers gave an entertainment in Grand opera house on Monday evening to a good house. Some of the features of the entertainment were very good while a great deal of it was extremely light and poor. Their negro comedy business was rank—too silly for any use while their boasted "singing comedian" possibly might have amounted to something if he had vouchsafed to talk plain enough to be understood—as it was he rattled off a lot of antiquated, warmed over chestnuts so rapidly and so thickly that no one could catch on to half he was trying so hard to get off, and when he came to a really meritorious piece of instrumental music he would spoil it by asking "Isn't that pretty?" Just as though his audience was composed of a set of gawks who had never heard anything really good and were incapable of appreciating it if they did. Of course such companys will come along but they help very much to destroy what business good entertainments should have and the management of the opera house can hardly blame the people if they are shy of wasting their money in such light performances. The people pay good money for these shows and are entitled to good shows for their money. The show as a whole is far from being a good one to speak as mildly as possible about it.

"In buying a cough medicine for children," says H. A. Walker, a prominent druggist of Ogden, Utah, "never be afraid to buy Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is no danger from it and relief is always sure to follow. I particularly recommend Chamberlain's because I have found it to be safe and reliable. It is intended especially for colds, croup and whooping cough." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

To Farmers.

The World's Fair Commission of Minnesota is very desirous of securing samples of every variety of grain and seeds grown in Minnesota for exhibition at Chicago.

Among other farm products it is especially desirable to secure some white flint corn on the ear.

Farmers having anything in the line indicated are earnestly invited to correspond with the undersigned who will furnish information as to quantity desired, information necessary to accompany the specimens, etc. Grain and seeds furnished will be entered at the World's Fair in the name of the producer, and any premiums awarded will go to the exhibitor. Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

is the characteristic of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is manifested every day in the remarkable cures this medicine accomplishes. Druggists say: When we sell a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla to a new customer we are sure to see him back in a few weeks after more,—proving that the good results from a trial bottle warrant continuing its use. This positive merit Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses by virtue of the peculiar combination, proportion and process used in its preparation, and by which all the remedial value of the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus peculiar to itself and absolutely unequalled in its power as a blood purifier, and as a tonic for building up the weak and weary, and giving nerve strength.

The World's Fair Buildings.

Assuming that every reader of this paper wishes to attend the great Columbian Exposition at Chicago this year, and that all who can spare the time and money will do so, a few facts in regard to the buildings erected for the exhibition will be interesting. The Manufactures building is 1,687 by 787 feet, covering 1,326,669 square feet, or very nearly thirty and a half acres. The other principal structures are: Mining, 245,000 square feet; Horticultural, 250,000; Woman's 80,000; Transportation, 240,000; Fisheries, 220,000; Dairy, 19,000; Forestry, 100,000; Machinery, 425,000; Art, 160,000; Government, 147,000. Remembering that an acre of ground contains 43,560 square feet, it will be easy to figure the area in acres. Most of our readers will get in this way a tolerably correct conception of the size of these buildings, and we need only add that their cost will range from $120,000 for the Woman's building to $1,100,000 for that devoted to manufactures. As to how to get there, we say that from any point in the Northwest or the Mississippi Valley, the Burlington route is the best, quickest and most direct line. Any railroad ticket agent can advise you as to tickets and rates, or you can write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., who will be glad to give you any information.

Considerable excitement prevails at Glencoe over the report that J. H. Rieyer has lost heavily through dealing in options. Farmers in this vicinity are holding his storage tickets for 18,000 bushels of wheat which it is said has disappeared. Charles H. Sievers has also sunk a large sum in the wheat pit, but his loss will not likely involve anyone else.

Surveyor General Ash has completed his official figures of the lumber cut in the Duluth district the past year. The cut of the year is enlarged by 1,657,730 feet on the Eastern Minnesota road and by 4,706,000 on Little and Big Fork rivers. These official figures show the cut in this district during the year just closed to have been 388,495,000 feet of lumber, 175,806,000 lath and 86,884,000 shingles.

The Lake Superior Transit company, which has been in the business since 1878, and operated the steamers India, China, Japan, Idaho, Empire State, Badger State, Montana, Vanderbilt, Gordon Campbell and Philadelphia between Buffalo and Lake Superior ports, went out of business on Jan. 1. The New York Central will run a line of their own to Duluth, and it is expected that the Pennsylvania company, owners of the Anchor line, will also run a line to Duluth.

Minnesota's State Prison.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 2.—The board of state prison managers have submitted their annual report to the governor. The prison is in excellent shape, they say, and everything running smoothly. The amount of twine manufactured last year was 1,000,000 pounds, which was sold at 9 cents a pound, without loss to the state. The twine output for next year will be double that of this. Three twine machines are in operation.

Was Not Incendiary.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 30.—Henry C. Payne, vice president and manager of the Milwaukee Street Railway company, has made a written statement, based on the testimony of employes, in which he admits that the fire in the company's barns was not incendiary. Since the cold weather set in the employes at night have been running the cars into the barn without withdrawing the fires from the heaters. The origin of the fire is now accounted for in this way.

Peter Cooper's Earthly Reward.

New Yorkers need not be reminded of what they owe to good old Peter Cooper, who began life in earnest when a boy in a hat factory, and who died lamented by the thousands whom his earnest, charitable life had blessed. It might be said that Peter Cooper made his money solely for the good he could do with it. At all events he lived to a great age and saw the practical benefits that arose from his well directed efforts. To have died knowing that a whole city was in mourning and that a great nation was sounding his praises was in itself a reward for money rightly spent and time consumed.—New York World.

Brigandage in Jail.

To read of brigandage in Italy makes one doubt if this can be the Nineteenth century. Here is a country, one of the oldest seats of European civilization, where the first requisite of stable government, security of life and property, is wanting. The country groans under the financial burden of an army and navy big enough for a vast empire, and yet the troops appear to be so busy looking for an invader on the northern frontier that they cannot suppress the robbers and murders of the interior. The authorities should reduce the army and hire a police force.—Toronto Globe.

Nell's Observation.

Little Nell, dining with the grown up members of the family, gazes contemplatively at each one in turn, then remarks slowly, "All the ladies has they bangs over they noses and all the gentlemen has they bangs under they noses."—Harper's Bazar.

The body is now looked upon as the fit companion of the soul. Even its appetites, in their proper sphere and within their normal limits, are regarded with high respect, not merely as contributors to our pleasure, but as essential to our highest welfare.

The honor of the invention of printing has been claimed by Mentz, Strasburg, Haarlem, Venice, Rome, Florence, Basle and Augsburg. The first three are entitled to consideration.

A horsefly will live for hours after its head has been pulled off. The head of the mosquito hawk will continue eating its victim when separated from the thorax.

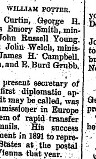
Some Large Salaries.

While the president of the United States receives an annual stipend of but $50,000, the salary of the Prince of Wales is $200,000 per year; Duke of Connaught, $125,000; Duke of Edinburgh, $125,000, and the Duke of Cambridge, the queen's cousin, $60,000. The royal family cost England $40,000 a week.

The New Minister to Italy.

William Potter, who is to fill the unexpired term of Albert G. Porter as minister to Italy, is a Philadelphian. He was born in that city in 1852, and is of an old Pennsylvania family, his father having long been a leader in business and his mother a descendant of prominent Revolutionary families.



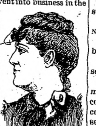
WILLIAM POTTER.

Mr. Potter is a gentleman of broad culture and has been from his youth up an ardent Republican. It is noted as an interesting fact that he is the thirteenth member of the Union league of that city to be appointed within a short time to an important diplomatic post, his predecessors being Henry M. Watts, minister to Austria; A. Loudon Snowden, minister to Greece; Robert Adams, Jr., minister to Brazil; Wayne MacVeagh, minister to Turkey; Simon Cameron, A. G. Curtin, George H. Boker and Charles Emory Smith, ministers to Russia; John Russell Young, minister to China; John Welch, minister to England; James H. Campbell, minister to Sweden, and E. Burd Grubb, minister to Spain.

Mr. Potter is at present secretary of the league. His first diplomatic appointment, if such it may be called, was that of postal commissioner in Europe to negotiate a system of rapid transfer of international mails. His success caused his appointment in 1891 to represent the United States at the postal union congress at Vienna that year.

She Deals in Real Estate.

Mrs. S. M. Blakely is the second woman to have obtained a seat in the Real Estate exchange of New York city, and she has proved herself abundantly qualified for it. She went into business in the usual way of widows, as thus detailed by herself in a recent interview: "When my husband died, less than a year ago, I supposed he had left a fair competence, but instead I found matters very much complicated, and realized the necessity for immediate action to save what was left of the business and property. I made a careful study of the business as he left it and decided I would attempt to carry it on myself. I had much to learn, as I had comparatively little business experience, but I have succeeded beyond my fondest expectations."



MRS. S. M. BLAKELY.

She finds but one serious difficulty. Many men do not like to deal with a woman and are afraid to accept her judgment as to titles, but she has not yet made a mistake. She is a lady of very attractive personality and winning address, lives in some style in West Seventieth street and maintains herself and family in comfort. She has a remarkable memory and takes special pleasure in making exchanges of property, because, she says, "it calls into play all the tact, diplomacy and business intelligence of which I am possessed. Every one thinks his or own special piece of property is the best, and that if any concessions are made by either party it should be to them, which makes it rather awkward for me, considering that both parties to the transaction think the same."

The Value of Thought.

It is hardly necessary to say that all men need to "swing" the moral compass from time to time and to take their bearings in the sea of life. The advice is as true as it is conventional. Upon the use of thinking for such purposes we shall not, then, dwell. We may, however, point out, as a means of strengthening and invigorating the mind in a secular and worldly sense, the habit of thinking is of the greatest possible value.

The minds of those who dread thinking, as if it were a penance, become like the bodies of those fed solely on spoon meat—soft and unable to stand the slightest strain. Reading, as one ordinarily reads, is like swallowing pap; thinking, like eating solid food. The man who trains his mental powers by meditation and by following outlines of thought obtains an intellectual instrument a hundred times more powerful than he who is content never to think seriously and consecutively.—London Spectator.

Not a Remedy.

Mother (returned from a call)—Why, you have taken cold. You are feverish. Don't you feel hot?

Little Ethel—Yes'm. I've been havin Johnnie tell me some ghost stories, so's to make cold chills run down my back, but it doesn't do a bit of good.—Good News.

He Was Willing.

"Do you think you can support me, George?" she asked an hour after he had proposed.

"Yes, if you'll get on the other knee," he said.—Exchange.

On the Grand Tour.

Stranger—What is the fare to Interlaken?

Driver—Twenty francs.

Stranger—But "Badecker" (guide-book) says only twelve francs.

Driver—Oh, well; then let "Badecker" drive you himself.—Basler Nachrichten.

THE FIRST MEETING.

Minutes of the First Meeting of the New Board of County Commissioners.

Board met in regular session on January 3d, at 10 o'clock in the auditor's office. Moved by De Mers and seconded by Anderson that M. E. Kirsch be the chairman for the ensuing year, which motion prevailed.

R. J. Montague, on behalf of his client, A. C. Rhinehart, presented a protest to the seating of Robert Anderson, which protest was read and ordered filed. Upon re-assembling on the 4th the chairman named his committees as follows:

Roads and bridges—DeMers, Anderson, Lindem.

On Bonds—Oppegaard, Lindem, DeMers.

Taxes—Anderson, DeMers, Oppegaard.

Bills and claims—Lindem, Anderson, DeMers.

Finance—Anderson, DeMers, Lindem.

Hospital—DeMers, Anderson, Oppegaard.

On motion of DeMers, Kirsch, Anderson and Oppegaard were appointed a purchasing committee.

The county auditor was instructed to advertise for bids for the keeping of the county deposits.

On application of J. E. O'Brien the accrued interest on lots 26 and 27, block 1, Jerome's Addition, was abated for the year 1886.

Bonds of county officers were received and placed on file.

The board then proceeded to consider the bids for county printing.

The bid of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, was as follows:

Publishing proceedings of the board, 25 cents per folio.

Delinquent tax list 4 cents per description.

Financial statement and all other matters requiring publication, 30 cents per folio 1st insertion and 20 cents per folio each subsequent insertion.

All other job work and stationery at usual prices.

One from P. Bodine, manager of McIntosh News, and the Red Lake Falls Gazette: Delinquent tax list 3 cents per description. The financial statement, proceedings and any other notices ordered published, at 50 cents per folio first insertion and 25 cents each subsequent insertion. The job printing to be done by Crookston Tribune at local rates.

Combination bid between Times, East Grand Forks Courier and McIntosh Times:

Publish financial statement, the commissioners' proceedings and all notices for 72 cents a folio for 1st insertion and 30 cents each subsequent insertion. Delinquent tax list 2 cents per description for each, (total 6 cents per description).

Job work:

" ¼ sheet, two side		6 50
" ½ sheet, two side		8 50

All other work 20 per cent below usual rates.

After the several bids had been read Commissioner DeMers stepped to the front and read a type written copy of a resolution (that had been furnished for him on the Times typewriter): Whereas, The bid of W. E. McKenzie has been received for doing the printing and publishing for Polk county for the ensuing year and Whereas—the law requires that the contract for said work be let to the lowest bidder; the commissioners, however to take into consideration the circulation and standing of the newspapers filing bids; and whereas, it appears from the bids tendered and on file that the bid of W. E. McKenzie, publisher of the Crookston Times wherein he agrees to publish, according to law the delinquent tax list and all other official county notices and commissioners proceedings in the Crookston Times, McIntosh Times and East Grand Forks Courier and after taking into consideration the circulation and standing of the three papers we find this bid to be the lowest of any before us therefore be it

Resolved; That the bid of W. E. McKenzie be accepted and the Crookston Times, a weekly newspaper printed and published in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota be and the same hereby is designated the official newspaper in which shall be published according to law the delinquent taxes and all other official notices and commissioners proceedings.

When the vote was polled it stood Kirsch, DeMers and Anderson in favor and Oppegaard and Lindem opposed, so the job went through. The auditor was authorized to draw a warrant in favor of Architect Permain to satisfy a judgment he had against the county for services on the county jail.

Esten Estenson was given a new lease of life as janitor of the court house.

The report of surveyor on Red Lake Falls and Terrebone road received and ordered filed.

The board resolved to appropriate the sum of $301 to build a bridge across the Clearwater on the town line between Emardville and Wyandotte, also for a bridge across Poplar River and another across Black River, said money not to be paid until the bridges are completed and accepted by the road and bridge committee.

Sheriff Grundysen's bill in Cummings case was held over for further scrutiny. The usual grist of bills were allowed and the board adjourned to meet on January 30th, 1893.

Officers Elected.

On Friday evening of last week the newly elected officers of Col. Cobham Post were installed at the Post rooms. They are:

Commander—V. D. Carruth.

Senior Vice Commander—J. O. Sargeant.

Junior Vice Commander—Nels K. Olsen.

Quartermaster—I. U. Jennings.

Chaplain—C. H. Mix.

Adjutant—O. H. Lucken.

Surgeon—Wm. Kistenmacker.

Officer of the Day—Jas. Greenhalgh.

Officer of the Guard—Levi Leduc.

Sergeant Major—Jas. A. Kelly.

The officers of the Women's Relief Corps were also installed. They are the old officers of the previous year, except the president, Mrs. I. U. Jennings, who was elected in the place of Mrs. Van Arnam, who was unable to accept re-election. After the installation ceremonies both societies repaired to the Odd Fellows' dining hall where a sumptuous spread invited the hungry to the enjoyment of a good square meal, and not a soldier present that did not do ample justice thereto. Then followed several excellent speeches and the crowd dispersed with a vote of thanks to the W. R. C. under whose auspices the banquet was held.

A Fearful Blow.

Last Wednesday morning was one of those calm peaceful mornings that give no hint that a blow of large sized proportions was brewing, but everybody who observed Johnny Scheffer on that morning could tell by the glitter of those coal black eyes and by the "spirits" that seemed to animate him that something was in the wind, and about 3 p. m., the storm broke out. At that time Mr. Bang's boy came along and at sight of him all the pent up fury of John's meek and lamb-like nature broke forth and, putting on the gloves ala John L; he sailed into the ring—but alas, he met his Corbet, for in about a second less than no time the boy proved too many for John L., and before "time" was called he slid back to his "corner" where he caught up a handy neckyoke and sailed into the ring once more. Even with this reinforcement the boy was still too many for him and a comfortable majority so "Johnny got his gun"—or, no, it was an ax and once more rushed forth to do battle for his country—and the boy! Oh, where was he? Why he was on to Johnny too quick, took possession of the axe and with it went down to the engine house and asked the police not to let Johnny chop him down—and he so young and handsome. The police went up to Johnny's tepee and held a pow wow with the contending forces and after that the star-eyed Goddess of Peace brooded gently over Fletcher street and George Lipscomb kept right on hauling wood and "McGill" didn't say a word but sawed wood. When Johnny goes on the war-path again he probably will Bang away at some other boy.

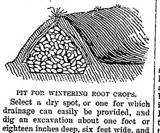
FARM AND GARDEN

WINTERING ROOT CROPS.

Beets, Carrots and Other Roots Carried Over in Outdoor Pits.

The best storage place for all roots, potatoes included, undoubtedly is a regular root cellar in the basement of a barn. A separate root or potato cellar, such as a dugout in a hillside, also makes a very good place for beets, carrots, etc., to be fed out during winter and spring. No difficulty need be experienced in carrying root crops over until spring in pits outdoors, in the same way that farmers in some sections winter apples and potatoes, says as good authority as T. Griener, in his useful book, "How to Make the Garden Pay," published by William H. Maule, Philadelphia. Here is some illustrated advice which he gives:



PIT FOR WINTERING ROOT CROPS.

Select a dry spot, or one for which drainage can easily be provided, and dig an excavation about one foot or eighteen inches deep, six feet wide, and of the length required to hold the roots to be wintered over. Place the roots in a conical heap, as shown in the illustration. Cover with six, eight, ten or twelve inches of straw, according to the severity of the winters in the particular locality, and with a foot of soil upon the straw.

A whisk of straw or a section of common tile drain, reaching from the straw covering through the soil to the outside, should be adjusted in the center of every eight or 10-foot section to provide the required ventilation. If such a pit is opened before the cold weather has entirely passed the roots remaining in it need careful covering to guard against freezing.

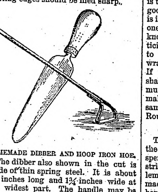
A Good Ration for Eggs.

"In my own experience," writes a correspondent of The Fancier's Journal, "I found the best results by mixing 25 per cent. each of oats, wheat and bran ground together, 10 each of corn and linseed and 5 of meat scraps. Cooking vegetables or steaming chopped hay and adding perhaps three quarts of this mixed ration to the bucketful, I would allow the mass to cook all night and feed when warm early in the morning. Today I must rely more largely on clover. For whole grain I would be governed by circumstances, finding the best results when I reduced the corn ration, save in the coldest weather. Fixed rations per head cannot be given because of the infinite variety of temperaments, of habits created and intensified by years of breeding, warmth of buildings and want of attention to regularity in feeding. It costs as much to keep an active Leghorn as a sluggish Plymouth Rock.

"The normal crop of a hen is small, but may be distended many times by providing appetizing food and feeding generously. The idea that an animal will eat only what it needs is a heresy we must break from as quickly as possible. The smallest quantity consistent with health and productiveness must be the motto. Here is the economy of feeding. It is not niggardliness, but true liberality, for it seeks first of all perfect health by balancing the food to the needs of the animal. Nature's method is a grain at a time, and a constant searching and scratching for these; ours too often is to crowd the food into the crop in the shortest possible time."

Homemade Implements.

In the illustration here reproduced from American Gardening appears a serviceable hoe which any one with mechanical skill can easily make. On an old hoe handle attach a piece of good strong hoop iron, firmly bolting it. The cutting edges should be filed sharp.



HOMEMADE DIBBER AND HOOP IRON HOE.

The dibber also shown in the cut is made of thin spring steel. It is about 7½ inches long and 1¾ inches wide at the widest part. The handle may be like that of a chisel or shorter and cylindrical, as long as the hand can conveniently grasp. It should be finished on the emery wheel.

Silos at the World's Fair.

The ensilage pits at the World's Columbian exposition are now being filled with fodder grown on Mr. M. W. Dunham's farm at Wayne, Ills., and Chief of Agriculture W. I. Buchanan is doing everything possible to secure a quality of ensilage that shall suit the fancy of the most critical feeder. According to The Farmer's Review, the silos have been constructed upon the most approved plan, and look like filling the bill satisfactorily. A point of unusual interest in regard to their construction is that a detailed record is being kept of the material used and expense incurred, so that when the official report appears farmers will have valuable data to work from should they wish to build a silo. The capacity of the two silos is 600 tons.

The Sandringham Funeral Sermon.

The wide interest taken in the question of recognition in eternity was illustrated by the extraordinary sale of the sermon preached at Sandringham on the decease of the Duke of Clarence and Avondale, the eldest son of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The profits during the short period of six months amounted to no less than £1,300, of which the sum of £650 was given by the Princess of Wales to the Gordon Boys' home and £650 to the British Home for Incurables. Over 50,000 copies were sold in that time—a sale certainly unprecedented in the annals of profit from a single sermon of a few pages.

The preacher has been heard to say that this sale was not due to his slender sermon, but to the touching anecdote told by the princess, forming the prefatory note, and which she gave permission to be printed. The substance of the story is that in 1888 all the five children of the princess were with her at Sandringham, and they all partook of holy communion together. "I gave Eddy a little book," said the bereaved mother, "and wrote in it:

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling,

"and also

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
O Lamb of God, I come.

"When he was gone, and lay like one sleeping," continued the princess, "we laid a cross of flowers on his breast, and after we had done so I turned to the table at his bedside and saw the little book in which were written these words, and I could not help feeling that he did cling to the cross, and that it had all come true."—Leisure Hour.

Tennyson's Interview with the Queen.

It was in the latter part of 1862, the year after the death of the prince consort, that I was conversing with Mrs. Tennyson on the sudden death of a much valued common friend and the loneliness of his widow, when Tennyson, who had been stalking up and down the end of the bow windowed drawing room with his usual long strides, suddenly broke in with, "I saw another widow three days ago." "Indeed," I replied, "and who was that?" "The queen," he replied in his deepest tones. "She sent for me to Osborne." I said that I supposed her majesty wished to thank him for his noble tribute to the memory of the prince consort, and with perhaps pardonable curiosity went on to ask what the queen had said to him. "I can't remember," he answered; "I lost my head. I only remember what I said to the queen—big fool that I was!"

"What was that?" "Why, what an excellent king Prince Albert would have made. As soon as it was out of my mouth I felt what a blunder I had made. But happily it proved to be the very right thing to have said. The queen replied that that had been the constant sorrow of her life—that she was called to govern, while he who was so worthy of the first place was obliged to take a secondary position." Tennyson had little more to say of his reception except that, notwithstanding the perfect calmness and self restraint of the queen, and the sweet consideration she manifested for him, the interview was a peculiarly trying one, and he was glad when it was over.—Canon Venables in London Times.

Gratitude Toward Great Men.

We are told regularly—periodically told—that the eminent politician earns his country's gratitude. We have much to be thankful for, we little ones, but we have indeed cause to be truly thankful that we are not destined to earn such gratitude as that. How many politicians, say, during the past century may be said to have earned their country's gratitude? How many out of the great multitude of politicians? Is there one? Is there one man of whom his countrymen are willing to say, with an even nearly unanimous voice, "We owe that man our heartfelt gratitude; it is his; we give it him." As they sometimes cry in the arena of his former struggles: "Name! Name!"

Doubtless every man Jack of those extinct eminent politicians—for extinct they are as the dodo, to all practical intents and purposes—has his followers as he had them then. And equally true it is that he has his opponents, quite in the good old way. What sort of gratitude is it which consists in being set up by one set of men for another set of men to knock you down? Those eminent politicians have handed on their wrangles to our eminent politicians. We are wrangling just on the same old lines. If we look deeply into the matter we shall begin to doubt if we have advanced much farther than they did. We are making the same old plunges in the same old lucky bag.—All the Year Round.

The Man Who Really Enjoys Life.

To no man is the world so new and the future so fresh as to him who has spent the early years of his manhood in striving to understand the deeper problems of science and life and who has made some headway toward comprehending them. To him the commonest things are rare and wonderful, both in themselves and as parts of a beautiful and intelligent whole. Such a thing as staleness in life and its duties he cannot understand.

Knowledge is always opening out before him in wider expanses and more commanding heights. The pleasure of growing knowledge and increasing power makes every year of his life happier and more hopeful than the last.—Vick's Magazine.

The Encroaching Lake.

One of the humorously attractive characteristics of a child is his large sense of personal importance. A little girl was walking with her father on the shore of Lake Michigan, where the waves were gently lapping up on the beach. Suddenly one came up higher than the others and swept over her foot, when she exclaimed, "Oh, papa, the lake stepped on my toe."—New York Times.

UNITED AT THE LAST.

PITIFUL TALE OF AN EMIGRANT FAMILY THAT PERISHED.

The Terrible Blizzard of 1881 Had for Some of Its Victims a Whole Family Which Froze to Death in Dead Man's Cove—Heroic Efforts of a Mother.

"That's Dead Man's cove right before your eyes," said the old man as he pointed to a recess of half an acre in extent in the southern face of the Little Rocky mountains. "That's Dead Man's cove, and you kin see the iron work of the wagon lyin about when ye git closer. When I first looked in here thar was five human bodies lying dead in that wagon. Me an my pard we dug a big grave and buried 'em all together back agin that cliff, thar whar the rocks is. We piled the rocks that way so the wolves couldn't git at the dead."

"But there is no headboard — no names," I protested as I rode closer to the spot pointed out.

"Couldn't be no names, 'cause we couldn't find any," he replied, "and them rocks is a gravestun as will last forever. We'll git off and sit down fur a smoke, and I'll gin ye the full particklers. I've passed here a hundred times in the last three years, and it allus gives me the heartache. Poor husband—poor wife—poor children!

"It was this way," he continued after his pipe was alight. "Me and pard had our shanty down the valley about a mile. Plenty of emigrants in the'r kivered wagons used to come by this trail and turn south into Wyomin, or keep west into Idaho. They'd come five or six families at a time, and they'd come singly. Some of 'em would take sich chances of Injuns, sickness, landslides, starvashun and death as would make your ha'r stand on end to think of. No man kin begin to guess how many graves thar be of men, women and children between the Dakota line and the west branch of the Missouri river. I've counted a hundred in a day's ride.

"Waal, one December mornin me and pard woke up to feel that thar was a blizzard makin ready to bust on us. It had been coolish but pleasant up to that time. We could tell by the feel of things what was comin, and began to git ready fur it. It was jest arter noon when a woman walked into our shanty. She was an emigrant. Right here in this cove she had left her husband and four children to try and find some help. He had bin sick fur three weeks and was little better than a dead man, and she had bin drivin the team an takin keer of things gener'ly. She orter to hev turned back long before, but some fool of a doctor had told the man he'd get well if they kept on.

"They had got separated from the party they started with, and had made the last hundred miles alone. They war out o' grub, hadn't a match left to build a fire, and the woman knowed a change fur the wuss was blowin up. She was a frail, leetle woman, and she had gone through with nuff to down a man, but she hadn't lost all her pluck yit. As soon as she told us the story we got ready to go back with her an bring in the outfit. We made a start, but we never got thar."

"The blizzard prevented, eh?"

"She did. She came swoopin down all of a sudden, like some great bird droppin from the sky. A fine snow begun to fall, the wind started right in to blow a livin gale, and I believe the thermometer went from 45 degs. above to 10 degs. below inside of half an hour. We hadn't any with us, but the change was sudden an amazin. You couldn't face that gale to save your life. It jest stopped us and turned us around before we had got fifteen rods from the house. As to the cold, it jest paralyzed you. We had to go back, and arter takin a big drink o' whisky all around and puttin on more clothes we tried it agin.

"Me and Sam was as tough as b'ars them days and could hev laid down in a pond of water and let it freeze up with us, but we couldn't buck agin that blizzard. When we made the second start we got about half way up here, the little woman leadin the way all the time. Then we had to stop. You couldn't see three foot from your nose, and all of us was freezin to death by inches."

"And you went back?"

"We did. The woman was determined to push on, and we jest had to pick her up and carry her back. It was only by the Lord's hand pintin the way that we ever reached our cabin agin. We had our ears, noses and fingers friz, and an hour arter we got back water friz solid in our cabin within five foot of a roarin fire. The woman prayed to God and appealed to us, but we knowed it was no use. That was the blizzard of 1881, and I've heard men say it was 42 degs. below zero in this valley that night.

The woman got nipped wuss than we did, but her mind was on the family back here. She was bound to come back alone, but we stood her off till about dark. Then she made a bolt fur it and got away."

"And went to her death?"

"Jest as sartin as if she had jumped off that cliff. The blizzard shet us in fur three days. When we got out we found her within twenty rods of the cabin. She had friz to death goin that fur. Of course we knowed how it would be up here. The horses had been onhitched and turned out. They lay over by that tree. The folks in the wagon had crowded together and kivered up with all the blankets, but all war stun dead and as hard as rocks. They never saw that fust night come down.

"Me and pard overhauled the wagon, but we couldn't find anythin givin the name of the family, and so, like hundreds of others out in this kentry of mountain and valley, Injun and wolf, we kivered 'em in to sleep till the Lord gits ready to call 'em fur judgment. Seems awful that a hull fam'ly should be wiped out that way, but they ar' sleepin thar together, and I guess the Lord'll know the spot even if thar is no gravestun to mark it."—New York Herald.

Both Had Eczema
In Its Worst Form

After Physicians Failed, Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured.

Great mental agony is endured by parents who see their children suffering from diseases caused by impure blood, and for which there seems no cure. This is turned to joy when Hood's Sarsaparilla is resorted to, for it expels the foul humors from the blood, and restores the diseased skin to fresh, healthy brightness. Read the following from grateful parents:

"To C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"We think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most valuable medicine on the market for blood and skin diseases. Our two children suffered terribly with the

for two years. We had three physicians in that time, but neither of them succeeded in curing them or even in giving them a little relief. At last we tried Hood's Sarsaparilla and in a month both children were perfectly cured. We recommend as a standard family medicine, and would not be without it." Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Soller, 1412 2nd Avenue, Altoona, Pa.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, constipation, biliousness, jaundice, sick headache, indigestion.

A POPULIST HOUSE.

THIRD PARTY IN KANSAS WILL HAVE ONE OF THEIR OWN.

Chairman of the State Committee Orders All Contestants to Topeka—Montana Third Party Men Receive Orders Not to Vote for a Democrat for Senator.

TOPEKA, Jan. 10.—Chairman Breidenthal, of the Populist committee, has sent out twenty-six telegrams ordering here all those against whom contests have been filed in the lower house. Under the advice of Judges Doster and Webb, Mr. Breidenthal has determined to organize a Populist house, by withdrawing all the members of that party as soon as it is demonstrated that the Republicans have a majority. The Republicans have already taken steps to have the supreme court enjoin the state auditor and treasurer from paying any bills that may be contracted by such a house. This action against Populist leaders is causing a rebellion against the proposed action of the Populist leaders, but the sentiment of that party will probably whip the recalcitrants into line.

INSURES HIS ELECTION.

C. K. Davis Nominated by the Republican Senatorial Caucus at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 5.—The Republicans met in caucus at the state capitol at 8 p. m. and unanimously renominated Cushman K. Davis for United States senator. The total vote cast, including that of Senator Dedon, Alliance, was 88, three more than a majority of the whole legislature, so the expected combine between the Democrats, Populists and disgruntled Republicans will not be able to accomplish anything. Senator Davis appeared and thanked his constituents for the honor conferred.

The Democrats will nominate Thomas Wilson, of Winona, with the view, apparently, of strengthening him with Mr. Cleveland, who is said to be thinking of offering him either the attorney generalship or a judgeship on the supreme bench, when a vacancy occurs.

The Populists are badly demoralized over the desertion of some of their number and will probably make no nomination, although Senator Donnelly is seeking an endorsement.

POPULISTS WILL BOLT.

Montana Third Party Men Receive Instructions from Party Leaders.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 9.—Within the past twenty-four hours the three Populists in the legislature have received instructions from the leaders of the party, presumably from Washington, not to vote for a Democrat for United States senator under any circumstances. It is also stated that the Populists in Wyoming and California have received exactly the same instructions, with the view of preventing the Democrats from securing an absolute majority in the senate. By holding out the Populists hope to get into a position to force the Democrats into promising some radical legislation on silver. It is known that two of the Montana Populists are intending which has come from the East, but the third, Beecher, has made no promises, and because he is in a position to elect a Democrat, a great deal of worry is felt as to his attitude. The Hamilton-Leech case cannot be settled until late in the session, unless the committee on elections declines to ask for power to summon witnesses. The name of neither of the gentlemen is on the roll of the house, and, except in the case of a deadlock, will probably not be able to vote until the senatorial question is settled. This leaves the legislature with 35 Democrats, 32 Republicans, 3 Populists and one seat vacant. If the Democrats can secure the vote of Beecher they can elect a senator. Without him they can do nothing until the settlement of the Choteau county contest.

CASEY MEN JUBILANT.

Ex-Governor Ordway Withdraws from the North Dakota Senatorial Race.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 8.—A dispatch from Washington announces that ex-Governor Ordway had concluded not to come here to make a fight for the senatorship. One of his friends in the legislature made a canvass of the members on Friday and Saturday and discovered that he could not secure more than six votes, and that a trip to Bismarck would be wholly useless. Candidate Smith, of Fargo, has also gone home, but it is announced that he will return on Monday. The friends of Senator Casey are jubilant and announce that they have twenty-five votes pledged already, and that the senator will certainly be nominated in caucus.

RAILROAD BILLS.

Fifteen of Them Introduced in the South Dakota Legislature.

PIERRE, Jan. 10.—Bills to compel railroads to furnish cars to private shippers; for special election for railroad commission; to prohibit any official from accepting railroad passes; to condemn sites for warehouses; to empower railroad commissioners to fix maximum rates—a new bill—and to compel railroads to connect with trains on cross roads at junction points, were introduced during the day, and fairly indicates the topic uppermost in the minds of legislators. Fifteen bills affecting railroads are already before the legislature, some of them radical, but generally of a conservative tone.

Both Candidates Confident.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Jan. 10.—The legislature will probably choose a United States senator Wednesday. Both Senator Allyn and Judge Turner are confident of winning.

is almost clogged by uraemic poisoning. This drug is the most powerful known to medical science and is never used except on desperate occasions. Repeated doses of this medicine were given him during the day and late in the afternoon. Mr. Blaine gradually fell into a semi-stupor, the sleep becoming more restful as it continued, and at 5 o'clock Dr Johnson said that Mr. Blaine's condition showed slight improvement over the morning and noon time. He left the house at 5 o'clock, Dr. Hyatt, coming almost immediately.

Suffered Three Relapses.

It is ascertained that there were three distinct relapses during the night. At 1 a. m. when he was first seized with heart failure, his physicians really thought the end had come, but by the aid of stimulants, chaffing and the usual accessories he rallied. He soon, however, relapsed into a stupor. Suddenly, at 5 a. m., he opened his eyes, which were as clear as they ever were, and seeing his physician at his side exclaimed:

"Doctor, I am glad you have come."

The tones of his voice were remarkably clear for a man in extremis. Five minutes later he again sank into a stupor and thirty minutes later he had a second attack of heart failure. Strange to relate, he again rallied only to be seized the third time, three hours later.

Midnight Bulletin.

At midnight Mr. Blaine's physicians issued the following bulletin:

"Mr. Blaine's condition has been more favorable during the afternoon. He is now, at midnight, sleeping quietly and shows a fair degree of strength. The probabilities are that no change for the worse will take place during the night, although no positive assurance can be given on this point.

UNEXPECTED AND MIRACULOUS.

Mr. Blaine Again Sinks Very Low, but Subsequently Rallies.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Another almost miraculous and unexpected improvement in the condition of Mr. Blaine occurred in the early hours of the morning. At 1 o'clock Doctors Johnston and Hyatt gave out a statement reciting that "Mr. Blaine passed a comfortable day until 8 o'clock, when he became not so well, and at this hour (1 a. m.) he is still losing strength."

Waited for the End.

At that hour the family were gathered in the reception room just across the hall from the sick man's chamber, fearing the worst and receiving no comfort or encouragement from the physicians. As the hour wore away, however, Mr. Blaine maintained about the same degree of vitality and seemed to rally slightly. At 2 o'clock the doctors informed the family that their patient was sleeping quietly and there were no indications of immediate dissolution and advised them to retire. They did so, and Dr. Hyatt returned home, leaving Dr. Johnston in charge of the patient.

Mr. Blaine's rest continued unbroken until daylight, and from all indications apparent outside, none of the watchers were disturbed at any time. At 3 a. m. Dr. Johnson responded to an inquiry at the door by a reporter, that Mr. Blaine was but at 5 o'clock he stated that there was no probability of the death occurring for some hours at least. An hour and a half later the doctor left the house for his own home, to gain a few hours of needed rest. Before leaving he made the following statement: "Since 1 a. m. Mr. Blaine has rested fairly well. He has slept almost continuously, and is now more comfortable. There is no immediate danger of death."

THE SAGE ONCE MORE.

Ignatius Donnelly Again Elected President of the Minnesota Alliance.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 7.—The Alliance convention was called to order at 9:30 a. m. The committee on constitution and resolutions was late in reporting. While waiting for them the convention listened to the report of Robert Eckford, secretary of the Farmers' Alliance Mutual Insurance company and of the Minnesota Alliance Storm association. Mr. Eckford reports the total number of policies to be 854, aggregating $928,255.50. The number of acres insured against hail, 23,111.

Secretary Stromberg, of the State Alliance, read his report, showing the organization of forty-eight new alliances within the past year, making a total of 1,427 alliances. The dues and membership fees received by the secretary amounted to $1,248.85, and in contributions $429.32.

The next business was the election of officers and Mr. Donnelly announced the fact to the convention, at the same time saying that he did not desire a reelection. The words were scarcely out of his mouth when a voice shouted, "I move Mr. Donnelly be re-elected by acclamation." This was done with enthusiasm and Mr. Donnelly accepted. A. L. Stromberg was elected secretary and H. P. Bjorge treasurer. L. C. Long, the People's candidate for congress in the Second districh, was elected tate lecturer.

GUILTY OF RIOT.

Strikers at the Duquesne Mills Found Guilty.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 10.—The verdict of the jury which has tried the thirteen strikers charged with riot at Duquesne steel works of the Carnegie company, was opened in court, and finds the accused guilty of riot; two of unlawful assemblage, and one acquitted.

A Gigantic Fake.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Jan. 6.—Two correspondents sent by The Citizen to Bakersville Wednesday, have returned here worn out and disgusted. They traveled nearly a hundred miles with horses and in a continuous snow storm. They say there has been no trouble whatever at Bakersville nor has there been any reason to expect any.

A DOCTOR'S ADVICE.

Things Which Belong to the Body Coverings for the Night.

The hours of repose are among the essentials of the many matters of routine which contribute in varying measures toward existence. With these hours go the clothing for the night.

Many ideas are prevalent in regard to what should be worn at the time when one ordinarily prepares for that repose which is to give energy for the following day. One person has an opinion that a certain form of night robe and a bed covering of particular construction or character are the proper things for health and for comfort. Ordinarily these convictions of thought are not worth a serious consideration. A little common sense goes a great way and carries with it nearly every thing that suggests a proper habiliment for the hours of sleeping.

In the first place there is the body garment proper, and this is from a purely sanitary standpoint best exemplified in the pajamas. Pajamas cover both body and limbs and furnish all necessary warmth and comfort. They are loose fitting and thoroughly comfortable, and so very easily adjusted that any one can put them on the body with that facility with which an ordinary night shirt is placed. Women who may be averse to adopting clothes which may outwardly appear manlike may find in health a goal well worth contesting, and in covering themselves with that style of garment which is thoroughly sensible.

The composition of the nightgown is a matter of taste. Canton flannel, linen and woolen goods stand at the head of the list; after these come the silks. One, however, which deserves special attention and which is equally suited for both sexes is the real china silk. This last is the best, but cannot be procured at prices within ordinary range of purse. If it can be bought it will give not only a necessary protection, but a comfortable and an enduring garment.

The matter of bed clothing is another thing deserving of thought, comprising that same relation to the body which the outer clothing should hold. A few simple rules should cover the entire ground, and they are comprised in four homely precepts: Use a hair or husk mattress, cover this mattress with a blanket, cover the blanket with a sheet, put a sheet, blankets and counterpane, or extras if you like, above this, and always bear in mind that a lowering of the body's temperature at night is not to be sanctioned.—New York World.

Blinding a Shark.

A successful diver must possess great courage and nerves of steel. Such a man, connected with a large wrecking company, was visiting the pearl fisheries in the gulf of California. On one of his trips in quest of the pearl oyster he had a narrow escape from a fearful death.

He had been instructed never to stir from the bottom until he had looked up and around. Fortunately he heeded the advice. Having filled his bag he glanced quickly about, and caught sight of a huge shovel nosed shark watching him.

In an emergency men think fast. Near the diver was a large rock. He moved quickly to the other side of it, hoping to dodge the ferocious monster. But the maneuver did not work: the shark watched every movement, changing his position by a slight motion of his powerful tail.

Time was precious, and the diver conceived the idea of blinding the shark by stirring up the mud. Under cover of that he might escape. He worked for dear life, and had the water thick with mud in less than half a minute.

Slipping around the rock again he rose to the surface, having barely strength enough to reach the side of the boat, and was hauled on board just as the voracious man eater made a rush for him.—Frank Leslie's Magazine.

Two Extremes.

There are many things which women do not approve in men, as there are doubtless many faults in the moral and mental composition of women which are distasteful to men.

The violence and abusiveness, the lack of dignity, and even those personal differences which are emphasized with blows it would be painful to see introduced into an assemblage of women. Nevertheless there is no reason why the other extreme of excessive amiability should be aimed at, with the caressing and petting that have their proper and only place within the four walls and the strict seclusion of home. It is a far cry from the masculine turbulence of a political primary to the excessive sweetness of the too "womanly" convention; but there lies between the two a golden mean, where courtesy and refinement and unceasing regard for the feelings of others are perfectly compatible with official dignity and refreshing good sense.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Venetian Hospitality.

Whatever might have been said against the Venetians, they were a hospitable people—this, too, in small as well as in great matters. When, for example, in 1476, an ambassador from the khan of Tartary visited the city, and it was known that the khan and his suit carried but one shirt apiece in their bags, the senate formally voted twenty ducats, that they might be provided with additional shirts, which were accordingly made "alla tartarescha," and presented. We can imagine how the good councilors and citizens would enjoy this kindly little jest.—National Review.

A Retort on Black Friday.

On that historic day in Wall street following the memorable Black Friday Gould's old partner, shaking his finger in the millionaire's face, shouted:

"I'll live to see the day, sir, when you'll have to earn a living by going around this street with a hand organ and a monkey."

"Maybe you will, Henry; maybe you will," was the retort. "And when I want a monkey, Henry, I'll send for you."—Exchange.

IT is said that Donnelly favors Merriam for the United States Senate. We shouldn't wonder. We never saw anything yet that Merriam wanted that Donnelly did not favor.

SENATOR MCMILLAN has introduced in the state senate a bill to limit the expenditure of money of candidates for public office to a specified amount, and to prevent corruption of the elective franchise. Why not introduce a bill to limit a man's grocery account or his meat bill?

THE unostentatious way in which Governor Nelson takes hold of the reins of government is truly commendable—no inaugural ball, no fuss, no frills, no feathers, but just a plain, simple businesslike way of gathering up the reins and driving right along in the interests of common every day people. All this is tough on the "sassiety" folks of the Twin cities but highly appreciated by everybody else.

THE Great Northern railway is now completed to the Pacific coast, the last spike being driven on the west side of the Cascade mountains. This railroad system now embraces 4,630 miles of road, and it had its origin in the St. Paul and Pacific, a line nine miles long, built in 1863. But it made little progress until J. J. Hill secured an interest in it, and then it began to reach out into new fields, and has been one of the greatest factors in the development of this northwestern country.

SPEAKING of the Message, F. E. Barnum in the Sauk Center Avalanche, says:

The Christmas and New Year's numbers of "The Message," a non-sectarian paper published at Crookston by Rev. R. H. Battey, are at hand. Both are chock full of excellent reading matter as well as being replete with business cards. The mechanical work, executed at the JOURNAL office in Crookston, is most exquisite. Long may it live and be the carrier of good will and good cheer.

THE state alliance met last week and re-elected Donnelly president without a kick, and roasted Doc Fish to a turn, and yet Doc Fish has come nearer to their motto to "keep in the middle of the road" than the Hon. Ignatius. Fish opposed fusion —Donnelly urged it and fusion defeated what little chance of success the People's party ticket had of winning. Donnelly is the old man of the sea who will ride the People's party to death as he did the alliance. He has never done a practical thing for either—never even suggested a practical remedy for existing evils and he never will.

NORMAN county is a pretty fair sample of the adhesiveness of the people's party. They elected the entire county board, showing that they were clearly in the majority and yet Knute Nelson received a majority of the votes of the county. If they were so fully impregnated with the idea that their party was the only party representing principles that were worth anything, why do they vote for the representative of any other party? The fact is they are beginning to see through the professions of demagogues and are getting tired of it.

The JOURNAL received this week a communication from Euclid signed, "American Farmer," which arrived too late for this issue. While the writer is not in full accord with the views of the JOURNAL we believe him to be honest and sincere and as such entitled to a hearing. Whatever else we are we are not so bigoted as to suppose that all we say and do is the right and the only thing to say and do and that everybody must necessarily accept it simply because we say it is the right thing to do. The JOURNAL is a firm believer in the right of the people to a full and free discussion of public questions and in the majority rule.

THE Minneapolis Times is greatly disappointed at the result of the caucas last week that insures the return of C. K. Davis to the United States Senate, and, to vent its spite, gives that gentleman a good deal of space in its Sunday issue. It also makes a great howl because the republican party is not attending to its business in a way to suit the Times. Very evidently a case of sour grapes, as the Times was one of those credulous sheets that hoped, through fusion, to land a democratic senator in the capitol at Washington, but the little scheme didn't work and ever since its failure the Times has been trying to stir up sedition in the republican camp, defeat Davis and elect some weak man of mediocre talents in his place. It won't work this trip.

ALL THE TIME MONEY!

And now Donnelly is calling upon the farmers of Minnesota for "more money" to start another paper. At his behest they bled nobly to establish and build up one and now that paper insists on their standing by their guns and resisting fusion; now that Donnelly, the great fusionist cannot control it any longer he blandly calls on the farmers to throw away the money they have already invested and start a paper that Donnelly can control. If Mr. Donnelly wants a paper to advocate his peculiar views, what's the matter with him putting up for the luxury himself?

J. B. WEAVER went south to speak last fall, was rotten-egged and insulted as was also the lady who was with him on his speaking tour. Last week he appeared before the Minnesota alliance meeting and told the farmers how nobly the southern people had done during the past campaign. The writer spent some time in the south during the war and for some time thereafter and knows full well the spirit of intolerance for anything northern that prevails there, and knows that a free and fair ballot is a thing wholly unknown in that country. In some sections it is almost as much as a man's life is worth to even engage in a discussion of public questions—unless his views fully coincide with the narrow-minded views of his hearers, as is proven by Gen. Weaver's own personal experience there during the past campaign, and yet Weaver has the effrontery to appear before Minnesota farmers and brag of southern methods! Does he think us a set of chumps who never read? And yet such stuff as that and kindred hog-wash is freely given to farmers to hold them in line for the Peoples' party.

YOUR true populist insists that the Peoples' party is a party of principles, and in order to succeed they say they must stick to the Peoples' party through thick and thin. This is one of their fundamental principles, and yet Donnelly, in the last campaign entered into a scheme of fusion with one of the old parties simply and solely for the avowed purpose of securing offices for those who fused. It was not claimed that this fusion was for the interest of the rank and file of the Peoples' party. It was simply a scheme to get office. Dr. Fish fought the scheme with all the power of his bright intellect with the ferocity of a tiger and with what result? Why, the Peoples' party men relegate him to oblivion and elevate Donnelly to the highest pinnacle of fame by unanimously re-electing him to the presidency, and yet there are those who tell you that the signs of the dissolution of the Peoples' party are not plainly visible. Fish and Donnelly were about all there was in that party during the last campaign. Fish and Donnelly are divided, and a house divided against itself cannot stand.

REPRESENTATIVES of the southern and central portions of the state are in St. Paul as thick as flies round a molasses cask looking after the appointments that the governor has to make and urging their candidates upon him. This portion of the state, composing about one-fourth of its entire area, has had one appointive office given it in twenty years and to a man up a tree it would look like heretofore we had been somewhat neglected in this particular. While Norman, Polk, Marshal and Kittson counties are more vitally interested than any other counties in the state in the workings of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners we have never as yet had a representative upon it. One reason why this is so is the fact that heretofore, appointments upon this board have been made solely upon political grounds, without a due regard to the interests of the service and in many instances the positions have been traded off long before election. Governor Nelson occupies a peculiar position in that he was elected without having made a solitary pledge except to discharge the duties of the office to the best of his ability in the interests of the whole people so he can make these appointments as they should be made, and we are told that he intends to appoint a Polk county man on the board. For the first time since the writer has been familiar with Minnesota politics the republican party has been obliged to elect a governor whom the majority of the people wanted and in order to induce that man to accept the nomination, they had to submit to his terms, which were that he should make no pledges beforehand. Mr. Nelson's reputation was established; he did not need the republican party to make him a great man, but the republican party did need just such a man as Mr. Nelson and was wise enough to appreciate the fact and take him without a pledge, so it is that he is the first governor we have ever had who has been in an entirely independent position untrammelled by entangling alliances. Being from the country he is better prepared to understand the needs of the country than some we have had, and the best part of it all is that he has a strong disposition to do so—something that has been lacking in some cases heretofore. If the people of this state do not find that they have builded wiser than they knew when they elected Nelson, we will miss our guess.

READ THE BIDS.

In another column will be found the minutes of the meeting of the new county board, held January 3d, and also a copy of the different bids for county printing. It doesn't take an expert to decide which is the lowest, and the people can judge for themselves.

In showing up the county printing deal the JOURNAL has no sore spots to rub. It simply wants to show to its people's party friends that the men they have elected as county commissioners are not carrying out the pledges which they and the people's party leaders made to the people. During every campaign these populist leaders go around the county howling about the corruption, the crookedness and the jobbery perpetrated by the republican party and the republican office holders. A republican by the very nature of things, they say, cannot be honest, but all the virtue and all the honesty and all the goodness in the human system is crowded into the advocates of the principles of the people's party. And it is to show to the rank and file of the People's party—who are honest and sincere in their cry for "reform"—that they are being constantly humbugged, misled and sold out by a lot of designing politicians, who cry "reform" only for the sake of office, that the JOURNAL is devoting space to this matter.

Take this printing deal, for instance. On the very first day this new board met they sanctioned a job whereby the county will be the loser to a considerable extent. Instead of waiting until the bids were read, and then awarding the contract on its merits, it was all fixed up beforehand who should have the work, and the price to be paid cut no figure whatever.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Governor Nelson's message submitted to the legislature last week, shows, as the JOURNAL has all along insisted, that Governor Nelson is fully and heartily in sympathy with the common people. It is a practical, sound document full of wise suggestions which if carried out by the legislature will be fraught with much good to the people of the state. His ideas on the wheat question are excellent and should be read by every farmer in the state, and we predict that the character of his appointments on the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners will utterly disprove the charge made by the Globe and other democratic sheets that Knute Nelson was controlled by the railroads of the state. Mr. Nelson will do his best to appoint only such men as the farmers of the state will approve of, but these men will not be cranks—men who would at once destroy the roads if they could. All the people have to do is to make known to Governor Nelson what they desire to have done and they will find him with them every time in any reasonable request. The governor's message is one of the most able state papers ever placed before the legislature and the people will find—if they do not know it now—that they made no mistake when they elected Nelson.

THE constitutional amendment that was carried at the last election forbids any special legislation that can be covered by a general law. This puts a damper on the county division scheme and must be a great relief to those of our legislators who pledged themselves to support every side of the question for votes. We can imagine some of them laughing in their sleeves when they see how slick they get out of an uncomfortable position.

THAT the present legislature is a business organization is clearly shown in the expeditious manner in which they organized and got down to business. That they intend to be economical is shown in the fact that they intend to lop off all unnecessary offices, unless clerkships and all that generally given out for political favors rendered, and the general nature of the bills already introduced shows that they mean business.

THE Times took occasion, in its article in defense of the county board in awarding the printing to it, to make the following statement:

"The fact of the matter is that the rate at which the work was awarded to either one of the three papers would not amount to more than one-half of what the JOURNAL bid for it, and speaking for the Times we do not boast when we say that if the thing were reversed and the Times bid was twice as high as that of its contemporary, the county would still be getting more for the money invested by awarding the printing to us."

In those few lines are displayed two of Editor McKenzie's strongest characteristics—vanity and verdancy. He has the temerity to make the most palpable exaggerations, and he has the simplicity to think that the public can be deceived by his braggadocio.

The JOURNAL has no fight with the Times—hasn't said an ill word against it, and has nothing but the kindliest feelings toward our contemporary, and the writer has on more than one occasion said a kind word for it when its merits were being critized. And when the Times goes out of its way to say that the JOURNAL makes insinuations which were false—knowing that every word the JOURNAL said about the deal was true—only shows that a love for truth is not one of the weaknesses of our esteemed contemporary.

THERE will be but one appointment made in the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners in the place of J. P. Williams. As yet nobody has called the turn on who that will be. It will not be Williams, but what's the matter with a prominent Moorhead attorney? He can have it if he will accept it.

A frightful accident is reported from Eischischek, in the province of Wilna. The boiler of the public baths at that place exploded and six persons were instantly killed and fifteen mortally injured.

A Story of Millionaire Lick.

James Lick, of San Francisco, was an unlovable millionaire, of whom a curious story is told. When a poor youth in Pennsylvania he was rejected by the daughter of a wealthy miller on account of his poverty. He vowed at that time that he would some day build a mill that would far surpass that of his sweetheart's father. Many years later he kept his vow and constructed at San Jose a mill of highly polished California wood valued at $200,000. During his lifetime Mr. Lick had few friends and apparently cared for none. He lived plainly and was seen very little in public. The larger part of his fortune was left to charities and public institutions, one notable bequest being the sum of $60,000 for the erection of a statue to Key, the author of the "Star Spangled Banner."

While many institutions profited by Mr. Lick's posthumous gifts, his most famous achievement was the establishment of the Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton, under the management of the University of California. Mr. Lick's body was placed in 1887 under the base of the pier sustaining the great telescope. —New York World.

Welcome Rain.

The author of "Round the Compass in Australia" had put up for the night with the manager of a stock farm. It was a time of drought, and the evening passed amid stories of frightful suffering and losses. The manager thought it would be hardly possible to hold out a week longer. "Shady Jack's well is done," he said, "and the Frenchman's tank is empty." His wife tried to encourage him.

"Hope for the best," she said.

"My oath!" answered the manager, "but the best things never come off."

"Yes, Dick," responded his wife, "but the worst things never come off."

Night after night this man had walked the room, alternating between prayers and curses, as each day's record was another thousand sheep dead, another empty well, until at last he had come to this grim courage of despair.

"I shouldn't care so much," he said to the traveler, "but then my wife, my girls in there!"

He drew his sleeves across his eyes and bowed his head on the table. For ten minutes he sat there so. Then the visitor saw him raise his head, start, spring to his feet and listen with strained attention. What was that? Something pinged on the corrugated roof overhead.

"Rain, rain, rain!" he shouted as he rushed outside and fell on his knees with his hands stretched out toward the clouded sky.

"Thank God! Thank God! Wife! Girls! Mary!—Rain!"

Even so. The flood gates of the sky were opened, and before morning the visitor was helping to put up a dyke on one side of the house. The march of destruction was staid.

GOVERNOR NELSON.

MINNESOTA'S NEW CHIEF OFFICER STEPS INTO THE HARNESS.

He Was Inaugurated at Noon Wednesday, Jan. 4, and His First Message Given to the Public. Also Governor Merriam's Last Message.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—Governor-Elect Knute Nelson was inaugurated at noon, Wednesday, in the presence of the retiring state officers, both branches of the legislature, and state supreme court. After the inaugural ceremonies, Governor Merriam's last message to the legislature was read and then came the reading of Governor Nelson's first message to the people of Minnesota. A concise summary of the message follows:

Financially, the state is prosperous and sound. Assessed valuation, $600,000,000; indebtedness, $2,155,000. Balance in treasury Nov. 30, 1892, $1,688,946.

State Institutions.

Penal institutions of state are in splendid condition. Prison population has not increased during the past three years. The St. Cloud Reformatory needs more buildings and facilities for working the men there confined.

Manufacture of binding twine in Stillwater prison is referred to with gratification because it will always afford farmers protection against unjust combinations among twine manufacturers.

Decrease of insanity will relieve the state from the expense of more buildings at insane hospitals, but $38,500 should be given at once for completing southwest wing of the third asylum at Fergus Falls.

Soldiers' Home.

He finds the Soldiers' home at Minnehaha Falls in a flourishing condition, financially and otherwise, and all needy soldiers of worthy record are provided for.

The state university occupies a high position in advanced learning. New departments of law and medicine are in successful operation. More instructors are needed and additional funds should be set aside for the purpose.

Our common school system should receive attention, so that the best books at lowest prices might be provided. Summer training schools should be maintained.

Judicial Districts.

Judicial districts should be arranged so that some judges would not be overworked while others have nothing to do.

The dairy school has a salary roll of $15,000—too much, and the amount should be reduced to $6,000.

A constitutional amendment should be adopted providing for taxation of mining express, and sleeping car companies.

Wrongs Imposed on Farmers.

Governor Nelson's message deals at great length, and in detail, with the wrong imposed upon farmers at country railroad stations by grain buyers, in grading wheat and in dockage, and this legislature is strongly urged to frame laws that will afford farmers as good protection at country stations as can be had at Duluth, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

MERRIAM'S LAST MESSAGE.

Governor Merriam's last message urged the legislature to avoid making laws to benefit special classes or interests.

He recommended that congress be petitioned to suspend all emigration to the United States during 1893 so as to protect our people against cholera. Also urged that all laws governing emigration being revised, looking to better protection of our people from contact and competition with objectionable foreign elements.

A Blow at Dead Heading.

Reviewing the work done by the railroad and warehouse commission, the retiring governor urges that the legislature should enact laws that will effectually stop dead-head transportation; and that our state railroad laws should be amended so that the railroad commission would be able of its own motives to enquire into the rates and general practices of railroads without being compelled to wait until formal complaint is made.

The State Grain Laws.

Abuses of the state grain laws are pointed out. There is reason to believe that at many points outside the large cities great wrongs have been done farmers in grading wheat and in dockage. To remedy these wrongs the railroad and warehouse commission believes all warehouses at country points should be placed under the general supervision of the commission, so that when complaints are made they may be speedily and thoroughly investigated and reforms applied. Governor Merriam endorses the plan in his message.

State Institutions

The governor urges that provisions be made for leasing convict labor on long time contracts. The binding twine industry in the Stillwater prison is in good condition and will become of advantage to Minnesota farmers.

The lunacy commission should have greater powers and the insane asylums improved, especially at Fergus Falls.

The state board of health should have more money at its command.

A new state capitol building should be provided for; the world's fair commission should have additional support, and state swamp lands should be deeded to whoever is entitled to them.

Financial institutions should be required to pay a small fee to pay for help needed by the bank examiner.

A State Park.

The question of a state park around the headwaters of the Mississippi river should be settled. The state can now acquire the park site, 19,701 acres, for almost nothing.

State finances are in satisfactory condition. The state treasurer should give bond for a larger amount. The state tax levy for next two years might be reduced by eight-tenths of a mill, and thus save $480,000 each year for 1894-95.

The Land of Flowers.

Three hundred and eighty-one years ago, the romantic Ponce de Leon, searching for the fabled fountain of youth, set foot on a land so adorned with blossoms of every kind and hue that he named it Florida—Land of Flowers. To most Northerners, Florida suggests only a refuge for invalids and consumptives, or a place whence come oranges and other semi-tropic fruits. The state, however, has something of a history. Where Ponce de Leon landed, was founded St. Augustine, the oldest settled town in the United States, and now a famous winter resort. In 1763 Florida was ceded by Spain to Great Britian, in exchange or as a ransom for Cuba, on which the British lion had laid his paw. In 1783, at the close of our Revolutionary war, England ceded the territory back to Spain, probably not desiring a possession surrounded by the rebellious colonies. In 1819 Spain ceded Florida to the United States, and she was admitted to the Union in 1845. Since the war of the Rebellion, material development has been rapid in Florida—railroads have been built, much northern capital investigated, and great improvement manifested. If intending to make a trip to Florida—and now is the time—be sure that your railroad ticket is via the Burlington, which affords choice of routes by either Chicago or St. Louis. Apply to any coupon ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

C. E. Misner, the good natured tonsoral artist, of your city, took a run up to see us Tuesday. Charlie is a great believer in the future growth of Crookston.

The Kind of Immigrant We Want.

Anent the immigration question now before congress the New York Press hits the nail on the head thusly: "On the subject of immigration the republican party in the Senate and House should be guided by a wise and cautious policy with full regard to the future prosperity as well as the present welfare of the United States. The absolute exclusion of immigrants would be a paralyzing blow to the growing communities of the west, and would work no little harm to import interests in the north and south. It would make such enterprises as the construction of great bridges and aqueducts, of lines of railway and tunnels, the improvement of rivers and other undertakings involving severe and arduous manual labor much more difficult, and it would put an end in large degree to the building up of new and pioneer communities. It would mean loss of work for multitudes of Americans, to whom the labor of the immigrants has brought and is bringing remunerative employment.

It is evident that the immigration problem is not to be solved, as the Gordian knot was cut by a single stroke. It should be dealt with prudently and in a conservative manner, with a comprehensive regard for all the interests involved. The immigrant has accomplished achievements for the benefit of this country by the side of which the evils of immigration are infinitesimal. The Brooklyn Bridge, the great New York aqueduct—in fact, every great building in the city of New York—were, so far as the coarser part of the construction was concerned, built by immigrant labor, directed by American genius and skill. The railroads of the country have been constructed by the toil and sweat of the foreigner who has come to these shores. Who will deny that these undertakings have been of the greatest benefit to the people of the United States, that they have made cities possible, where all was desert before and have opened means of livelihood for millions of Americans?

Let the undesirable foreigner be excluded by a strict and thorough consular inspection abroad; but let the worthy, the industrious and the educated immigrant understand that he is welcome to these shores."

BLAINE IS WORSE.

ONCE MORE ON THE VERGE OF THE GREAT UNKNOWN.

Three Distinct Relapses Experienced by the Patient During the Night—His Physicians, by Hard Work, Succeed in Delaying Final Dissolution.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The news that James G. Blaine had once more passed into the valley of the shadow of death, and that even those who had been most sanguine in anticipation now held no hope of his recovery, became known in Washington, and by means of press bulletins to the country at large early Sunday morning. Notwithstanding the hopeful views which the family and the attending physicians, by their direction, had from time to time given out for publication, no expectation of Mr. Blaine's ultimate recovery has been entertained by any one in a position to acquire knowledge of the real facts of his case since the issue of the significant bulletin of Dec. 17.

His First Sinking Spell.

Sunday, Dec. 18, just three weeks ago, there occurred that sudden failure of the heart's action which for hours left the patient trembling on the verge of death and which broke down much of the suppression of facts that had heretofore been maintained and elicited admissions which precluded any hope of recovery or even of any medical amelioration of his condition. Many more or less well founded assertions of failing vitality and dangerous relapses have since then found publicity, but none of them have been officially admitted until now. On the contrary, the daily statements of the sick man's condition having been so progressively on a scale of "a little better" every morning that, had they been grounded on a substantial basis, would long since have landed the patient on a pinnacle of robust health.

A Bulletin Issued.

At noon the following was given out: "Saturday Mr. Blaine lost strength, but Saturday night his weakness became more decided for a few hours, and he seemed in danger of a speedy termination. Since morning, however, he is somewhat stronger, and at the present moment shows more decided evidences of rallying. But no great hope can be felt unless the improvement shall become more marked than at present and be continued for some hours. His present symptoms are connected with an irregular and feeble action of the heart."

The Doctors Summoned.

The doctor's bulletin, alarming as it was, left many facts to be supplied by outside inquiries. It was about midnight that his condition became so alarming that the trained nurse, who is constantly at his bedside, had Dr. Johnston hurriedly summoned. Dr. Johnston arrived at 1 o'clock and found Mr. Blaine sinking rapidly. He worked over him for some time before any signs of recovery became evident. His condition was so alarming that the family looked for the end before morning and remained awake and within immediate call of his bedside all night. The powerful heart restoratives applied by the doctors are stated to have been the most potent known to medical science and were successful in rallying and making more steady the feeble and fitful so that by the time the church goers passed the family residence on Lafayette square Mr. Blaine's condition was a shade better. He was still, however, so weak and prostrated that the doctors did not dare to leave him, at the same time fearing that another attack and the final summons might come at any moment. At 7 o'clock Dr. Hyatt, the other physician, was summoned. To a reporter who intercepted him on his way to breakfast, Dr. Johnson said that Mr. Blaine at that hour was in a really dangerous condition. Dr. Johnston is a very conservative man and this was the most decided statement he has ever made respecting Mr. Blaine's health. Mr. Blaine, he said, began to grow worse with the oncoming of the night. Mr. Blaine sank as the vital forces of nature ebbed. He was at that time so low that there was cause for apprehension of the worst.

Pulsations of the Heart,

In response to an inquiry as to Mr. Blaine's chances for rallying as compared with the dangerous elements in the case, Dr. Johnston stated that the probabilities were in the direction of the patient's failing.

Prepared for the Worst.

Representative and Mrs. Hitt, intimate personal friends of the family, were about the earliest callers of the day. They learned from members of the family that Mr. Blaine had passed a very bad night and that the worst was to be feared, and then went away. Mr. Hitt was heartsick at the news, and his face showed plainly the grief he felt at the coming dissolution of his long time friend. Mr. Hitt said Mr. Blaine had rallied from his temporary depression which occurred during the night and both the family and the physicians hoped he might recover some of his lost ground. Mr. Hitt sorrowfully admitted that he did not think either Mrs. Blaine or other members of the family hoped for an ultimate recovery and said that Mrs. Blaine was evidently prepared for the worst.

A Slight Rally.

All the afternoon visitors were coming and going from the Blaine mansion, news of his dangerous condition having traveled with great rapidity in official and social circles. Towards evening Mr. Blaine rallied slightly from his attack of the morning. This rally was effected by the doctors administering nitro-glycerine to stimulate the action of the heart, which, it is believed, is almost clogged by uraemic poisoning. This drug is the most powerful known to medical science and is never used except on desperate occasions. Repeated doses of this medicine were given him during the day and late in the afternoon. Mr. Blaine gradually fell into a semi-stupor, the sleep becoming more restful as it continued, and at 5 o'clock Dr Johnson said that Mr. Blaine's condition showed slight improvement over the morning and noon time. He left the house at 5 o'clock, Dr. Hyatt, coming almost immediately.

Suffered Three Relapses.

It is ascertained that there were three distinct relapses during the night. At 1 a. m. when he was first seized with heart failure, his physicians really thought the end had come, but by the aid of stimulants, chaffing and the usual accessories he rallied. He soon, however, relapsed into a stupor. Suddenly, at 5 a. m., he opened his eyes, which were as clear as they ever were, and seeing his physician at his side exclaimed:

"Doctor, I am glad you have come."

The tones of his voice were remarkably clear for a man in extremis. Five minutes later he again sank into a stupor and thirty minutes later he had a second attack of heart failure. Strange to relate, he again rallied only to be seized the third time, three hours later.

Midnight Bulletin.

At midnight Mr. Blaine's physicians issued the following bulletin:

"Mr. Blaine's condition has been more favorable during the afternoon. He is now, at midnight, sleeping quietly and shows a fair degree of strength. The probabilities are that no change for the worse will take place during the night, although no positive assurance can be given on this point.

UNEXPECTED AND MIRACULOUS.

Mr. Blaine Again Sinks Very Low, but Subsequently Rallies.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Another almost miraculous and unexpected improvement in the condition of Mr. Blaine occurred in the early hours of the morning. At 1 o'clock Doctors Johnston and Hyatt gave out a statement reciting that "Mr. Blaine passed a comfortable day until 8 o'clock, when he became not so well, and at this hour (1 a. m.) he is still losing strength."

Waited for the End.

At that hour the family were gathered in the reception room just across the hall from the sick man's chamber, fearing the worst and receiving no comfort or encouragement from the physicians. As the hour wore away, however, Mr. Blaine maintained about the same degree of vitality and seemed to rally slightly. At 2 o'clock the doctors informed the family that their patient was sleeping quietly and there were no indications of immediate dissolution and advised them to retire. They did so, and Dr. Hyatt returned home, leaving Dr. Johnston in charge of the patient.

Mr. Blaine's rest continued unbroken until daylight, and from all indications apparent outside, none of the watchers were disturbed at any time. At 8 a. m. Dr. Johnson responded to an inquiry at the door by a reporter, that Mr. Blaine was but at 5 o'clock he stated that there was no probability of the death occurring for some hours at least. An hour and a half later the doctor left the house for his own home, to gain a few hours of needed rest. Before leaving he made the following statement: "Since 1 a. m. Mr. Blaine has rested fairly well. He has slept almost continuously, and is now more comfortable. There is no immediate danger of death."

Likely to Die at Any Time,

THE SAGE ONCE MORE.

Ignatius Donnelly Again Elected President of the Minnesota Alliance.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 7.—The Alliance convention was called to order at 9:30 a. m. The committee on constitution and resolutions was late in reporting. While waiting for them the convention listened to the report of Robert Eckford, secretary of the Farmers' Alliance Mutual Insurance company and of the Minnesota Alliance Storm association. Mr. Eckford reports the total number of policies to be 854, aggregating $928,255.50. The number of acres insured against hail, 23,111.

Secretary Stromberg, of the State Alliance, read his report, showing the organization of forty-eight new alliances within the past year, making a total of 1,427 alliances. The dues and membership fees received by the secretary amounted to $1,248.85, and in contributions $429.32.

The next business was the election of officers and Mr. Donnelly announced the fact to the convention, at the same time saying that he did not desire a re-election. The words were scarcely out of his mouth when a voice shouted, "I move Mr. Donnelly be re-elected by acclamation." This was done with enthusiasm and Mr. Donnelly accepted. A. L. Stromberg was elected secretary and H. P. Bjorge treasurer. L. C. Long, the People's candidate for congress in the Second districh, was elected tate lecturer.

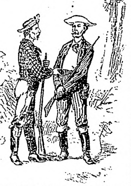
CHAPTER IX.

What a strange, wicked sentiment is that of avarice! The thirst for wealth will turn brother against brother, father against son—separate man and wife.

The story told by the dying hunter had been received by Harkins and Taylor without question. He had said there was gold enough for both, but does one ever get too much wealth? If there were millions to divide neither wanted to divide it. They had been friendly before the hunter called them in to give his dying statement. They had left the dead body hating each other. To be just, however, it should be said that Harkins had less avarice and bitterness than Taylor. He was better educated—he had the refining influences of his daughter Bess—he had less hope of being able to come at the great store of wealth. Indeed, he sometimes argued that it would be best to give information to the whole train and let all share alike and be satisfied. Had Taylor met him half way in his advances he would have choked down the spirit of selfishness and forced himself to feel that the half would content him.

But Taylor, who was a single man and a rough specimen of the American frontiersman, openly betrayed his distrust and ill will. He looked upon the Englishman as a robber. He would never consent to divide the gold with him. He might have to share it with others, but never with him.



"We are pards, old man—half and half on that gold."

When the train was attacked the presence of peril drove away all other thoughts but that of defense, but only for a few hours. The thought came to both men after a time: "Suppose he is killed and I am spared! All will then be mine!" Harkins went no further than to indulge the wicked thought. Taylor looked about him and whispered to himself that if opportunity came he would fire the bullet himself which should make him sole owner of the contents of the cave.

Men who have been drifting in mid-ocean on a bit of wreckage, suffering with hunger, thirst and exposure, and having not the faintest hope of rescue, have yet planned wicked and revengeful things.

When the last charge was made Taylor had the Englishman and his daughter on his left hand and only a few feet away. Under cover of the smoke he deliberately fired upon them, hoping to kill them both. One of his bullets grazed the girl's shoulder and another went through Harkins' hat, but Providence willed that such a monstrous crime should not be perpetrated. Taylor had no sooner made the attempt than a sudden thought brought a smile to his face and he smote his breast and muttered:

"Fool that I am to have forgotten the contents of that box! Let them live! Let them go with me after the gold! Let them aid me to secure it, and then—then"——

He had attempted murder. He was planning something far more horrible than that.

It was midnight when the train reached the forks of the Cheyenne and went into camp. From that point it is only sixty miles to Custer's peak in the Black Hills. It was thought best to remain in camp for a couple of days and refit and recruit. The major in command of the cavalry was an old Indian fighter and plainsman, and before the camp broke up he called a general consultation. He impressed it upon one and all that their safety forbade breaking up into smaller parties than ten or twelve men. The Indians were thoroughly aroused and alert, and while they might be repulsed occasionally they would be almost certain to overcome small detachments of gold seekers. No camp must be left unguarded by day or night. No man must relax his vigilance for an hour if he wished to preserve his scalp.

A portion of the troops would remain at the forks for the summer as a rallying point. The other half would follow the south fork of the Cheyenne up to the neighborhood of Harney's peak and there form another camp. They might make occasional scouts, but they would not be strong enough to defend the people rushing into the country.

The major's remarks resulting in a general reorganization of the train, many of the hunters who had come thus far with the soldiers had now to band together and depend upon themselves. Out of all three parties were organized and put under the leadership of good men. The first party consisted of the old captain of the train, Joe, Harkins, Taylor and seven other good men, Bess going of course, but not figuring in the numerical strength. It had been agreed beforehand that the men should be drawn by lot, and it was a curious bit of fate that drew both Harkins and Taylor for one party when both were earnestly hoping to be separated. There were enough to give the other parties equal strength or a little more, and each and every man was sworn to support and obey the chosen leaders. A fair division was made of weapons, ammunition and necessaries of life, and each party selected its own route. In the first party all were agreed for Custer's peak, while the other two decided to strike in farther to the west.

On the third day all the parties moved, and within an hour after the first wagon pulled out the soldiers had the camp to themselves. It was the same sterile country that had been met with on the other side of the river, cut up by the same dry gullies and confused by the same monotonous ridges, and each party, now that it numbered so few, realized its peril more fully as it went forward.

The distance between the river and the foothills was covered in three days of easy traveling and without actual sight of a redskin, although signs were encountered to prove that the party was being watched day and night. The wagons pushed over the foothills, wound up a long and narrow valley, and when they went into camp Custer's peak seemed to lean right over them. Here was a spring, abundance of grass and a fairly defensive position, and it was decided to make a permanent camp.

No prospectors had come this way, so far as could be ascertained, and here was as good a spot to try for the gold as any other. It was decided that two men should always be on guard during the night and that four should remain during the day while the other six went forth in parties of two to prospect.

Three days passed without anything of unusual moment. The prospectors found enough to encourage them, and not an Indian had been seen. On the fourth day it so happened that Harkins and Taylor were named to go together as one of the prospecting parties. Each would have promptly declined the other's companionship had he not realized that an explanation would have been demanded by the others. What could be said in explanation?

"I am sorry you are to go out with that man," said Bess as her father was making his preparations. "I have an intuition that he hates us both and would like to do us harm."

"Pooh! child; but what put such thoughts into your head?"

"He never looks at me without a scowl, and I have seen him glare at you as if he thirsted for your life. If you must go out with him, watch him well. I feel that he will seek to do you some grievous injury."

"I can't say that I like the man over much," replied the father, "and he doesn't seem to be any too much taken with me; but we shall have no quarrel, and I shall take good care of myself."

As he was about to leave camp Joe beckoned him aside, and while pretending to examine his rifle quietly said:

"I am sorry you are going out with Taylor. I don't think he likes you, and he can be very disagreeable when he wants to. Be on the alert for any plan he may have."

"You don't think he would assassinate me, do you?" asked Harkins in surprise.

"If there is any reason why he wants to today will furnish him plenty of opportunities," replied Joe. "Lookout for Indians, but lookout for Taylor just as sharp."

It may be imagined that Harkins left the camp in an unenviable frame of mind, but Taylor's demeanor soon gave him relief. The man was elated, good natured and garrulous. He had not been drinking, for the only whisky in camp was in charge of the captain; but he acted greatly like one who had a glass too much. Not a word had passed between them about the treasure since they separated over the old hunter's body. They were scarcely clear of the camp when Taylor slapped Harkins on the back, extended his hand for a shake and exclaimed:

"At last we are alone and can talk over our secret. I've sometimes felt as if I must talk or bust. We are pards, old man—half and half on that gold."

"So we are," replied Harkins. "I have not breathed a word to any soul and I suppose you have been as discreet?"

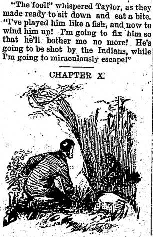
"You bet! There's enough for us two, but not enough for any more. In a day or two we must make a hunt for that cave, and if the gold is there we must get it away."

As they penetrated into the mountains, closely scanning rock and soil and occasionally stopping to investigate, they chatted like the best of friends, and Harkins reproached himself for his harsh opinion of the man. He appeared warm hearted and fair minded, and when he magnanimously offered to take Joe into the secret and let him share alike with them, Harkins wondered how he and Joe and Bessie could have been so mistaken.

Noon came.

"The fool!" whispered Taylor, as they made ready to sit down and eat a bite. "I've played him like a fish, and now to wind him up! I'm going to fix him so that he'll bother me no more! He's going to be shot by the Indians, while I'm going to miraculously escape!"

CHAPTER X.



Taylor had been deliberating and planning since leaving camp, and he had firmly decided to assassinate Harkins.

It was a golden opportunity. The two were alone, far from camp, and who was to deny any story he might tell when he returned without his partner? With Harkins out of the way he was the sole possessor of the golden secret.

Taylor's change of demeanor should have put the Englishman on his guard, but it had the opposite effect. The warnings uttered by Bess and Joe were forgotten, and the man reproached himself with the thought that he had unjustly accused one who was that very moment thirsting for his life.

Dinner being over, Taylor was ready for action. His face was pale, his hands trembled and he could not control his voice as he said:

"You examine that ledge over yonder, while I bear off here to the right a bit. I won't go far."

With an "all right" on his lips Harkins shouldered his rifle and moved forward without a look behind him. Reaching the ledge he leaned his gun against it and began to investigate. He moved to the left, and was at the corner of the mass and on the edge of a gully or ravine when he felt the ground giving way under his feet. At the same instant he heard Taylor twice shouting "Indians!" and felt a hot flash across his shoulders. He went down ten or twelve feet with a mass of dirt and rock, but was not injured by the fall. Believing that they had been discovered by Indians, he wisely decided to remain where he was at the bottom of the ravine until something further was heard from the savages.

Not a sound reached him from above. He was sure he had heard the report of at least one rifle as he was falling, and others might have followed it without his hearing them above the noise of his fall. Had the Indians killed Taylor at the first fire? Would they make search for him? If Taylor had escaped, wouldn't he return after the coast was clear?

For a full hour Harkins lay quiet in the ravine, half buried under the dirt. As nothing to alarm him had occurred, he determined to crawl out and make a survey. It was only after he was clear of the dirt that he discovered that he was bleeding from a flesh wound in the shoulder. The bullet had scarcely cut below the skin, and it was a hurt to be laughed at, but it settled Harkins' doubt regarding the Indians. Both men had been fired upon at the same time. He had been wounded and Taylor had been killed.

But if this was the case, the man speedily reasoned, why had not the Indians searched for him? If alive they would want to finish him or make him prisoner. If dead they would want his scalp. He could not make it out, and after waiting a few minutes longer he moved down the ravine to a spot where he could ascend the bank. He worked his way up with great caution, and when he had a clear view of the ground above there was nothing in sight to increase his anxiety. He had expected to behold Taylor's dead and mutilated corpse, but nothing of the man living or dead met his view.

Harkins kept his place of observation for a quarter of an hour, and then boldly climbed out of the ravine to make an investigation. The first thing he saw was his gun, which had been tucked away under a cedar bush. He walked down to where he believed Taylor stood when he shouted his alarm, and there on the ground was a cartridge shell. It was proof that the man had fired from that spot and stood right there to throw the shell out of his gun. If there had been an attack he would have been on the move. Harkins was slow in reaching a conclusion, but he had arrived at the truth when he sat down and soliloquized:

"It was Taylor who fired at me. He wanted me out of the way so that he need not share the gold with me. He shot just as I was falling and he dared not advance to see whether he had made a sure job or not. He hid my rifle because he means to go back to camp and claim that I was killed by Indians."

It was now midafternoon and Harkins was at least ten miles from the camp. Having no skill as a woodsman, he had trusted entirely to Taylor to observe landmarks, and he now doubted if he even knew the general direction in which the camp was situated. He cast about for the highest point of ground, and when he had ascended it he discovered that he could see a portion of the valley up which the train had come. This gave him the general direction and he set off with feelings much relieved. Taylor had no doubt started for camp at once, and as he would have to account for his appearing alone he would tell a story which would bring grief and distraction to at least one heart.

"Poor Bessie! What would she do?" the father kept saying as he hurried along, and the thought of her wild grief at learning of his death made him hurry the faster.

He was compelled to bear to the left to avoid obstructions, and when he had covered half the distance he suddenly found himself on the brink of a canyon. It was a wild, gloomy chasm in the hills, and so dark at the bottom that he could make out nothing. He kicked a loose stone at his feet into the gulf, and it went sheer down seventy-five feet before it struck with a dull thud.

The lakes and rivers and mountains and valleys are wonderful things in nature's handiwork, but the canyons are more wonderful still. Think of the mighty power required to split a great mountain in twain for miles and miles, beginning where it rises from the plain and continuing back until the walls of the chasm are a thousand feet high!

Think of the mighty wrath let loose upon the earth that day—the sun hanging blood red in the murky heavens, the awful roar of the hurricane sweeping a continent, the crash and explosion, the trembling of a world!

And deep down in these awful rifts there is ever darkness—ever midnight. The water drips and drips and drips with sound so monotonous that a human being would be driven insane in a day. No serpents crawl there—no living thing can endure that grimness and solitude. The grizzly bear—the king of terrors—shunned and dreaded by all and hating all, makes his lair in these drifts, but goes back only to the edge of the shadow cast by the sun. He fears nothing living, but he fears that darkness and silence.

Harkins followed down to the edge of the canyon, and after half an hour's walk he came to the spot where it began, and this permitted him to make a descent to the more level ground. As he stood for a moment looking up the rift it seemed to him as if he had seen the place before. This was, as he reflected, impossible, but a sudden idea made him almost gasp for breath.

"I am about five miles to the right of Custer's peak," he whispered to himself, "and this must be the canyon the old hunter told us of in his dying hour."

Had it been earlier in the day he would have investigated, for he had not the least fear of Indians, but the rapidly declining sun warned him that he must be on the move if he would reach the wagons before dark. His way to the south was almost blocked by a huge mass of rock, and he was about to flank this when he heard the sound of human voices. Some one was speaking on the other side of the rock.

For a moment Harkins was filled with such alarm that he was ready to bolt up the ravine. Then came the thought that he had been standing very quiet for some time past, and that had his movements been heard the owners of the voices would have attacked him, if enemies, or hailed him, if friends. He argued that his presence was entirely unsuspected and this being the case his curiosity was aroused to know who was so near him. He crept forward on hands and knees, hearing the voices more distinctly each moment, and at length he reached a spot from which he could see what was going on on the south side of the rock.

There was a campfire burning very low, and on either side of it sat a white man—two of the wickedest looking fellows he had ever put eyes on; on a heap of brush near at hand lay two more, seemingly fast asleep.

"Outlaws and renegades!" whispered Harkins as he drew back a little.

So they were—men more to be dreaded than the dusky savages, because having more reckless bravery and being endowed with keener intelligence.

Music as Medicine.

The one discovery above all others that has made Ambroise Pare famous for all time was the plan, which he was the first to suggest, of tying the arteries after the surgical removal of a limb. In one part of his writings he gives a curious account of a case of successful amputation, in which he appears to have anticipated one of the latest of modern fads and to have used music as medicine. The patient had been wounded in battle. The famous surgeon took him in hand, successfully amputated the limb, using his new plan of tying the arteries, and when the sufferer began to mend prescribed what the quaint English of the translation describes as "a consort of violins and a jester to make him merry." In a month the patient was able to hold himself up in a chair and was carried down to the gate of his castle to see the people pass by.

A successful issue to such an operation must have been of rare occurrence, for we are told that "the country people of two or three leagues about, knowing they could see him, came the first day, male and female, to sing and dance pellmell in joy of his amendment, all being very glad to see him, which was not done without good laughing and drinking."

"The camp being broken up," concludes Pare, "I returned to Paris with my gentleman, whose leg I had cut off. I dressed him and God cured him. I sent him to his house merry with his wooden leg, and was content, saying that he had escaped good cheap not to have been miserably burned."—All the Year Round.

Water Clocks in China.

In the history of the Tang dynasty it is stated that in Persia at the same period there was a clepsydra on a terrace near the palace, formed of a balance containing twelve metal balls, one of which fell every hour on a bell and thus struck the hours correctly. It is deemed not unlikely that this instrument was identical with the celebrated one which the king of Persia sent in the year 807 to Charlemagne.

In 898 the astronomer Tsiang produced an improvement on all former instruments—a machine arranged on a sort of miniature terrace, ten feet high and divided into three stories, the works being in the middle. Twelve images of men, one for every hour, appeared in turn before an opening in the terrace. Another set of automata struck the hours and eighths of hours. These figures occupied the lowest story.

The upper story was devoted to astronomy, containing an orrery in motion. Very complex machinery must have been required. As to the nature of the mechanism nothing is known except that it was kept going by falling water.

Inasmuch as the Arabs had reached China by sea at the close of the Eighth century, some assistance may have been derived from them in the construction of this complicated instrument, but in all probability it was wholly Chinese.—Boston Globe.

Men Are Good Listeners.

"What a splendid listener," says a woman, "seems the average young man, and how weak apparently are his conversational powers! Yet he manages to draw much from his young women friends, saying little, but quickly setting the ball rolling. Is it because we have all the volubility, which must pour out in any event? I think so, for two men walking or riding together find little to say to each other. But watch a throng leaving the theater or church or anywhere and you will see every woman chattering away, with nearly every man a pleased listener."—New York Times.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon gained twenty pounds. All this occurred after learned and well known physicians had failed. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 3.—The twenty-eighth session of the legislature met at noon. There were few important incidents outside of the usual routine of both houses. The senate, holding over, was saved the routine of presentation of credentials and of qualification, which occupied the house for some time, and proceeded immediately with the election of officers, and within an hour had reached motions and resolutions and transaction of other business and before 2 o'clock had adjourned for the day.

SENATE.

When the clock in the senate chamber pointed to 12 o'clock, Lieutenant Governor Clough dropped the gavel and the upper house of Minnesota's legislative body commenced its biennial grind.

The election of officers was announced as the first order of business, and Folsom, the caucus nominee for secretary, got the regulation 28 votes, to 25 for Van Duzee. Fowler got 28 votes for first assistant secretary to 14 for Graves and 9 for Robbins, the latter the nominee of the Alliance senators.

The remainder of the offices were filled as follows:

Engrossing clerk, C. W. Foote.
Enrolling clerk, L. D. Miller.
Sergeant-at-arms, E. E Benn.
Assistant sergeant-at-arms, Thomas Hopper
Chaplain, Rev. D. A. Tawney.
Sergeant committee rooms, J. Schaefer.
Sergeant galleries, E. E. Thompson.
Doorkeeper, J. C. Thompson.
Second doorkeeper, John L. Stevens.
Keeper of cloak room, O. A. Strant.
Second assistant secretary, P.P. Wall.

After appointment of a committee to wait on the governor and governor-elect the senate adjourned to 10 a. m.

THE HOUSE.

The house was called to order at 12:05 by Secretary of State Brown, and the members were called upon to sign the roll, after which they were all sworn in, in a body, by Judge Collins, of the supreme court.

After the members had been sworn in and the roll called, Allen J. Greer arose and moved that the house adjourn until 8 p. m. This motion was voted down and the election of speaker was proceeded with.

The roll call resulted, Lee 63, Furlong 29, Bjorge 11, Greer 4 and McGuire 1. Lee's election was made unanimous and a recess was taken to 3:30 when the election of officers was resumed with the following result:

Chief clerk, F. A. Johnson.
First assistant clerk, M. J. Dowling.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 4.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—After the roll call Mr. Fleming moved that the reading of the house journal be dispensed with, but Greer objected, as he said there were a number of errors. After the journal was read and corrected, O. B. Turrell, of the committee appointed to notify the governor and governor-elect, announced that they desired to meet the legislature in joint session at 12 o'clock. It was decided to hold the session at that time, and the old committee was continued.

At noon, according to programme, both houses assembled in joint session and listened to the reading of Governor Merriam's message. That finished, Governor Nelson's first message was read.

Messrs. Howard, Turrell, Boggs, Wilson and Horton were appointed as the committee on rules in the house, and Messrs. Sanborn, Day, Smith, Sandal, McHale, Geissell and Hompe in the senate. Beyond the introduction of a few bills no business was transacted in either house.

THURSDAY, JAN. 5.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 5.—The legislature after a short session adjourned to Monday afternoon, Jan. 9.

In the three days' session of the week the senate introduced some very important bills, including an interest bill, and one providing for the purity of elections and regarding election expenses. The house, although without committees as yet, reached the introduction of bills, and nine bills were introduced, the chief of which was Mr. Winston's for the supply of text books to the schools. The house and senate appointed a joint committee to consider the publication of an official report of the proceedings, other than the house and senate journals.

House Committees.

Speaker Lee expects to announce his committees early next week, and also the appointments for the subordinate positions, pages, cloak room keepers, etc.

The senate completed its rules, by report of its committee thereon, and passed under suspension of the rules, the bill for paying expenses of delegates to the Good Roads convention, to be held in St Paul this month. It also discussed the Washburn anti-option bill, on a proposed joint resolution offered by Senator Day, but the resolution went over under notice of debate by Senator Leavitt. A resolution was offered by Senator Lienau instructing the committee on judiciary to bring in a bill abolishing capital punishment, and substituting imprisonment for life. This, too, went over under notice of debate.

MONDAY, JAN. 9.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 9.—The senate was called to order promptly at 4 p. m. There were many absentees, after the Sunday adjournment. The reading of the journal was dispensed with and the introduction of bills was taken up at once. Senator Sanborn introduced a joint memorial to congress relating to the coinage of silver and Senator Dean followed in a resolution setting forth the dangers of cholera and asking congress to provide a stringent national quarantine system. A dozen or more bills of minor importance were introduced.

President Clough announced that he would report a list of senate committees in the morning and the senate adjourned.

In the House.

The house held a brief session, convening at 4 o'clock and adjourning half an hour later. There was barely a quorum present. The introduction of bills was the first order of business, and the most important measure introduced was H. F. No. 12, by Mr. Markham, of Aitkin, which is a bill to provide for the taxation of lands owned by railroad companies and the submission of the same to a vote of the people. Half a dozen other bills were handed in and the house adjourned to 10 a. m. when the speaker will announce the committees.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Wednesday, Jan. 4.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The senate resumed business at the close of the holiday recess with a fair show of industry and an attendance of a few more than a quorum. Some progress was made on the anti-option bill, and Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, took occasion to state his views. An amendment offered by Mr. White, of Louisiana, including flour among the articles to which the bill is to apply, was agreed to after some discussion. The two bills relating to quarantine and emigration were made special orders for Friday and Saturday next.

As was expected, the house met after the holiday recess without a quorum. A few measures of merely local significance were passed, and the house proceeded to unfinished business, which is private pension bills. One bill was passed, and the house adjourned for want of a quorum.

Thursday, Jan. 5.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The feature of the day's session of the senate was the speech delivered by Mr. Vilas, of Wisconsin, against the anti-option bill. For nearly three hours he spoke upon the constitutional objections which, in his opinion, precluded the possibility of its passage by the senate. The bill went over until Monday. Friday and Saturday having been set apart for the consideration of the two bills in relation to quarantine and immigration.

The house considered private pension bills coming over from last session as unfinished business. There was a bare quorum in attendance. By unanimous consent the house proceeded in committee of the whole to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation. There was no general debate. The bill was passed without amendment. It appropriates $1,785,035.

Friday, Jan. 6.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The day's session of the senate was given up exclusively to the discussion of the bill on quarantine regulations and its correlative measure, the bill to suspend immigration for one year. Mr. Chandler, of New Hampshire, spoke for about three hours, devoting most of his argument to the last mentioned bill, although the other was really the one that was up for discussion. Arguments against the quarantine bill were made by Senators McPherson of New Jersey, Platt of Connecticut, Mills of Texas, and Dolph of Oregon. Many amendments were offered, some of which were agreed to, the others going over.

The house was without a quorum, and nothing was done.

Saturday, Jan. 7.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—There were very few senators present when the day's proceedings began. Certificates of election of presidential electors were presented by the vice president from the states of Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri and Washington and were placed on file. Mr. Platt introduced a bill to provide a temporary government for Alaska and it was referred to the committee on territories. The senate then resumed consideration of the quarantine bill.

The house considered the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There was no debate.

Monday, Jan. 9.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The senate was in session for over five hours. Half of the time was spent on Mr. McPherson's joint resolution authorizing and directing the secretary of the treasury to suspend all purchases of silver under the Sherman act; and the other half on the bill granting additional quarantine powers, and imposing additional duties upon the marine hospital service. No vote was taken on either measure.

In the house the District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed. Then an hour was consumed in the consideration of a bill to promote the efficiency of the militia, but there was no determination. The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of a bill permitting the Norfolk and Western railroad to enter the District of Columbia.

HIGHEST FOR TEN YEARS.

Pork Quoted at $19 10 Per Barrel at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—Hog products Monday reached the highest point for ten years—$19.10 a barrel. There was no big trading, but some sales were made at that figure and nearly all day the price wavered about that point, closing at $19.07 1-2. The big dealers were not in the pit, so the trading was not very active, and the rise was merely due to the prevailing scarcity of pork. Just before the board closed it was rumored that Armour was responsible for the bulge and that some outsiders had come in with the intention of buying heavily. Brokers think that the provision market will not show a serious tone for some time and that prices will take a tumble or bulge at any moment.

THE VOICE THAT CALLS.

Where forlorn sunsets flare and fade
On desolate sea and lonely sand,
Out of the silence and the shade
What is the voice of strange command
Calling you still, as friend calls friend,
With love that cannot brook delay,
To rise and follow the ways that wend
Over the hills and far away?

Hark, in the city, street on street
A roaring reach of death and life,
Of vortices that clash and fleet
And ruin in appointed strife;
Hark to it calling, calling clear,
Calling until you cannot stay
From dearer things than your own most dear,
Over the hills and far away.

Out of the sound of ebb and flow,
Out of the sight of lamp and star,
It calls you where the good winds blow
And the unchanging meadows are;
From faded hopes and hopes agleam,
It calls you, calls you night and day,
Beyond the dark into the dream
Over the hills and far away.

Monstrous Force of Tornadoes.

Much has been said about electricity as a factor for destructiveness in the various gyrating storm clouds known as cyclones, drechoes and tornadoes. In all of this voluminous mass of so called scientific opinions and deductions one fact seems to have been entirely overlooked—viz., the almost resistless force of wind when moving with high velocity. When the velocity is but fifty miles an hour the pressure of air in motion is equal to twelve pounds to the square foot, and when this velocity rises to 100 miles per hour its force rises to the equivalent of 49.2 pounds to the square foot, the augmentation of force being always proportional to the square of the velocity.

It needs no further elaboration or amplification of this statement to convey to the intelligent reader an idea of the monstrous mechanical force which such a rapid traveling mass of air must have—a power great enough to tear down any structure that has yet been built by man, or to uproot whole forests of the largest trees now growing on the surface of the earth.—St. Louis Republic.

Laughing as a Medicine.

Persons suffering from rheumatism are naturally anxious to try every proposed remedy. John Raymond, of northern Iowa, had tried without relief nearly every alleged cure suggested by friends. Then he read this in a medical journal: "There is more benefit in a good laugh than in the hot water remedies, the faith cures, the electric, and all other new treatments in the world, and it costs nothing. If you know of nothing else to laugh at, laugh at your neighbor."

This was a new idea to poor Mr. Raymond. But what should he laugh at? In the house was nothing amusing. However, the medical journal said, "Laugh at your neighbor."

He went out on the front porch, and sitting in a chair, watched the people on the streets. For a time he saw nothing funny. Then a big German walked by, muttering aloud to himself.

"Ha, ha, ha!" went Mr. Raymond.

The big German stopped and looked.

"Vot's dot?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

"Vot vor you haw, haw, haw, mit me?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

Over the fence leaped the big German, his fists uplifted.

"Oh!" cried Raymond, "I—I meant no harm. I was laughing for my health."

"Und den you leetle sick Yankees laugh mit big Dutchmen! Dot ish all right. Dot ish von goot shoke on me. Ya, ya, ya!"

But Mr. Raymond, who really had not meant to be rude in the least, gave up the laugh cure, believing that the "shoke" was on himself rather than on the good German.—Youth's Companion.

Hunting Zebras.

After crossing the usual heated yellow plains, looking for all the world like an expanse of overparched hayfields and dotted here and there with droves of springbok, we outspanned two and so rode back again across the hot, weary plain for camp. We had not long quitted the forest before we sighted a good troop of Burchell's zebra, feeding quietly. We spread out in line and rode up to them.

The troop, which consisted mostly of mares with a yearling foal or two, was guarded by an old stallion, who stood sentinel nearest to us with his head up. Presently, turning half round, he gave some sort of signal and the rest of the band galloped briskly off, curveting and capering as they ran. After moving a few hundred yards the troop suddenly wheeled round in line to have a good look at us again.

These tactics of the zebras were displayed in a retreat of some miles, the old stallion always covering the rear, until the troop, outflanked by Dove, shot off to the right and my chance came. I galloped hard to intercept them, and as they stood for a minute on seeing me in the line of flight, got a steady shot at 200 yards. The bullet clapped as if on a barn door, and as the troop continued their flight I saw one zebra turn away alone. Presently she stood again. I was soon within sixty yards, and with another bullet finished her. She proved to be a fine mare in beautiful coat, and her head and skin now decorate a room at home.—Longman's Magazine.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."
IN THE
North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.
THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.
THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.
THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, issued out of and under the seal of the District Court, in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, upon a judgment rendered and docketed in the said court on the 31st day of December, 1886, in an action wherein Johnson & Marshall are plaintiffs, and Joseph Grover and Mary Grover are defendants, in favor of the said plaintiffs, and against the said defendants, for the sum of one hundred and sixty two and 50-100 dollars, which execution was directed and delivered to me as sheriff in and for the said county of Polk, I have this 14th day of December A. D. 1892, levied upon all the right, title and interest of the said defendants Joseph Grover and Mary Grover in and to the following described real estate, to wit: Lot eight (8), in block twenty-eight (28) of Kretzchmar's addition to the village of Red Lake Falls according to the plat thereof now on record in the office of register of deeds of Polk county, Minnesota, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, and appurtenances thereto, all the above described property being situated in the village of Red Lake Falls, county of Polk and state of Minnesota.

Notice is hereby given that I the undersigned, as sheriff as aforesaid, will sell the above described real property to the highest bidder, for cash, at public auction at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on Tuesday, the 7th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, to satisfy the said execution, together with the interest and costs thereon.

Dated December 14th, 1892.

Crookston merchants tell us that, notwithstanding the light crop of wheat in this vicinity and the unprecedentedly low price, business has been about, if not quite up to the average this year for all of which they are duly grateful. Crookston always was and always will be an A 1 business point.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week our reporter met Ole E. Rude, who had a smile onto him something like a mile wide as he said "I had a fine Christmas present; was too busy to come in and report it before—it was a bouncing boy, weighing in the vicinity of ten pounds, the very picture of health and looks yoost like its dad.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Ralston have been called upon to mourn the loss of their little boy, a bright little fellow aged two and one-half years which sad event occurred at the family residence in the Fifth ward on Thursday night of last week. The little boy was apparently in good health up till within a few days of his death when he was taken with a sore throat which was evidently the cause of his death. Tom Harris was about the streets on Saturday morning with a beaming smile on him that made him appear positively good looking. All because of the arrival at his house that morning of a bouncing little eight pound miss—the first girl in a family of six children.

At the first tap of the fire-bell on Sunday evening agent Fegan donned his big buffalo coat and rushed out into the cold, cold world to see wherever the fire was at. After assuring himself that it was not railroad property or the brewery, he returned to his home with a large-sized happy smile.

Halvor Steenerson returned from St. Paul on Saturday morning after a few days visit there. Says that the present legislature seems to have more business in it than any like body for several sessions. He thinks a Polk county man will be appointed on the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners.

The county board has some funny bills brought before it occasionally. Deputy County Auditor Mat Cornelius showed us one the other day in which was the following rather curiously mixed item, viz: "To 1 quart ammonia and 2 Bibles." Whatever relevancy exists between the two, if any, the bill does not explain.

The fire-bell rang out in startling tones about 8:30 on Sunday evening and summoned the department to do battle with the fiery element in a little house near the county hospital. The goods were all removed but the building was saved. The wind was blowing a gale at the time and had the fire got the upper hand, much damage would have resulted—but the boys never permit that to happen.

The new jail is nearly completed and when done will be a credit to its builders. It will be sufficiently large and sufficiently strong to care for all who need that kind of accommodations and will be the means of saving the county many a dollar that heretofore has been paid to Otter Tail county and to Clay county to care for the prisoners. It took our county dads a long time to tumble to the situation but they got there after awhile.

McKee Rankin, in "a Kentucky colonel," was the attraction at the opera house Tuesday night. Rankin is a typical representative of a Kentucky colonel. His appearance, voice and manners are all in keeping with the character, and no make-up is necessary. He portrays the characteristics of the Kentuckian: fiery temper always ready for a fight or a feud, but withal a kindly disposition and a hospitable manner, his love for liquor, horses and dogs, and his admiration for women, coupled with his patriotism for his native state. Mr. Rankin's support, while not the best, are tolerably well cast.

Andrew Steenerson went to St. Paul last week to attend the alliance meeting. Since the alliance went into politics the meetings have been small.

A gay sleighing party, consisting of Walter Bivins and L. J. Columbus with Misses Mabel Arnold and Inez McGrew, drove out to the residence of Aaron Cooke, in Fairfax on Saturday evening of last week. They report having had an enjoyable ride and a jolly visit.

We see accounts in the New York papers of a great blizzard in that state which is said to rival the big blizzard they had five years ago. When we read such accounts we shudder to think of life in such a country and rejoice that we live in the banana belt where such storms are known only as you read of them.

On Thursday, Jan. 5th, the last spike was driven that finishes the Great Northern road to the coast. This makes the Great Northern road the shortest trans-continental line to the coast and when the link between Fosston and Duluth is completed it will still shorten the distance another 100 miles or more. This is the only trans-continental line ever built without a land grant or a subsidy of some kind.

The subject of publishing a daily gazette—on the principle of the Congressional Record, is being considered by Minnesota legislators and it is said that a marjority view it with favor. We are inclined to the opinion that as soon as they ascertain how much it will cost to carry out the plan that many of them will weaken. The present plan, though not as full and complete is under the circumstances the best. One of the first objects our legislators should keep in view this session is to keep down expenses.

According to Hicks' prophesy this country was entitled to a blizzard of large-sized proportions between the 2nd and the 8th of January, and, had there been a large body of loose snow on the ground last Wednesday we should no doubt had seen the prophecy fully realized in the wind storm that prevailed during the afternoon and evening. As it was, the storm was too severe for comfort though not sufficiently strong as to cause loss of life. Hicks predicts another disturbance about the 13th, and one sometime about the last of the month. He calls January the stormy month.

Our reporter called at the office of the Red River Valley Loan and Investment company, one evening of last week and found August George up to his eyes in work, but he good-naturedly gave way for an interview. In response to the question, "How's business," he said that business had been very good this fall in loans but that real estate had been somewhat quiet. Said the company had arranged to do an immigration business during the coming summer whereby they expect to be the means of bringing to Polk county a large number of desirable settlers—men having a sufficient amount of capital to make a success from the start. Said he had been in the Red River Valley long enough to be considered an old settler and during all that time he had never known one failure among the farmers where the man brought a sufficient amount of money to start him in business and did not have to borrow any, providing the said man had no expensive habits. He had known farmers to fail who borrowed money for everything they needed to start in business, men who spent a great deal of money for liquor, and on the other hand I have known men to come here without a dollar in the world, who had to borrow money to start with who to-day are in independent circumstances, but I think the best way is for a man to have a little capital to start with, then with proper management he is all right. I do not know of any country under the sun where a man who owns his farm can do better than right here in the Valley and I consider Red River Valley soil the best under the sun. We expect to see a big boom in real estate this year and are making ample preparations for it. With the activity that is promised in railroad circles, if the plans for building are carried out I do not see why Crookston should not have the greatest boom next summer she ever had. Crookston is a good city and is bound to come to the front as the best city in the Northwest north of St. Paul and Minneapolis. There are many other reasons that I do not care to discuss just now, saying which he turned to his work with a genial smile and our reporter departed to ponder deeply on these things.

W. H. Averill of Fosston was in the city yesterday.

C. H. Saake is in St. Paul this week enjoying Salvini and other social events.

Attorney Holston: I wish you would say for me that I had nothing to do with fixing of the bonds in the Cummings case. I said at the time they were fixed I thought they were too low.

A populist: The combined influence of the county officers was brought to bear upon Robt. Anderson to get him to vote for the awarding of the county printing to the Crookston Tribune, but it was no use, he insisted on giving it to the Times. Duffy, of East Grand Forks, has got some hold on him, and he sold us out.

L. S. Hancock of Euclid was in the city Wednesday and called on the JOURNAL. Said he before leaving: "Well, I wish you success, but not politically." Mr. Hancock's life in this northern country hasn't been a bed of roses, and the hardships he has had to endure—while others have got rich—makes him feel that there is something wrong somewhere.

Recognition Exercises.

The Congregational church has called an ecclesiastical council for the recognition exercises of the pastoral relation. The council will meet in the church on Tuesday afternoon, January 17th, at 2 p. m. Representatives are expected from Minneapolis, St. Cloud, Brainerd, Wadena, Detroit, Barnesville, Ada, Fosston and other churches of the vicinity. It is expected that the pastor-elect, Rev. J. G. Smith, will present a statement of his religious views, and that the members of the council will ask such questions of him as they see fit. Addresses are expected from the delegate pastors and others. The public are cordially invited to these exercises.

ON SOME FORGOTTEN POEMS.

Dead rhymes are here, that no man comes to read;
Dead as the flowers that robed the maiden Spring
To wed with Summer when the streams were freed
And all the birds began to nest and sing.

If some one plucked the flowers and laid them by Between the prim white pages that I hold,
The crushed and faded leaves would dim the eye
And leave the yearning heart uncheered and cold.

But, sweeter flowers of rhyme, amid the gloom
And silent dust of all the silent shelves,
You keep your glory and your primal bloom!
And live, if not for others, for yourselves.

And when I chance to open wide the page,
Behold, your beauty breaks upon the earth,
And all the splendor of a buried age
Is born again with glad, immortal birth.

And happy I may hear the master hand
Sweep down the lyre and wake each vibrant chord
That swells with glory of a sweeter land,
Where life was hope and love alone was lord.

So let the cover close, the page grow gray
Amid the dust where no eye comes to see.
My heart alone the song shall hold and sway—
The poet's dream shall wake a world for me.
—W. J. Henderson in Harper's Weekly.

He Cut the Rope.

The architect Viollet-le-Duc was one day on the Schwarzenberg glacier, at a height of about 9,000 feet, accompanied by Baptiste, the guide, who marched in front. The two men were attached to each other by a rope, as is usual in Alpine mountaineering.

The guide had passed over a crevasse, but when M. Viollet-le-Duc attempted to cross it he failed and fell into the abyss. The guide tried to pull him out, but instead he found himself gradually descending.

The architect perceived that his companion, if he persisted in the attempt to save him, would surely share his fate, and he asked if Baptiste had a family.

"A wife and children," was the answer.

"Then," said Viollet-le-Duc quietly "I shall cut the rope."

He did so and fell, but a block of ice thirty feet lower down stopped his descent. When Baptiste saw this, and that for a time the danger was lessened, he went in search of help and returned with four stout peasants. Three hours afterward Viollet-le-Duc was extricated.

In spite of his perilous position, the ruling passion was strong with the artist, for, although he was almost covered with icicles from the dripping water, he had contrived to make drawings of the novel effects he was able to perceive.—Youth's Companion.

Real Merit

is the characteristic of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is manifested every day in the remarkable cures this medicine accomplishes. Druggists say: When we sell a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla to a new customer we are sure to see him back in a few weeks after more,—proving that the good results from a trial bottle warrant continuing its use. This positive merit Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses by virtue of the peculiar combination, proportion and process used in its preparation, and by which all the remedial value of the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus peculiar to itself and absolutely unequalled in its power as a blood purifier, and as a tonic for building up the weak and weary, and giving nerve strength.

To Prevent the Grip

Or any other similar epidemic, the blood and the whole system should be kept in healthy condition. If you feel worn out or have "that tired feeling", in the morning, do not be guilty to neglect. Give immediate attention to yourself. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla to give strength, purify the blood and prevent disease.

Catarrh in the Head

Is undoubtedly a disease of the blood, and as such only a reliable blood purifier can effect a perfect cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood-purifier, and it has cured many very severe cases of catarrh. It gives an appetite and builds up the whole system.

Hood's pills act especially upon the liver rousing it from torpidity to its natural duties, cure constipation and assist digestion.

For pains in the chest there is nothing better than a flannel cloth saturated with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It will produce a counter irritation without blistering, and is not so disagreeable as mustard; in fact is much superior to any plaster on account of its pain-relieving qualities. If used in time will prevent pneumonia. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

WOMEN AND JOURNALISM.

A Field Which Has Attracted Very Many Bright Creatures.

There seems to be a great setting in of the tide of working women toward journalism. It is a little curious that women who have failed in many methods of breadwinning should think it easy to write for the newspapers and edit great journals. Possibly the easy style that is in reality the perfection of good journalism seems to require only a ready pen and a moderate fund of general information. Women soon learn their mistake. They learn that absolute correctness, reliability, punctuality, and, above all, adaptiveness, are absolutely necessary to even moderate success. Besides this they must have what is technically known in the profession as "a liking for the business" and a willingness to do that which they can do best.

It will not do for a fashion writer to "write up" a great religious or political convention, although women's versatility in journalism is a source of never ending surprise to men. A newspaper woman will write a pathetic sketch, report a fashionable wedding, make up a practicable menu, give a charming account of some other woman's new gown with fidelity to details in many cases quite beyond a man's comprehension or ability, write up the season's openings, compile a fashion article correct as to style and novelty, and in addition write advertisements, read proof, set type, do typewriting, write on a pinch a creditable editorial, and in the interim attend to her household and social duties.

The successful editor of today recognizes that the home and the fireside must receive due and proper attention in his paper, and that what may be called "women's news" has developed wonderfully in the last few years. Matter about and for women that is helpful and instructive must appear in each issue. Who so capable of writing for women as a woman?

As to the individual success of women and their compensation, nothing very positive can be asserted. In no other profession does ability so quickly receive recognition as in journalism. There are not so many bright minds or good ideas in the profession that both should not be eagerly grasped at and well paid for by the editor. The ability to express a great deal in a few words is not usually a woman's forte; rather is she inclined to use a great many words and express very little. Strange as it may seem to those unacquainted with the fact, there is a limit even to a newspaper's capacity, and a flow of language, however eloquent, is far from being the great essential.

The story of the poet who took a canto of fifteen verses to an editor for publication and was told to boil it down and extract the sentiment is very applicable. After repeated efforts he failed to satisfy the editor and finally told the latter to do it himself. "Do you love me? No! Then go," was the gist of the matter, and while this may be extreme the principle of multum in parvo is a good one for women who desire success as newspaper workers.—St. Louis Star-Sayings.

The Old Police Tax.

The chief authorities of towns in past ages incurred much responsibility. At Ripon we have a good example of their liabilities. Here formerly, after the blowing of a horn at 9 o'clock at night, and until sunrise next morning, if a house were robbed, and the owner and his servants had taken proper precautions for its safety, the wakeman had to make good the loss sustained. Each householder paid an annual tax of twopence if he had one door, and fourpence if he had two doors to his dwelling, for maintaining a watch over the city. The tax has long since been discontinued, but the horn is still blown at night.—London Tit-Bits.

REFUSED TO FIGHT

WHITE WINGED DOVE OF PEACE HOVERS OVER TOPEKA,

But It Refused to Settle There. Another Conference Committee Appointed—Considerable Excitement in Wyoming—The Minnesota Senatorship.

TOPEKA, Kan, Jan 16—The white-winged dove of peace fluttered over Topeka all day, but thus far has obstinately refused to alight Still, the prospect for peace is brighter than at any time since the session was begun The rivals have decided to bury their animosities and to appoint a conference committee composed of three Populists, three Republicans and one Democrat This committee has been in session several hours, and, although no conclusion has been arrived at yet, there is good grounds to believe that it may find a way out of the dilemma The two houses took a recess until 10 a m, when the committee will probably be ready to report

THE KANSAS MUDDLE.

Democrats and Republicans Fail to Make a Deal.

TOPEKA, Kan, Jan 17—The Republicans held a caucus and received a proposition from the Democrats promising to vote for Crane, Republican, for state printer, provided the Republicans would agree to vote for the Democratic candidate for United States senator Declined the Proposition.

The Republicans declined to accept the proposition although the majority were in favor of voting for a Democrat when they became convinced that if they did not a Populist would be elected The Populist caucus determined that the senators should refuse to go into joint session with the house to elect a state printer

THE WYOMING SENATORSHIP.

Rival Factions Ready to Come to Blows Over the Snarl.

CHEYENNE, Wyo, Jan 17—There has been a lull in senatorial matters for two days, but interest broke out afresh on the arrival of the various senators and representatives who had been to their homes over Sunday The New faction is fairly desperate and no words of condemnation of Baxter are severe enough for their case There is a big effort being made to kill off Baxter, but he has the inside track and the money Colonel McGhee, of the Western Union Beef company, of which corporation Baxter is manager, has taken a hand in the fight and has an agent on the way to Cheyenne to look after the financial end It is said that he has the help of Senator Brice and on good authority that President-elect Cleveland favors Baxter's election The New and Baxter factions are ready to come to blows over the snarl, and the fight is growing more bitter every hour

NORTH DAKOTA SENATORSHIP.

Estimate of Strength of the Various Candidates for the Honor.

BISMARCK, Jan 17—The vote in the Democratic caucus was: Roach 13, Benton 5, McCormack 2, Bidlake 1, Burke 1, Mooney 1 Roach's nomination was made unanimous The vote in the Populist caucus was: Muir 12, Lamb 3 Muir's nomination was made unanimous The latest estimate of Republican strength is: Smith 7, with possibly 8; Kingham 5, with possibly 7; Anderson 7, with possibly 9; Worst 10, with possibly 12; Sutherland 3, with possibly 5; Casey 14 to 31 The higher figure, however, does not indicate Casey's strength, as he has friends voting for each of the other candidates in order to satisfy local pressure It is not probable that Democrats and Populists can unite Casey's election is regarded as almost certain

MINNESOTA SENATOR.

The Legislature Ballots for a Successor to C. K. Davis.

ST PAUL, Jan 17—A ballot for United States senator, to succeed C K Davis, was taken in both branches of the Minnesota legislature, at noon. Tuesday, Jan 17

The vote in the house resulted as follows:
Davis 67, Lawler 31, Owen 12, C. M. Start 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, Moses M. Clapp 1.
The vote in the senate resulted as follows:
Davis 20, Lawler 17, Owen 11, Merriam 2, Judge Dickinson 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, John Lind 1, C. M. Start 1.
Both branches then adjourned until Wednesday noon, Jan. 18.

Joint Ballot in Montana.

HELENA. Jan 17—There was no break in the senatorial vote The joint ballot resulted: Sanders, 32; Clark, 24; Dixon, 8; Collins, 2; Mulville, 2 Beecher (Pop) voted for Collins

A Majority for Murphy.

ALBANY, N Y, Jan 17—The two houses of the legislature balloted separately for United States senator with the following result:

Senate—Edward Murphy, Jr., 17; Frank Hiscock, 12; Whitelaw Reid, 1. Assembly—Murphy, 72; Hiscock, 51.

De Young Withdraws.

SACRAMENTO, Cal, Jan 17—M H de Young has withdrawn from the senatorial contest

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Jan. 10.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The bill granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the secretary of the treasury and the marine hospital service was passed by the senate during the day. An important amendment was adopted to the section giving the president power to suspend immigration from infected countries, and now the section gives to the president power not only to suspend immigration but to prohibit the whole or in part the introduction of persons and property. After the quarantine bill was passed, the special order—the bill prohibiting immigration for one year—was permitted to lapse. The anti-option bill was then taken up and Vilas, of Wisconsin, completed his argument against it.

In the house, after a sharp and decisive contest the opponents of the bill allowing the Norfolk and Western Railroad company to extend its lines into the District of Columbia, gracefully admitted themselves defeated and the bill was passed without a division. The joint resolution changing the time for the meeting of congress and for the inauguration of president was defeated by a refusal to order it to a third reading, 43 to 121.

Wednesday Jan. 11.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Mr. Kenna's death was announced in the senate at the opening of the proceedings, by Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, in the absence in West Virginia of the dead senator's colleague Mr. Faulkner. The senate, after adopting the usual resolutions and appointment of a committee to attend the funeral adjourned for the day.

No business but the reception of the banking committee's majority report and the minority report on the repeal of the Sherman act was done in the house. Senator Kenna's death was announced, and the house then adjourned.

Thursday, Jan. 12.

WASHINGTON, Jan. .—In the house a resolution was adopted that at 12:45 the house attend as a body the funeral ceremonies to be conducted in the senate chamber over the remains of the late Senator John E. Kenna, of West Virginia. In the morning hour the house resumed consideration of the bill to promote the efficiency of the militia. No action was taken, and at 12:45 the house in a body, preceded by the sergeant-at-arms, proceeded to the senate chamber. Immediately on returning to its own chamber, the house, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, adjourned.

The senate transacted no business.

Friday, Jan. 13.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The senate, after an explanation by Mr. Sherman, passed a bill to extend to the North Pacific ocean the provisions of the statute for the protection of fur seals and other fur bearing animals. The McGarrahan bill, after a speech against it by Mr. Mills, it went over till Monday. The anti-option bill was taken up and Mr. White's pending amendment to the second section defeated. An amendment offered by Mr. Vilas, which would have the effect of restricting the operations of the bill to gambling transactions, was debated for the rest of the day and went over without action.

The Republicans in the house filibustered all day against the consideration of the private war claims bill, with the result that nothing was accomplished. At the evening session of the house pension matters were discussed, but no action was taken on any bill.

Saturday, Jan. 14.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Nicaragua canal bill was up in the senate and Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, made a speech, in the course of which he spoke sadly of the Monroe doctrine as "worn, torn and fragmentary," and as having been kicked by the senate into "doll rags." The anti-option bill came up in the afternoon, but was antagonized by two motions, on neither of which there was a quorum voting. Stimulated, however, by a hint from Mr. Sherman that that measure was blocking up all important business, Mr. Washburn gave notice that he would ask the senate to remain in session Wednesday until a final vote was taken on the anti-option bill.

The house passed the bill appropriating $8,505,000 to confirm the agreement with the Cherokee Nation.

Monday, Jan. 16.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Three prepared speeches were read in the senate. The first was by Mr. Morrill, against the McGarrahan bill; the second by Mr. Peffer, in favor of a constitutional amendment limiting the presidential office to one term, and the third by Mr. Call, in defense of the constitutionality of the anti-option bill. Considerable progress was made upon the anti-option bill. The amendments that had been made by Senators Vilas and Daniels were defeated by large majorities, and some amendments offered by Mr. Washburn were agreed to, one of them fixing July 1, 1893, as the time when the bill is to go into effect.

In the house, after considerable useless talk, a resolution calling on the executive department for a statement as to war claims allowed or disallowed, was passed. For some time the Republicans filibustered against the motion to suspend rules and pass a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment for the election of United States senators by popular vote, but in the end permitted it to be carried without a division.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 17.—A vote for United States senator was taken in both the house and senate at noon, Tuesday, Jan. 17.

The vote in the house resulted as follows:
Davis 67, Lawler 31, Owen 12, C. M. Start 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, Moses M. Clapp 1.
The vote in the senate resulted as follows:
Davis 20, Lawler 17, Owen 11, Merriam 2, Judge Dickinson 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, John Lind 1, C. M. Start 1.
Both branches then adjourned until Wednesday noon, Jan. 18.

TUESDAY, JAN. 10.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 10.—At the opening of the morning session of the senate President Clough announced the committees. Aside from this the most interesting matter to come up was a bill by Senator Hompe, which provides for wiping out the supremacy of Minneapolis as a grain market and center, and concentrating the wheat business of the Northwestern wheat belt at Duluth. The senator proposes that the state shall pay $100,000 to build the necessary houses, elevators, etc., and shall supply the men to operate them, all under the direction of the railroad and warehouse commission.

Senator McMillan's S. F. No. 37 is a novel measure, its purpose being to carry the savings bank system into the public schools.

The first business of the house after the reading of the speaker's list of committees, was the adoption of rules. But few changes were made in the rules of the last session.

The chair then announced the following appointments:

Speaker's Clerk—H. A. Fritz.

Pages—Earl Kelsey, Paul King, Roscoe Lane, Emil Nelson, George Meyers and Fred Zetler.

Doorkeepers—Edward Fanning, L. B. Miller, H. L. Kohl.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 11.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 11.—The important act of the day in the Minnesota legislature was the passage by the house of a resolution offered by R. C. Dunn, of Mille Lacs, endorsing the Washburn anti-option bill, which was passed under suspension of the rules.

Under the head of resolutions nothing of importance came up, but under the order of introduction of bills were one or two measures worthy of note. Mr. Jacobson's bill, known as H. F. 33, is to permit two or more persons associated as a firm or corporation, to conduct, maintain and operate a warehouse or elevator at the regular way stations, or upon sidetracks on the right of way of any railroad in the state, and directing the railroad and warehouse commission to grant permission to erect the same without regard to the capacity of the proposed elevator or warehouse, and without discrimination as to persons.

Mr. Wacek's bill, H. F. 42, is to repeal those sections of the penal code relating to sports traffic and labor on Sunday.

The senate only held a half hour session. Among the important senate bills was Senator La Due's bill making an additional appropriation of $100,000 for Minnesota's display at the world's fair.

THURSDAY, JAN. 12.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 12.—In the senate the resolution of Senator Sevatson calling for an investigating committee of five to look into the matter of alleged shortages, stealings and extortions of the railroads in the transportation of wheat was called up and after a little sparring for reference was passed. The committee will be announced later.

When the judiciary committee reported back Senator Leavitt's income tax bill to the committee of the whole Senator Dean tried to have it go to the committee on taxes and tax laws, but the committee report was adopted.

When the doors were opened resolutions of sorrow for the death of Senator Grinnell, of Dodge county, were adopted and the senate, as a further mark of respect, adjourned for the day.

In the house Mr. Wyman, from the committee on appropriations, reported, recommending the indefinite postponement of the senate bill appropriating $1,000 for the good roads convention.

Several committee clerks were asked for and appointed. The report of the mileage committee was adopted and the house adjourned for the day.

FRIDAY, JAN. 13.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 13.—Neither house of the legislature was industrious at today's session. In fact, until the committees get some of their reports ready, there is little use of industry at the sessions.

One of the most important bills of the session was handed in by Mr. Horton, of Ramsey, to prohibit pool selling and book making. It is provided that the provisions of the act shall not apply to the actual enclosure of any fair or race track associations that are incorporated under the laws of this state during the actual time of the meetings of said associations, or within twenty-four hours before.

The committee on legislative expenses reported back house file No. 2, Mr. Wacek's bill cutting down the mileage fees of members to 3 cents per mile, with the recommendation that it be amended to allow the president of the senate and speaker of the house 10 cents per mile. The report, with the recommendation, was adopted.

In the senate a long debate was narrowly averted by notice of debate interposed by Senator Mayo to a resolution offered by Senator Sevatson, endorsing the Washburn anti-option bill.

SATURDAY, JAN. 14.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 14.—The senate was not in session and for anything of importance accomplished the house might as well have adjourned over the day as well. There was a little tilt over the adjournment, but it was finally decided to make it till 4 p. m. Monday.

Mr. Boggs, of Duluth, introduced several bills, and on one he asked and secured suspension of the rules, when it was read a second and third time and passed. It is House File 76, and changes the county offices from salary to the fee system. Although meaning a goodly increase of pay to some officers, it is said, Mr. Boggs has established his solidity so firmly with the members that only one vote was recorded against his bill, Mr. Markham, of Aitkin.

A little surprise was sprung just before adjournment, when the speaker announced that he had the papers in a contest by F. Talboys against Representative John. V. I. Dodd, of the Sixth ward, St. Paul. Mr. Turrell promptly moved their reference to the committee on elections, and the motion prevailed.

Speaker Lee announced the following committees provided for by resolutions:

Fish and Game Laws—Fleming, Boggs, A. B. Kelly, T. Cole, Wacek.

Dairy and Food Laws—Anderson, Staples, E. F. Comstock, Virtue, Moore.

MONDAY, JAN. 16.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 16.—The senate met at 4 o'clock. Quite a number of bills were introduced and two passed under suspension of the rules. The first was by Senator Probstfield in regard to the government's connection with the Pacific railroads, and the second by Senator Tawney, which provides that when insane persons are charged with crime they may be committed to the state hospitals, and on being pronounced cured they may be returned to the custody of the district court for trial.

The house held a short session, commencing at 4 o'clock, and managed to transact considerable business in an hour and a half. The principal feature was the introduction of a resolution by Mr. Walsh, of Ramsey, providing for a joint investigating committee of the house and senate to inquire into the operations of the coal combine and report upon the burdens imposed upon the people of Minnesota by its exactions. The resolution went over on notice of debate given by Mr. Greer. Seven bills were introduced.

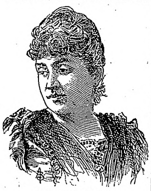
THEY WRITE POETRY

TO THE PUBLIC, HOWEVER, THEIR LIMPID PROSE IS MOST FAMILIAR.

Mrs. Edith Sessions Tupper and Mrs. Lee C. Harby Represent the Far North and the Very Sunny South, but Both Are Truly American.

Poetry is confined to no clime and to no race, though some peoples are gifted far above others, and it is one of the pleasing facts to all Americans that their poets today represent every section of the nation. For an illustration let two ladies be taken—one of Jewish blood and far southern birth and rearing, the other of old Puritan stock, born and reared near the Canada line. Mrs. Lee C. Harby is thoroughly southern and Mrs. Edith Sessions Tupper quite as thoroughly northern in origin, feeling and education, yet both are now the pride of New York, and their fame is truly national.

Mrs. Harby's father was Marx E. Cohen, a graduate of the University of Glasgow, who married Miss Armida Harby, of a family distinguished in the history and literature of South Carolina. They became the parents of one son and five daughters. The son lost his life in the Confederate army, and the father's domestic tastes led him to be the constant associate of his daughters, and as Miss Lee Harby loved an open air life she early became his chief companion on his plantation, though a native of Charleston. She married her second cousin, Mr. J. D. Harby, a son of Captain L. C. Harby, U. S. N., and they resided in Galveston till 1879.



MRS. LEE C. HARBY.

There she began to contribute to the press, and her article on "Christmas Before the War" attracted much attention. After a brief residence in Houston they removed to New York city. Her history of the German colony in Texas caused her election as a member of the American Historical association. She is also a member of Sorosis. Her poetry is of the sentimental order, dealing almost entirely with the affections as illustrated in her lines of rejoicing entitled "My Boy." After an exquisite detail of the toys and garments seen in a dream and presented to her in a casket by cupids she tells of finding in the casket a being of this sort:

> Oh, his skin was like pearl and his eyes darkly brown,
> While his lips seemed with strawberries fed.
> His soft hair loosely curled and like vine tendrils clung,
> But the shade—would you think it?—was red.
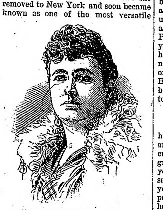
> Yet his smile was so sweet my heart melted with love,
> And I called him my life and my pride,
> While I cradled him soft in my covetous arms
> And nestled him close by my side.

Mrs. Edith Sessions Tupper is a daughter of the Hon. Walter Loren Sessions, ex-member of congress and prominent in New York politics, and was born at his home in Chautauqua county, N. Y., about the beginning of the civil war. Her early opportunities were of the very best. She was reared in an intellectual atmosphere, educated at Vassar and acquired all the varied knowledge and social standing possible to a congressman's daughter in Washington city. Ten years ago she married Mr. Horace E. Tupper, a railroad manager, and went to live in Chicago, where she launched into journalism and made a brilliant success from the start.

After doing much good work for The Herald, Tribune and Inter Ocean she removed to New York and soon became known as one of the most versatile writers in the country. In poetry she has a decided talent for society verses, as they are called, and her lines beginning,



MRS. EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

> Painted and perfumed, feathered and pink,
> Here is your ladyship's fan, have been much quoted. As a closing personality it may be added that she weighs 150 pounds, is most "unfashionably healthy" and has a wealth of light brown hair that is the admiration of all her friends and the envy of many.

Uruguay's Customs Receipts.

During the month of September the custom house receipts throughout the republic of Uruguay amounted to $714,821 as compared with $725,675 during the corresponding period of the previous year. The returns show an improvement of about $20,000 over those of August, and are nearly equal to those of September, 1890.

ITS FATE IS CERTAIN.

A Once Famous Town Sure to Be Destroyed.

Kaskaskia was once the capital of Illinois Territory and a famous western city. There Lafayette received royal entertainment during his visit to the United States he had helped to create. For a long time the inhabitants held the adjacent grazing and farming land in common under a grant made by Louis XIV of France, and each spring the village priest allotted meadow and fallow ground to the various householders. But now, according to a St. Louis correspondent, the ancient and almost forgotten town seems to be doomed.

In the spring of 1881 the Mississippi river changed its channel, cutting away its banks and breaking into the Kaskaskia, or what was known years ago as the Okaw river, making a perfect island of Kaskaskia township and the doomed town. Since that time the river has slowly but surely made deadly inroads to the once flourishing village, and in less than a year the Father of Waters will have swallowed up this ancient settlement.

At the head of the chute, where the Mississippi cut its way through to the Okaw river, stands an old fashioned brick house, the first one erected in the once metropolis of Illinois. It stands deserted, save by the rats that move unmolested from garret to cellar. It is seldom visited. The owner has long since died. Surrounded by a grove of maple and cedar trees it presents a lonesome appearance. It will be the next victim for the angry waters, and one more favoite landmark will have disappeared.

Little shanties that were erected years ago have toppled over and swept down stream with the mighty current that seemed destined to sweep every landmark out of existence that had adorned the village of Kaskaskia for the past century. Seventy-five years ago the town promised to be a city. Even before St. Louis had a population of 500 souls every indication pointed toward Kaskaskia as the growing city of the west, but the high water played sad havoc with the settlement, and St. Louis grew and prospered.

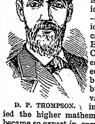
In 1880 the population was 1,213, and nine years later, in 1889, it had been reduced to 862. Since the Mississippi river has made such a determined effort to swallow up the village the island has been comparatively deserted, not more than 400 souls inhabiting this once prosperous settlement. The farmers (no other class of people now exist there) cross the river in skiffs and do their trading at Chester and return to their island to live in solitude until once more they are compelled to visit Chester to lay in their winter or summer supply of provisions and clothing.

The land is the most fertile in Illinois, and passing steamers are hailed to move the crops that are harvested in great abundance.

HE'S GOING TO TURKEY.

Record of the New United States Minister to Constantinople.

Hon. David P. Thompson, whom President Harrison has selected to fill the Turkish mission for the few months remaining to this administration, is a typical western man—what the Pacific coast people call a "hustler." He was born in Cadiz, O., and in early life acquired the trade of blacksmithing, but in the intervals of hammering iron he studied the higher mathematics and soon became so expert in surveying that he was employed on the engineer corps of the Steubenville and Indiana railroad.



D. P. THOMPSON.

In 1853 he went to Oregon and for twenty years did more or less work as a surveyor, but invested in land with so much judgment that he soon became a capitalist and a banker. In speaking of himself he says that he is "a blacksmith by trade, a surveyor by profession and a banker by occupation," and this sums up the story of his life. He has served as governor of Idaho one term, mayor of Portland three terms, state senator four years, and in some minor positions. He has twice been offered the Republican nomination for governor, but declined on account of business engagements. His term as minister to Turkey will only be a brief episode in a lengthy foreign tour he contemplates.

How a Zulu Receives a Visitor.

A Zulu chief, when a man enters his hut, remains silent for some moments and seems quite unconscious of his presence. At length he says, in a tone of great dignity, "Ge saku bona" (I see you), to which the caller replies in the same way. The longer he takes to "see you" the greater man the visitor is supposed to be, and until he is thus "seen" he must keep silence and appear as much as possible not to be there at all.

South American Sanitary Congress.

The government of Uruguay has extended an invitation to the governments of Brazil and the Argentine Republic to send representatives to Montevideo to attend a sanitary congress to be held at that capital. Each nation is to be represented by three persons, one of whom shall be called the diplomatic representative, while the other two, who must be physicians, shall be called technical delegates.

Queer Story About a Table.

A wonderful rustic table is said to be owned by a Philadelphia lady. It is formed of the boughs of a tree, and the bark has not been removed from them. It has been in her possession just two months, and about a fortnight ago it began to throw out green sprouts and is now in full bloom.

OCEAN'S GRAVEYARD.

THE WONDERFUL SARGASSO SEA OF THE GREAT ATLANTIC.

The Enormous Floating Semi-Island Toward Which Nearly Everything on the Mighty Deep Drifts and Is Held as Prisoner—Its Inhabitants.

For several years past the hydrographic bureau at Washington has been trying to acquire a more intimate knowledge of the movements of the waters of the ocean, and a great number of bottles, containing messages and securely corked, have been dropped overboard by vessels. Many of these have floated thousands of miles before they were picked up, and while some were washed upon native and foreign shores others have found their way into the great Sargasso sea.

From the courses taken by these different bottles it has been found that the ocean currents move around in a vast circle. Those which were dropped overboard on the American coast took a northerly course, while those on the European side floated toward the south. Bottles dropped overboard in the North Atlantic started toward the northeast, and those from the African or Spanish coast floated almost directly west until they reached the West India islands. The general directions of the currents were thus ascertained, showing that the waters acted upon by winds and currents circulated round and round like a pool.

In all pools floating objects are quickly cast outside of the revolving currents, or they are carried with them in their circular route for some time until they are washed nearer the center or side of the pool. The bottles that were forced outside of the currents of the ocean were cast upon the shores of some country, but those which were worked toward the center eventually found their way in the calm waters of the Sargasso sea. Here they remain peacefully until picked up by some vessel, or until some storm casts them back into the great pool.

Vessels very rarely visit the great sea in the middle of the ocean, but occasionally they are driven there by storms or adverse winds. Strange sights meet the gaze of the sailors at such times. Wonderful stories—partly true and partly false—have been told by sailors returning from a forced trip to the Sargasso sea. The surface of the sea is covered with floating wrecks, spars, seaweed, boxes, fruits and a thousand other innumerable articles. It is the great repository or storehouse of the ocean, and all things which do not sink to the bottom or are not washed upon the shores are carried to this center of the sea. When one considers the vast number of wrecks on the ocean and the quantity of floating material that is thrown overboard, a faint idea of the wreckage in the Sargasso sea may be conceived.

Derelicts or abandoned vessels frequently disappear in mysterious ways, and no accounts are given of them for years by passing vessels. Then suddenly, years later, they appear again in some well traveled route to the astonishment of all. The wrecks are covered with mould and green slime, showing the long, lonesome voyage which they have passed through. It is generally supposed that such derelicts have been swept into the center of the pool and remained in the Sargasso sea until finally cast out by some unusually violent storm.

The life in this sea is interesting. Solitary and alone the acres of waters, covered with the debris, stretch out as the vast graveyard of the ocean, seldom being visited by vessels or human beings. Far from all trading routes of vessels, the sight of a sail or steamship is something unusual. The fishes of the sea form the chief life of those watery solitudes. Attracted by the vast quantities of wreckage floating in the sea, and also by the gulfweed on which many of them live, they swarm around in great numbers. The smaller fishes live in the intricate avenues formed by the seaweed, and the more ferocious denizens of the deep come hither to feed upon the quantities of small fish. In this way the submarine life of the Sargasso sea is made interesting and lively.

The only life overhead is that made by a few sea birds, which occasionally reach the solitudes of this midocean cemetery. A few of the long flyers of the air penetrate to the very middle of the ocean, but it is very rarely that this occurs. Some have been known to follow vessels across the ocean, keeping at a respectful distance from the stern. Other birds have been swept out to sea by storms, and have finally sought refuge in the Sargasso sea. Still others, taking refuge on some derelict, have been gradually carried to the same midocean scene.

There is sufficient food floating on the surface or to be obtained from the fishes which live among the forests of seaweed to support a large colony of birds. It is surmised that many of those found in the sea have inhabited those regions for years, partly from choice and partly from necessity. Birds swept out there by storms would not care to venture the long return trip to land, and finding an abundance of food and wrecks on which to rest and rear their young they might easily become contented with their strange lot. Just how far the strong winged sea birds can fly without resting is all conjectural, but it is doubtful if many of them would undertake such a long journey seaward with no better prospects ahead than dreary wastes of water.—Detroit Free Press.

The Greatest Tobacco Users.

The Austrians consume more tobacco than any other nationality or race on the globe, civilized or savage. Recent investigation by eminent statisticians gives the number of pounds consumed annually by each 100 inhabitants of the different European countries as follows: Spain, 110 pounds; Italy, 128; Great Britain, 138; Russia, 182; Denmark, 224; Norway, 239, and Austria, 278.—St. Louis Republic.

Simply Awful

Worst Case of Scrofula the Doctors Ever Saw

Completely Cured by HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

"When I was 4 or 5 years old I had a scrofulous sore on the middle finger of my left hand, which got so bad that the doctors cut the finger off, and later took off more than half my hand. Then the sore broke out on my arm, came out on my neck and face on both sides, nearly destroying the sight of one eye, also on my right arm. Doctors said it was the they ever saw. It was simply awful! Five years ago I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Gradually I found that the sores were beginning to heal. I kept on till I had taken ten bottles, ten dollars! Just think of what a return I got for that investment! A thousand per cent? Yes, many thousand. For the past 4 years I have had no sores. HIS MEMORY IS HONORED.

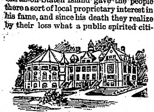
The People of Staten Island Cannot Forget a Distinguished Fellow Citizen.

The long residence of George William Curtis on Staten Island gave the people there a sort of local proprietary interest in his fame, and since his death they realize by their loss what a public spirited citizen he was. He took especial interest in educational matters, and though little was said about it while he lived it now appears that in proportion to his means he was very liberal. His name, therefore, is now honored by his neighbors by being bestowed on various institutions, and a Curtis Memorial hall is to be erected.



CURTIS MEMORIAL HALL.

A public school in West New Brighton is known as the Curtis school. The Staten Island academy, founded in 1884, was another object of interest to Mr. Curtis, and as it has outgrown its present and original quarters at Stapleton a new building is to be erected, and the memorial hall will be in connection with this. The building is to be at New Brighton, the central point for the east and north shores of the island, and is to be fashioned after the Tudor style, the schoolrooms occupying the central or main portion, which is to be flanked by projecting wings.

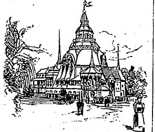
The west wing constitutes a large lyceum hall, and this is to be the Curtis Memorial hall. It opens into the main schoolroom by doors which can be closed to exclude all noise when the hall is needed for other purposes, and has also two outside entrances. The plans indicate that it will be a very complete affair, containing stage, dressing and reception rooms and a large seating capacity, including a balcony on three sides. In the basement will be a gymnasium and recreation room for the boys, with cloak and toilet rooms.

The opposite wing is to be used for the Arthur Winter Memorial library, which was founded in 1886 by Mr. William Winter, the poet and scholar, and his wife in memory of their son Arthur. Mr. Winter is president of the board of trustees of the academy, and was the close associate and personal friend for many years of Mr. Curtis, which makes this conjunction especially appropriate. Thus the entire structure will in time comprise a memorial to Mr. Winter as well as to Mr. Curtis and an academy in which both were interested.

THE SWEDISH BUILDING.

It Will Be One of the Great Attractions at the Fair.

Sweden will make an exhibit at the Chicago World's fair that for extent, variety and interesting novelties will be far greater than one would expect from the size of that country. The building itself will be a great novelty. The site is opposite the Fisheries' building, and owing to the necessities for space it is a triangular plot of 17,300 square feet. To correspond therewith the building will be triangular in form, covering 12,000 square feet.



HOW IT WILL LOOK.

It will be patterned after the old Swedish cathedrals and consist of a main floor and gallery, will have a south front of 164 feet and be made entirely of wood cut and prepared in Sweden and shipped to Chicago in sections. Rising above the center of the front elevation will be a characteristic old Swedish tower 200 feet high. In this building the entire history and progress of Sweden from the stone age to the present time will be illustrated by a series of relics, drawings and specimens of the mechanic arts of the successive eras.

The Northern museum of Sweden will send a portion of its treasures to illustrate the country's progress, and there will be a fine display of the present mining, manufacturing, dairying and other products. Sweden will make no exhibit in the line of fisheries, leaving that entirely to Norway. Thus all the pursuits of the Scandinavian kingdom will be well represented.

Uruguay's Silver Coin.

The government of Uruguay has accepted the offer of Dr. Juan Agustin Barriga for the coinage of 3,000,000 silver dollars, as authorized by the recent law, and the contract has been signed. This contract is for the immediate coinage of only $1,000,000, with option to coin $2,000,000 more when deemed convenient. The price arranged is at seventy cents gold for each silver dollar, thus leaving the state a profit of $300,000 on each $1,000,000 coined. The coinage is to take place in the national mint at Santiago under supervision of the Uruguayan minister in Chili, and the dies made for the coinage of Uruguayan silver in Paris in 1877 are to be used.

After the Coyotes.

In Oregon the people of Crook county are discussing the advisability of offering a bounty for coyote scalps. They are so plentiful that cattle raisers find them killing young calves on the range, and farmers in some localities claim that it is impossible to raise poultry on their farms on account of the ravages of coyotes. The sheep men are terribly annoyed by these pests and suffer severe loss from them each season.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION, issued out of and under the seal of the District Court, in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, upon a judgment rendered and docketed in the said court on the 31st day of December 1886, in an action wherein Johnson & Marshall are plaintiffs and Joseph Grover and Mary Grover are defendants in favor of the said plaintiffs, and against the said defendants, for the sum of one hundred and sixty two and 50-100 dollars, which execution was directed and delivered to me as sheriff in and for the said county of Polk, I have this 14th day of December A. D. 1892, levied upon all the right, title and interest of the said defendants Joseph Grover and Mary Grover in and to the following described real estate, to wit: Lot eight (8), in block twenty-eight (28), of Kretzchmar's addition to the village of Red Lake Falls according to the plat thereof now on record in the office of register of deeds of Polk county, Minnesota, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, and appurtenances thereto, all the above described property being situated in the village of Red Lake Falls, county of Polk and state of Minnesota.

Notice is hereby given that I the undersigned, as sheriff as aforesaid, will sell the above described real property to the highest bidder, for cash, at public auction at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on Tuesday, the 7th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, to satisfy the said execution, together with the interest and costs thereon.

ORDER TO EXAMINE ACCOUNTS.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, December 21st 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Isaac N. Dall, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Nels N. Dall executor of the estate of Isaac N. Dall deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing the final account of his administration and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law:

It is ordered, that said account be examined, and petition heard, by this Court, on Friday the 21st day of January A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the Probate Office in the City of Crookston in said County.

And it is futher ordered, that notice thereof be given to all pesons interested by publishing a copy of this order once in each week, for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars, ($300.00) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jedire Draper and Alice Mariah Draper, his wife, to The Security Trust Company, a corporation bearing date the 4th day of September, A. D., 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of October, A. D. 1890, at 8.40 o'clock a. m., in book 52 of mortgages, on page 447, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lots fifteen and sixteen (15 and 16) of block eighty-two (82) of Kretzschmar's Addition to Red Lake Falls according to the recorded plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

The house passed a resolution endorsing Senator Washburn's anti-option bill and forwarded the same to Washington.

The death of General B. F. Butler removes another of the old veterans who was a prominent figure at the last national encampment. While he was an eccentric character he was one of the best generals in the war.

Governor Nelson seems to be attending strictly to his own knitting work and running as near as he knows how in the interest of all the people despite the wishes of some old-line politicians—barnacles that the ship of state could better do without than with.

The weather prophet Hicks strikes it pretty close on his estimate of January weather so far. When the blizzards were due, they promptly put in an appearance, and when he prophesied "cold weather," lo and behold, the atmosphere straightway waxed right rigid. Great is Hicks the weather prophet.

From the tenor of the bills that have been and that are to be introduced this session we should say that the republican party has taken hold of the matter of reform in good earnest. That party has always been the party of the people and we shall be much mistaken if it fails to prove up on our claim that it is yet.

At first thought, when the matter of an additional judge for this district was suggested the Journal, recognizing the fact that there was more work in this district than one judge can properly attend to, was inclined to favor the idea, but upon looking the matter up more thoroughly we find that there are some districts in which the judges do not have as much to do as they could attend to and some wherein the judges get nearly $100 per day for the time actually employed. This shows clearly that the proper way would be to re-apportion the judicial districts instead of increasing the number of judges.

One striking and unusual feature of the present administration is in the fact that everybody feels confident that Governor Nelson is determined to do the right thing in every particular. In the matter of appointments even the politicians recognize the fact that Mr. Nelson aims to make such appointments as shall be beneficial to the people of state and creditable to his administration. In considering a candidate for an appointive office, Mr. Nelson's sole anxiety is as to the qualifications of said aspirant and his adaptability to the office sought. While he takes advice of politicians their desires weigh no more with him than any others—in fact if there is a difference it is always in favor of the common people.

In its last issue the Grand Forks Courier (printed and published in Grand Forks, N. D.) called attention of its readers to the fact that it is now the official paper of Polk county, Minnesota, and asked the half-a-dozen who ever see it to scan its official report of the proceedings of the Polk county board of commissioners. All who took the pains to do so looked in vain for the "official" report of the bids that were before the board for county printing. If the board was so confident that they had done a wise thing for the county in accepting the offer of a Grand Forks paper to do its work, why did they not publish those bids? If they had published the bids the few readers who see the "official" paper could have seen at a glance the job that was put up.

A good roads convention will be held in St. Paul on the 25th inst, the object being to stir up an agitation on this question and secure better roads. The meeting will be addressed by Jas. J. Hill; Mayor Wright of St. Paul; A. B. Choate; Prof. W. W. Pendergast, O. C. Gregg, superintendent of farmers institutes; Isaac B. Potter, of New York, editor of the magazine, "Good Roads," Rufus Cook, C. E; W. S. Chowen, Gen. C. C. Andrews and Hon. E. J. Hodgson. If this convention will devise some means for securing state or national assistance in the matter of road-building, then it will have accomplished a great good. If the government would quit appropriating millions of dollars for the improvement of useless creeks and fish ponds—just to give somebody a job—and would expend the money on road-making it would be much more beneficial to the people at large.

In the North Dakota sensational fight, Senator Casey leads, and will probably be re-elected.

Hon. Geo. B. Edgerton has been appointed assistant attorney-general to succeed Judge Mills.

Senator Davis has been re-elected to the United States senate. The fact that the small republican majority in the legislature withstood the tempting offers of money to absent themselves, speaks volumes for Senator Davis' popularity and the incorruptability of the republican members.

Senator Sevatson has got through a resolution providing for another wheat investigating committee and Lieut-Governor Clough has appointed two republicans, two people's party and one democrat as said committee. If they go at it right they may find out something. It is there—all they have got to do is to find it.

The populists and the democrats of Kansas have dissolved partnership, each side claiming they are glad to get rid of the other. The cause of the split was the recognition of the populist organization of the house by the populist senate. The fusion scheme cannot be worked successfully for any length of time.

The local land office has received notice that the act of congress of August 4, 1892, extends the provisions of the act of June 3, 1878, over all the public land states, including Minnesota. The act in question is known as the timber and stone act, and allows land which is valuable only for timber or stone to be purchased at $2.50 per acre.

Hompe's bill for building warehouses by the state would no doubt be a good way to stop speculation if it could be made constitutional, but that does not suit some of the farmers in that the bill calls for a 2,000,000 bushel house, instead of 20,000,000 as they desire. The bill is not liable to become a law and it is questionable if it would hold water if it did as some of its provisions seem clearly unconstitutional.

It is given out in St. Paul that Ira B. Mills, late judge of this district has been appointed on the railroad commission to succeed J. P. Williams. Judge Mills will be satisfactory to the people of northern Minnesota, and will be a good man for the place. The commission will have the benefit of his splendid legal ability, and the people of the state will have a man on the commission who is in touch with them and fully alive to their needs.

If Governor Nelson desires to please the people of this upper country he will appoint Professor S. D. Farnsworth in the place of Supt. Kiehle, who has been in that position for twelve years—until he has become super-annuated. Prof. Farnsworch taught in Ada, was principal of the city schools here and is now principal of a school in St. Paul. That would be a good appointment and one that would be approved by the people of the state. You may depend that the governor will do just what he thinks the best interests of the state demands.

Senator Lommen's bill to reduce the rate of interest seems likely to pass, from the fact that the southern members, who come from a section that has an established reputation, and whose constituents can borrow all the money they want at from 6 to 8 per cent, will be likely to favor it. While the Journal is firm in the belief that it would not be for the best interests of this section we do not object to its passage if the majority demand it. We should consult our own best interests in the matter and if we are in a position where we do not need money or in such a position as to be able to get all we want at 6 or 8 per cent. why pass the bill, otherwise it is better to wait until we are.

That great statesman, James G. Blaine' still continues to be a very sick man with the prospects that he cannot long survive. The nation waits with bated breath the outcome meanwhile the great man is wrestling with the great messenger. Mr. Blaine, though he never reached the goal of his ambition is one of the leading minds of the age, and will leave behind him a heritage greater than many a man who has become president. Far better for the United States would it be could he have been president instead of Grover Cleveland, or R. B. Hayes or even Harrison. As time rolls on and reveals the true greatness of the man this fact will become more and more apparent.

Parties desiring to purchase city property or farm lands in Polk county should see E. M. Walsh for bargains. Office in Fournet block.

A FARMER'S VIEWS.

Euclid, Jan. 8th, 1893.

Editors Journal.—Thanking you for compliments in your editorial of last week entitled, "Our Position," I ask to say that so far as I am acquainted with you personally, my heart echoes back the same compliments. But leaving out personalities, I wish to suggest that your "position" is just about as you have printed it. It does not strike me as a noble magnanimous position. It is not "because the Journal does not endorse the wild theories of the people's party" that I have thought the Journal is not in sympathy with the common people who are struggling under tremendous political disadvantages to obtain a very poor living, denying themselves all luxuries and many necessaries to make ends meet and depriving their children of the education that the times demands, thus perpetuating their difficulties. Nor did I so write, nor did I give as a reason, "the fact that the Journal supports the republican party," though I cannot for my life see how a man who is in sympathy with the toiling masses can support either of the old parties which are so manifestly run by the rich and in the interest of the rich. The reason that I did give, was that the Journal too often slurs the principles and men of the reform party, which is dear to many of its subscribers, your editorial proves it again.

I do not question any man's right to be an honest republican, and in all honorable ways support all of the good principles of that or any other party, I only question your "sympathy for the common people" because you so ridicule their efforts to better their condition by political organization, as if they had no political rights except to vote the republican ticket.

You wrong me when you insinuate that I worship Donnelly or any other man, though I would give the Devil himself his just dues. He has done noble work for the common people. His secret motives I cannot tell, but I do not know them to be bad. True I voted for Donnelly for governor, he was the nominee. When Owen had the nomination I voted for him, I vote for the principle they advocate, and I believe either of those men would have carried out the principles that would alleviate the class which is in distress, and rap the knuckles of those who are too everlastingly greedy even for their own or anybody's good. I believe that the farmers, mechanics and laborers have a common cause, and that they must and will organize themselves into a political party before they can ever obtain their political rights. I do not believe that the people's party is any more in the "throes of dissolution" than the republican party. If you think they are, your "position" is ignoble to keep kicking them. I believe the principles of the people's party will live to bury both old parties.

Very Truly,
American Farmer.

Replying to the above criticism, which, while we have no doubt of the honesty of the writer is an obviously unfair one because it places the Journal in positions that it does not occupy, and never has, we wish to say first that the Journal management has just as great interests in the country as has "American Farmer" and feels the prosperity or lack of it just as keenly and only differs with him in the proper methods to apply to bring the needed relief. We do not ridicule the efforts of such men as "American Farmer" in their efforts to obtain needed relief, we sympathize with them and have worked as hard as any of them to obtain that relief but we do wonder that they are so completely under the thumb of Donnelly and men of like ilk who never did one thing to relieve them except to pour out honied words to them, magnifying their troubles a thousand fold and suggesting things too impracticable for any use—and all simply and solely for their own benefit. We defy "American Farmer" or any other man to point to any good thing that Donnelly ever did to benefit the farming interests of the state. As to the platform he has laid down it contains so much that is so wild and visionary that even Donnelly himself repudiated it in the last campaign when he tried to fuse with the democrats for offices. If it is true that Mr. Donnelly, as you say, works for a principle why did he fuse with the democratic party (whom you say is devoid of principle) and urge his followers to do so? Mr. Owen is a man for whom we have great respect and yet your party allowed him to be slaughtered, together with others who sought not their own but others' good. Your party boasts of being a reform party and two years ago you went before the people of this county with the statement that "things were getting mighty corrupt at the court house" that "a ring had for years perfect control and any amount of corruption would be revealed if the rascals were turned out" that you would "cut down expenses everywhere if you could only get control of the offices." You did get complete control. You turned the "rascals" out horse, foot and dragoon and the people have been patiently waiting ever since to see where they had misapplied or wasted one single dollar. You elected your "reform" officers and not one dollar that we ever heard of has been saved to the taxpayers of this county, nay more than that you have added expenses you have made the taxes greater. The Journal showed its sympathy for the common people by offering to do the printing for less than one-half what the Times et al offered, and yet your "reform" board voted for the highest bidder, and you people paid from $2000 to $3000 more for that one item than you need to have done and did it without a whimper. You have done the very same thing this year and yet you call yourselves "reformers!" Don't you think that there is a little bit of sham in your professions of reform? Or do you think it is all right because your party does it? We have cited this one case because it amply illustrates the kind of reform the Donnelly-Fish crowd is giving the people and yet you say you endorse brother Donnelly's "principles!" The Journal has proved it's sympathy to the common people by earnestly opposing the ambitions of some of the members of it's own party who sought to carry out their own schemes by over-riding the wishes of the people. We do not tolerate those who place their own selfish ambitions ahead of the best interests of the people, and if you will take the history of the republican party and honestly investigate it we are confident that you will find it's principles better calculated to conduce to the interests of the people as a whole than the professions of any other party. You say that partys get corrupt, which is a very serious reflection upon the common people which are the partys after all for if they cannot remain pure and keep the old partys pure how can the forming a new party help matters? That evils do exist is true and that they are grievous to be borne is equally true, but is it not true also that a great many of them arise from sources entirely within the power of common people to avoid? Whiskey is one of the greatest of these evils but if the common people did not use it, it would not be as great an evil to them. We are positive that "American Farmer" does not use it, but we are just as positive that he has to pay a pretty heavy tax on account of it, because so many of the common people do use it. Legislation can control and curtail its power but christianity and education can do more to destroy its power than any other means, and so it is of a great many evils that do afflict mankind. We are sorry that American Farmer has the idea that we are in sympathy with rich aristrocrats and not with common people for that leaves us on a barren island all alone by ourselves for we are not of that class by any means, and if we do not belong to the toiling masses we are out in the cold entirely! Our friend does not do us justice in attempting to define our position. We are not kicking the rank and file in the people's party—the honest men in it, only the leaders and such as we know to be demagogic—in it for their own selfish interests. We have some warm personal friends in its ranks—men whom we believe to be perfectly honest in their beliefs but it is a wonder to us how they can place such implicit trust in the men who today control their party, but we believe the day is not far distant when their eyes will be opened to the truth and they will see this matter as we see it. They will see the true character of the men whom they so implicitly and blindly trust, and where they have been misled. The position of the Journal on the old alliance ever has been that it was a good thing for the farmers, and if it had been controlled by the rank and file it would have been the means of great good. While the farmers had a perfect right to carry it into politics—and the Journal never denied that right, it was not the best thing for them to do because schemers from the old parties stood ready to capture the organization and run it in their own personal interests and they did it and left the farmers out in the cold altogether. The platform that they made is so impracticable that it would take years to make it a success even if it ever could be done, while on the other hand all that can be accomplished by legislation could have been done by this time through either one of the old parties if the alliance had simply held itself as a balance of power to control the action of the old party it chose to support. This course would have been for better for the common people who only sought relief from existing evils but would have been tough on those office-seekers who obtained an office through this agitation and who today don't care a rap for the farmers. While we have no sympathy, nor time either for this sort of demagogery we do have and always have had for the common people—to whom we belong. As to building up a party of farmers and laboring-men you will find a crowd that lacks cohesion.

CHAPTER XIV.

Harkins at first saw only the four renegades as he peered around the corner of the rock. Looking again, he discovered a female seated at the foot of a tree not far away. Her back was toward him and her head was held down, and he could not make out whether she was young or old, a white woman or a squaw.

"I say, curse the luck!" exclaimed one of the men in a brutal voice. "It looks as if they might also have heard of the cave and gold, else why would they come so directly to this spot?"

"How many did you count?" asked another.

"Three wagons and ten or twelve men," replied the other. "I didn't dare go too clus, you know."

"Too strong for us to wipe out, eh?" queried one of the men who was lying down.

"But they've got to go somehow," growled the man who had first spoken. "We haven't come this fur and taken all these chances to be scooped out of that gold. With the redskins on the one side and these fools on the other we dasn't show hand or head."

"Whar's all yer brains, Bob?" asked one of the men with a laugh.

"Give us some head work and say how we are going to sarcumvent the wagon folks."

"It's got to be head work, and I've got it all thought out. I'm going down among 'em tomorrer. Is that gal all right?"

He rose to his feet so that he could be sure she was still sitting at the foot of the tree, and one of the men growled:

"She's right 'nuff, blast her! I only wish we'd hev let the wolves pick her bones! I never knowed any such foolin around with wimmin folks to bring luck."

"Then I'll give ye something new," sneered Bob as he sat down. "I've got plans about that gal, and them as don't like my plans had better go further and work on their own hook!"

"Oh, come off with yer quarrels!" called the fourth man as he rolled off the bed of brush and sat up. "Is there any move by the party below?"

"Nothing except they hev gone into camp for the summer, blocking our road out!" answered the leader.

"And they are going to stay right thar, eh?"

"Not after tomorrer—not if my name is Bob, and I reckon it ar."

"They don't suspicion us?"

"Not the least. None of 'em hev cum up this fur yet, and so they hevn't seen the wagon tracks."

"Hev we made any mistake about the canyon?"

"Nary one. I'll stake my life on it. I went fur 'nuff up today to be sartain. All we want is a clear road for a day or two, and we'll load the wagon and be off."

Harkins had gathered enough to be certain that Bridger's cave and its treasures were known to the renegades as well as to himself and Taylor. The dying old hunter had said that he alone possessed the secret, but it was evident that it had been talked of to others. These four men, outlaws though they were, and probably as brave as that class of men usually are, would not have penetrated into the Indian country thus far with no stronger force had not a valuable stake depended.

So the female was a girl and a prisoner?

If a prisoner, then there must have been an act of violence to make her so. Perhaps it was Bess! The father shivered at the thought, and the thought would have led him to do some desperate thing had it not been put away almost immediately. The prisoner raised her head and looked around, and it was a face he had never seen before. It betrayed anxiety and suffering, and he instantly resolved that he would take any risk to help.

The sun was now hidden behind the mountain and it was twilight around the campfire. The men sat smoking or thinking for a quarter of an hour without a word, and then one of them rose and disappeared. Ten minutes later he returned with a bag of provisions and a bottle of whisky, and Bob said:

"Yes, we might as well hev a bite now as any other time. Give the gal her share. If she's still too mulish to eat let her throw it away."

The man carried some bread and meat to the girl, but she gave him no heed. More wood was thrown on the fire, the bottle passed from hand to hand, and by the time darkness had settled down the four renegades were in good spirits and seemingly good natured.

Then Harkins could no longer see the girl, though perhaps those at the fire had her in view.

Here was a new and a double danger, he reflected as he carefully crept away. It was not enough that the renegades had come for the gold, but they were plotting against the wagon train and would not stop at murder. It was clearly his duty to reach the train as soon as possible and warn his companions of the presence and designs of these intruders. Darkness had come on, but he knew the general direction of camp and hoped to be able to reach it some time during the night.

But what of the prisoner? Under the circumstances not more than one man in a thousand would have done more than to wish that he could help her. Harkins was that one man. He had been strangely drawn to her, and her situation aroused all his sympathies. He determined to attempt her rescue even at the peril of his life. He drew away from the mass of rock, strapped his rifle to his back, and then crept over the rough ground on hands and knees, moving to flank the party on the right.

It was a rough and dangerous route, leading over great masses of rock, under thick pines and across seams or rifts, but he moved with care until well in the rear of the camp.

Then his route was down the side of the mountain until all at once he came upon the wagon. It had been pulled up out of the valley to be hidden by the trees. The horses he could not see, they having been lariated out at some spot where there was grazing.

Looking up at the campfire from the wagon the Englishman could see the four renegades playing cards by the blaze. Between him and them was the girl. He hesitated only long enough to get his bearings and then began creeping upward. He felt now that more depended on the girl than himself. If she was asleep she might scream out as he aroused her. If she saw him come creeping up she might take him for an Indian and alarm her captors. Even should all go right up to that moment, would she have the nerve and strength to creep away with him?

Half way to the fire the brave Englishman halted to canvass the chances with himself. He realized the hazards, but after a couple of minutes he continued on his way. By and by, as he elevated his head above a bowlder, he saw the girl before him and not five feet away. She was sitting upright and had her face turned toward him.

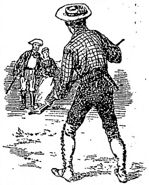
Harkins lifted his right hand as a signal.

The girl lifted a hand in answer.

Then he beckoned to her to come.

She answered with a sweep of her hand, which told him that she was tied to the tree.

CHAPTER XV.



A man and a woman approached him.

Taylor entered the camp about mid-afternoon, hatless and apparently in great distress from having come at such a rapid pace. He reported that he and Harkins had been attacked by about a dozen Indians soon after eating their noonday meal, and that while Harkins had been shot down he had miraculously escaped the deadly bullets and dashed for the camp. He had been pursued up to within rifle shot of the wagons, and he pretended great fear lest the camp would be immediately attacked.

Two of the prospectors had returned, but two others were still out. Before waiting to question Taylor or hear his whole story the camp prepared for defense, and it was only after an hour had passed away that any one questioned the near presence of Indians.

Bess knew nothing of her bereavement until the captain and others began to question Taylor. About this time the other party came in, and it transpired that Taylor alone had seen Indians. None of the others had seen the slightest cause for alarm. In repeating his story Taylor got it badly mixed, and when he attempted to console the girl, who stood listening to every detail with tearless eyes, she answered:

"It may be so, but I cannot believe it. I shall not believe it until I see his dead body."

"But are you doubting my words, miss?"

"If the Indians killed him his body will be lying where it fell," she answered. "You can find the spot again—you must find it. We cannot go now, as night is coming on, but we shall go in the morning. If the wild beasts have spared his body, I want it for Christian burial. If they have not, I want what bones they may leave."

"What did you fire at today?" asked Joe as he reached for Taylor's gun and proved by the blacking on his finger thrust into the bore that it had been recently discharged.

"I—I fired on the Injuns, of course," stammered Taylor.

"Oh, you did! We thought you said you had your gun on your back and was climbing up a mass of rock to get a look around?"

"I—I've got to lie down and think it over and quiet my nerves. I've had such a close call that I'm rattled and can't remember just how it all was."

As Taylor flung himself down the men gathered in a group to discuss his story. There was something queer about it, but as no one knew of his feeling against Harkins there was no key to his actions. Bess sought to furnish one by saying:

"I know this man hated father, and I could see it every time he looked at us. Why he did I do not know, but I know that he had an ill will. If father is dead he had something to do with it!"

"Hush, child!" cautioned the captain of the train. "Your father and Taylor were good friends as far as I could see. It is an awful charge to bring against a man—that of betraying a comrade."

"But he told two or three different stories about it," answered Joe, "and his actions are suspicious. If he has done this he shall"——

"I will shoot him with my own hand!" sternly replied the captain. "Let everything rest till he awakes. It may have been as he says—that fright and exhaustion may have upset him."

"But he must guide us to the spot in the morning," persisted Joe.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Euclid.

From our regular correspondent.

Miss Katie Sturh is over from Red Lake Falls spending a few days with the old folks at home.

H. G. Fargo tarried in Crookston a few days last week. He says that he attended the fire. But it did not do him any good, as he had the same suit on when he came home. He might have had a chunk of bologna under his coat, though.

Miss Ida Hancock took oath as assistant county superintendent of schools, Wednesday.

Miss Brink, of St. Hilaire, is visiting with the family of Wm. Davidson.

Paul Useldinger has been out wolfing so much that he is the possessor of a nice large wolf pet.

Miss Bertha Michaelson celebrated her birthday anniversary last Wednesday evening.

Mr. Joseph Allen proved up on his homestead Wednesday.

John Red was in doing business Friday.

Geo. Noesen, of Crookston, is visit with the family of Mike Biever.

I. W. C. Misner's son Harold, and daughter, Besta, had an attack of the scarlet fever.

E. C. Murney, John Ghoosen, L. S. Hancock and Theodore Myers were among the Euclidites who were in the Queen City last week.

Mr. Avery, representing the firm of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co., of St. Paul, was up doing business with E. Taylor & Co., Monday.

Miss Alvina Vonderbeck entertained a number of her friends, Saturday evening, it being her birthday anniversary.

Mrs. Andrew Monson is among those who are under the doctor's care.

Mr. Grundall with his brother-in-law, Frank Miller, will run the Kelso farm this season.

E. B. Ballou has been on the sick list this week.

School opened Monday after a three weeks vacation.

We understand that Mr. Currie is holding a private school at his house and if any of the young ladies or men wish to attend, they can do so by paying a small tuition fee.

The town board held a meeting Monday afternoon to transact some important business.

Mike's Share of the Swag.

Thief River Falls Press:—The very first act of our supposed-to-be-reform board of county commissioners, was to establish a pretty precedent for an economic future, by letting the county printing to the "highest" bidder. The Crookston Times, McIntosh Times and East Grand Forks Courier were awarded the work for ensuing year. The Times in its attempt to excuse this action proves itself hard put by using the same old gag that the tax-payers get more value for the money paid. The fact is the Times' bid was the highest and the JOURNAL's circulation is well known to be the largest. If the commissioners were so attentively looking to the tax-payers interests, why was not the JOURNAL's bid accepted. The Times' hard strained excuse is bosh. The fact is Mike Kirsch as usual, runs the county board and in order for him to get his share of the swag the Times' bid must be accepted even though it be the highest.

Strong Wants to Know.

East Grand Forks Review:—The Crookston JOURNAL says "Duffy had his collar on Commissioner Anderson." Of that we can't say, but we will say that there will be "music in the air" at the next meeting of the county board, or we fail to grasp the situation. Minnesota has a law governing the actions of the county board, and if they fail to do their duties according to law it is no more than just that they be compelled by law to do it, or step down and out. Business circumstances over which we had no control, rendered it impossible for us to be present at the last meeting Tuesday Jan. 3rd, but we will make it a point to be on hand at the next one and we will ascertain also, whether it is legal to let the county printing to a paper "printed and published in North Dakota."

Same Old Game.

Fisher Bulletin:—It seems that the same game was worked this year by the Crookston Times to secure the county printing. A resolution, almost the counterpart of the one adopted last year, was introduced and put through, viz: "Considering the circulation and standing of the papers, we find this bid to be the lowest"—and this in spite of the fact that there were at least two other bids that were lower than that tendered by the Times, by a large majority. The resolution is said to have been prepared by the Times typewriter in the morning before the board met and given to Commissioner DeMers, who introduced it and with the assistance of Kirsch and Anderson it went through. This is a shining example of "reform" legislation, on the policy of which Anderson was elected.

MONEY IS RAISED.

To Push the Completion of the Duluth & Winnipeg

Pioneer Press:—Donald Grant, director of the Duluth & Winnipeg, interviewed yesterday, said: "H. J. Boardman, of Boston, president of the Duluth & Winnipeg road, has completed a deal with prominent Boston and New York capitalists to liquidate the entire indebtedness of the road, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, and to complete the construction of the same in a manner satisfactory to all parties concerned, on condition that the railroad company transfers about one-half of the stock of the road to them. This transfer of stock has been made and the money raised. We still retain a controling interest. There is no truth in the statements that either J J. Hill or the Canadian Pacific road, is about to gain or has gained control of the Winnipeg road. We expect to push the construction of the road next season to completion, although the definite route that it will take has not yet been decided upon. The company also expects to build into Duluth at the earliest possible date."

"This is the only correct statement concerning the affairs of the road thus far given out for publication." Mr. Grant stated also that the company does not at present favor the project of asking the Minnesota legislature for a land grant.

DR. PRICE'S BAKING POWDER.

Supplying the Army, Navy and Indian Department.

Chicago Inter-Ocean:—The purchasing agents of the United States Government have ordered nearly one hundred thousand pounds of Dr. Price's Baking Powder in the first five months of this year, 1892.

The government exercises great care in selecting its supplies of all kinds, rejecting everything that is not of the best, and the very fact it has adopted Dr. Price's Baking Powder is proof that it has found it the best of all the baking powders. Dr. Price's is peculiarly adapted for export, as neither long sea voyages nor climate changes affect it, this brand keeping fresh and sweet for years while other baking powders deteriorate rapidly.

It is guaranteed to the government to be a pure cream of tartar powder free from ammonia, alum, or other harmful substances, and it is also the only baking powder prepared by a physician of high standing.

Platforms.

One of the best illustrations of "anything to get the coon" was a story of a late campaign. A republican senator from a "free silver state" was asked how he could stand on the platform of his party, as it did not favor his monetary ideas. "Well, it's about this way. A friend of mine on a pleasant summer day boarded a railroad train. As he only intended to ride about five miles, he remained on the car platform enjoying the scenery and the breeze. Soon the brakeman approached—'Please get inside the car, sir.' 'But it's more pleasant out here.' 'Orders is—passengers not allowed to stand on the platform.' 'Well what's a platform for, if not to stand on?' 'What's a platform for?' It's not to stand on, sir, but to get in on." "You see," said the senator, "why I don't care about the anti-silver plank—it's only to get in on." That may do very well for some politicians, but the Burlington stands on, and stands by, the planks of its platform, which are: Best equipment, fast time, smoothest tracks, absolute safety, sure connections, courtesy to passengers, special attention to ladies traveling alone, or in charge of children. Goes everywhere. For tickets, rates or further particulars, apply to any agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The New Peterson for February is an advance on the January number, admirable as that was in every respect. The illustrations are still better and more numerous, and the stories and miscellaneous articles are as good as they are varied. "The Evolution of Comic Opera," by Edward Stephens, is a very clever record of that favorite amusement and gives capital portraits of the leading singers of the day. "La Perdida" is one of Gertrude Atherton's most dramatic stories of early California days and is effectively illustrated. "Art in Mikado-Land," by Robert B. Graham, is an exceedingly well written paper, and the illustrations are capital. The New Peterson is meeting from the outset with a complete success which is certain to last, because it is thoroughly deserved. Terms, two dollars per year. Address Peterson Magazine Co., Philadelphia.

KING OF GHOULS.

A NEWSPAPER MAN'S FIND IN WASHINGTON.

Under the Guise of a Doctor Looking for Subjects He Interviews George W. Marlowe, Who Admits Robbing Over Three Hundred Graves in a Year.

NEW YORK, Jan 17—The Advertiser's Washington special says: The brief dispatch in the Advertiser telling of the grave robbers at work, was fully corroborated two hours later when George W Marlowe, the king of ghouls, delivered four bodies to three colleges This was verified by the watchers on duty

The King of Ghouls.

Marlowe himself admitted to a reporter who called at his home and represented that he was a doctor in search of "subjects," that he had robbed the graves with the assistance of three stalwart sons He lives at 237 Fourteenth street, northeast He is a heavy set negro with sharp features, a heavy black mustache and long mutton chop whiskers He made the astounding statement he was regularly engaged in the business of body snatching and shipped his ghastly booty to numerous points throughout the country

Profits of the Business

From the calculations made, Marlowe's income must exceed $5,000 per annum Fifteen dollars per subject is the ruling price in Washington colleges, and $25 for bodies shipped to points outside In Washington the students pay $18 for each cadaver, leaving a profit of $3 for the demonstrator

Marlowe said that he supplied at regular intervals the dissecting material for the medical department of the Columbian University, the Georgetown University Medical college, the Howard University Medical college, and the National University Medical college

Nearly One a Day.

All these but the last named were supplied Tuesday morning Two dead women to Georgetown, one dead man to the Columbian and one dead woman to the Howard

"During the past year," said Marlowe in the course of the interview, "I resurrected and sold 340 subjects Of these only fourteen came from potter's field"

THAT FATAL CROSSING.

Another Chicago Street Car Run Down by a Swiftly Moving Train.

CHICAGO, Jan 17—Another street car railway collission at Forty-seventh street seriously injured seven persons, one of whom will die A through train on the Rock Island road, leaving this city at 11:15, tore through a street car and each of the seven passengers and the driver were buried beneath the wreck of iron, wood and glass

Driver and Conductor Arrested.

The conductor of the car, John Taylor, and the injured driver, Charles Saunders, were both placed under arrest notwithstanding the serious wounds of Saunders The collision occurred about 11:50 The car containing the six passengers was on its way to State street in charge of Conductor John Taylor As he approached the well known crossing he says that he looked ahead, and, although the gates were up, he saw the train coming He claims he notified the driver to stop, but as he did so some one called to Saunders to proceed as the way was clear Whatever the cause, the car was started and was on the track when bore down upon it The car had nearly succeeded in crossing the tracks when the engine struck the rear end of it and it was overturned The force was terrific The car was a total wreck and the six passengers were buried beneath the shivered glass and broken timbers While the passengers were buried beneath the ruins of the car help arrived from the immediate vicinity, and efforts were made to rescue them The six passengers and Driver Saunders were taken from the mass of wreckage and carried into a neighboring saloon, where they at once received medical attention Driver Saunders was taken to a police station in an unconscious condition

IN BLAZING CARS.

Peculiar and Fatal Accident on a Russian Railway.

ST PETERSBURG, Jan 17—A most peculiar and fatal railway accident occurred on the line between Slatousk and Samaria A train composed of several cars filled with recruits, was running from Slatousk to Samaria, when the flames burst from the foremost car The train was going at full speed, and the tongues of fire swept backward, and in a few minutes all the cars were blazing The engineer for some reason did not stop the train until he had run a considerable distance In the meantime there was a scene of indescribable confusion in the cars The recruits, or at least as many of them as could,

Leaped from the Windows and Doors.

Some of them landed uninjured in the heavy snow banks, while others who landed on the cleared track were killed Those who were unable to get out of the cars were burned to death for the train was entirely consumed Some of the men were terribly burned before they jumped When the confusion had somewhat subsided, the officer in charge of the recruits, who saved himself by jumping, called the roll of his men It was found that forty-nine of them were dead and twenty terribly burned and otherwise injured

Smith for Senator.

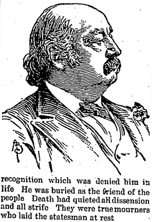
TRENTON, N J, Jan 17—The joint Democratic caucus held here nominated James Smith, Jr, for United States senator Governor Abbott withdrew his name at the last minute

LAID TO REST.

General Butler's Remains Followed to the Grave by Rich and Poor.

LOWELL, Mass, Jan 17—The foremost citizen soldier of Massachusetts has been laid in the ground with the honors, both military and civil, to which his rank entitled him Thousands gathered around his bier to attest their sorrow at his departure The chief executive of the commonwealth and the humblest workman stood elbow to elbow at his grave

Major General Benjamin F Butler, jurist, ex-congressman and ex-governor, received in death the full measure of recognition which was denied him in life He was buried as the friend of the people Death had quieted all dissension and all strife They were true mourners who laid the statesman at rest



A Whole City Mourned His Death.

A commonwealth ceased its executive duties to bury its former chief The veterans of the great civil struggle, in which the dead man figured so prominently, rallied around him by thousands on his last march, eager to show by their devotion that they accorded to him the full measure of credit for what he had done to save the nation in its hour of peril The bench and bar, too, sent their most honored representatives to bury the great lawyer The private services were held at the house, the eulogy was spoken and the family surrendered the body to those who had been associated with him in the greater affairs of public life and who asked the privilege of laying the body in the grave Rev Dr Chambre conducted the religious services and the Masons gave a short ritual Thousands followed the procession to the burying ground

CHAPTER XI.

Let us go back a little.

On the day the wagon train with which we had to do turned aside and erected its defense against the Indians massed to overwhelm it, another train was creeping over the plains not more than thirty miles to the north

It was the outfit of a party of gold hunters which had crossed the state of Nebraska from Sidney and was moving for the east side of the Black Hills There were seven wagons and fifteen horsemen, and one of the wagons contained the wife and daughter of one of the gold hunters.

It seems singular that husbands and fathers would not leave wives and children behind to safety when setting out on expeditions fraught with such hardship and peril, but the history of the great west shows that woman has been one of the foremost in encountering the perils of frontier life. Men have grown dissatisfied with civilization and pushed out until beyond all protection and in hourly danger, and wives and children have cheerfully gone with them.

A few Indians had been encountered many alarms had been experienced there had been hardship and suffering: but on the day of which we write there was nothing to alarm, and the people of the train were in good spirits at the knowledge that their long journey was almost ended.

In the making up of the expedition numerical strength had been considered more than character. Any and every one was taken that could provide himself with a wagon or a horse and rifle. The first day's travel proved that a great mistake had been made. While the owners of the wagons were mostly men of steady habits and good character looking for homes as well as for gold, the majority of the horsemen were turbulent and unruly characters, some of whom at least were leaving civilized Nebraska and pushing into the Indian country from fear of the law. They carried a plentiful supply of whisky with them, and they made it plainly understood that they would obey the captain's orders only when it suited them to do so. At the first campfire six of the wagoners, disgusted with the outlook, were in favor of turning back, but the captain, who was an old plainsman, encouraged them to go on by saying:

"These men are like sailors who always start on a voyage full of liquor. After we get beyond civilization they will tone down and become as humble as you please."

But he was a false prophet so far as four of them was concerned. These four men were well mounted and armed, and they had the look and demeanor of border ruffians. They had evidently joined the train to enjoy its protection, and in return defiantly refused to afford it any of theirs. To compel them to stand guard and assist in the various other duties would be to bring on a fight and this the trainmen wished to avoid If the four men were driven away it would only be after they killed some one, and the train would then be so crippled in strength that it might fall a prey to the first roving band of Indians encountered.

For two or three days all hands had been expecting to meet with a force of redskins who would attempt to block the way, but to their great surprise the country seemed entirely clear of them. They were gathered, as the reader knows, to attack the party coming across from Brule City.

When the train halted for dinner the four men we have referred to drew off by themselves and held an earnest conversation as they broke their fast.

"It isn't over twenty-five miles to the Hills from this," said one, "and if we are to do anything it must be done tonight."

"How many wagons do we want, Bob?" asked a second.

"Only one. We want the best wagon and the best team."

"And that's Brown's," said a third.

"Just what I was going to say," added the fourth.

"I had already settled on that," observed Bob, who was evidently the leader of the gang. "First, because it's the best outfit; and second, because I want revenge on the whole family."

"They don't like us any too well," chuckled one of the men.

"I reckon not, and now's our chance to get even. We want to fix that wagon in about two hours from this. It's about four hours' haul to the south fork of the Cheyenne, and that's where the train will camp tonight."

"What about Brown?" asked one of the men.

Bob drew his finger across his throat.

"And the old woman?"

Bob repeated his gesture.

"And the gal?"

"I want the gal spared," he replied. "Mebbe I shall turn her loose after awhile, and mebbe I shall trade her off to some Indian chief for a dozen ponies. I'm told that the big chiefs are paying fancy prices for white gals this summer."

At this there was a loud laugh from the four, and when it had subsided Bob resumed:

"Yes, that gal must be considered my property, and don't you fellows get up any kick about it. We'll make a square divide on the gold, but keep your hands off the gal."

"Have you got a plan?" whispered one of the men as he saw that a number of the trainmen were suspiciously regarding the group.

"Leave that to me. You fellows just go on about your business and be on hand when wanted. If the plan I've got miscarries, I'll let you know in time to try something else."

After a halt of an hour the train moved on. It was fair traveling now, and the sight of the mountains in the distance and the thought of the gold to be obtained put every one in fine spirits and created a desire to push on as rapidly as possible. Six miles from the south fork there was a halt, and a scout went forward to select a route for the wagons over a bad piece of ground. The four renegades nodded to each other, but while three of them rode forward and officiously offered their services to the captain, Bob made his way to Brown's wagon, which was the last in the line. Its occupants were on the seat in front, all interested in what was going on ahead, and in three minutes the renegade had removed the linchpins from both hind wheels of the heavy wagon. The "prairie schooners," as the big wagons of that date were called, had these pins in the place of burrs, now so generally used.

A quarter of an hour later, as the wagons started forward, the wheels had made only a few turns when both rolled away and the rear end of the wagon came down with a crash. By this time the leading wagon was half a mile in advance.

"Very careless of you, Brown, not to look your wagon over occasionally," said the captain as he halted the train and rode back to ascertain the cause of delay.

"I did look it over at noon and everything was all right," replied Brown.

"Well, those pins dropped out somewhere within a quarter of a mile, and the thing is to find 'em."

Half a dozen men walked back over the trail for a hundred rods, but without avail. Then each wagoner was asked for spare pins, but none could be had. More than one had an extra set, but their nearness to gold had brought forth a selfish spirit.

"I may want them myself," each one argued, and each one denied that it was in his power to accommodate.

Another and closer search was made, and while it was going on there were loud murmurs all along the line.

"Let us go on!"

"We can't be responsible for his carelessness!"

"What's the matter that he can't follow our trail to the river?"

The thirst for gold closes the human heart to friendship, pity or Christian spirit. Each moment of delay was felt to be dollars lost, and finally the teams began to push on without orders.

"See here, Brown," said the captain when he saw them going, "the boys are off, but it's only an hour to the river. Just take a sharper look for those pins and you'll turn 'em up and be able to come on. If you don't join us in an hour I'll send you the pins from my wagon."

"And you are all going forward and leave me alone and liable to be butchered by the Indians!" demanded the wagoner.

"No danger—not the slightest. There isn't a redskin within twenty miles of us. I've got to go on, but perhaps some of the horsemen will stay and help you to fix up."

"Aye, that we will!" answered Bob, who was waiting for the opportunity. "Here are four of us who won't see you left defenseless. Here, Jack, you ride on to the river with the train and bring back those pins, while the rest of us will keep up the search and be on hand to help put on the wheels."

The four who were to stay were the renegades. Brown had rather been left alone, for he was firmly satisfied that they were bad men, but he could not make a decent excuse to rid himself of their presence. And besides he felt that there was danger from the Indians, no matter what the captain thought.

Mrs. Brown was a woman past forty, but in excellent health and having a man's courage. Her daughter Lizzie was twenty years old, born on the frontier and inheriting more than the average woman's nerve and endurance. While the three outlaws left behind were making what seemed to be a very careful search of the trail and were out of earshot, Brown queried of his wife:

"Mother, don't you think there is something queer about it?"

"I do, Daniel—I do," she promptly replied. "I believe those pins were purposely removed. Indeed, I remember to have heard the noise of their being knocked out when we were halted."

"Just what I suspect! Who could have done it and for what?"

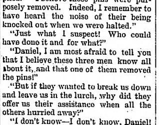
"Daniel, I am most afraid to tell you that I believe these three men know all about it, and that one of them removed the pins!"

"But if they wanted to break us down and leave us in the lurch, why did they offer us their assistance when all the others hurried away?"

"I don't know—I don't know, Daniel! Who knows but they mean to murder us and run off with the team! Let us unharness the horses and mount them and ride on. I feel that some great shadow of danger hangs over us."

"Do, father!" added the girl. "I am sure it is a plot to murder us all!"

CHAPTER XII.



He came up and seized her as she sank down.

"We are too mistrustful and suspicions," replied the father as he looked from the wagons, still in sight, to the renegades searching the trail. "No one would dare molest us with the camp only a few miles away, and the man will be back with the pins before sundown anyhow."

He spoke thus to encourage himself as well as his wife and daughter, but neither of the three felt any the less anxious. The settler looked to his Winchester to see that it was in order, removed the bridles from the horses that they might feed while he waited and then stood on the alert for what might happen.

The sun was only a handbreadth above the horizon when the three renegades returned to the wagon and exhibited one of the pins, which they claimed was found a full mile away. A pry was now got in position, the heavy body of the wagon raised so that the wheels could be slipped on the axletree and then one wheel was made secure.

The settler and his family watched the three men closely while they worked, but they seemed intent only on helping the people out of their trouble.

"We may be rough in looks and bad in spots," exclaimed Bob as he wiped the sweat from his forehead with his buckskin sleeve, "but we ain't mean 'nuff to abandon a lone family to the tomahawks of the Indians."

"It is very brave and generous on your part, and I thank you a thousand times over," replied Brown. "I wouldn't have believed that the train people would act so selfishly."

"I reckon we've been parceled out as the worst of the lot, but that don't make us so. I don't claim we are saints, but I do say that when the pinch comes we can be depended on as white men. There comes Pete, and I reckon your troubles are about over."

It was dusk now, and the man called Pete was not seen until within a few rods of the wagon. He dismounted on coming up, handed Brown a couple of linchpins and said the train had gone into camp at the river. Brown walked to the wheel which needed the pin and was placing it in position when a sudden great light flashed before his eyes and he sank to the ground in a heap, having been struck on the head with an ax which one of the men pulled from the wagon.

While the women had been nervous and anxious, the arrival of the man with the pins seemed an act of good faith, and they were congratulating themselves on soon rejoining the train when Bob sprang up in front of them, seized one with either hand and said:

"Come out of this! We've got business with you!"

"Daniel—father!" shrieked mother and daughter, but there was a laugh from all the men, and Bob pulled the women to the ground with the leering remark:

"Daniel has got particular business on hand just now, and he begs you will excuse him!"

For a moment the women were helpless with surprise and fear. They saw the body of husband and father stretched on the sod, and both realized that he had been struck down by the renegades. As they stood trembling and helpless two of the men began hitching the horse to the wagon, a third was busy robbing the dead, while the fourth looked to the wheels to see if all was right.

Brave men and women think fast and plan quickly. When life is in peril one must not give way to feelings of grief.

Both women knew that murder had been done, and both fully realized the plot of the renegades, but after the first shock of surprise and the first moment of weakness their courage returned.

"Run!"

It was the mother who whispered the word as she noticed that all the men were busy for the moment.

They sprang away together, but separated almost at once, and were hidden by the darkness before being missed.

"Jack, you stay by the horses—the rest come along!" shouted Bob, and neither woman was a hundred yards away when pursuit began.

The mother bore to the right, the daughter to the left. The mother made a half circle to come back toward the wagon on the opposite side from which she had started, but the daughter ran straight away. Hidden by the darkness and having the advantage of the start, she would have escaped but for accident. As she ran she stepped on a stone and twisted her ankle until the pain made her cry out.

That cry located the girl for one of the renegades who was rushing hither and yon at random, and he came up and seized her as she sank down, helpless to bear a pound's weight on the injured limb. The search ended here.

"Let the old one go," said Bob as Lizzie was carried back to the wagon. "She's headed back for Nebraska, and if the wolves don't pick her bones before daylight the Indians are sure to come across her. Now let's be off at once."

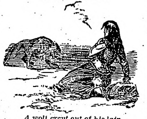
The team was all ready to move, and the route had been decided on in advance. They were to bend to the left, cross the south fork higher up and then enter the Hills between the foothills and the mountains themselves.

Nature makes her first effort to form mountains a mile or so from where the real mountain is to be heaved up. The ground is thrown up into foothills, which are like an abatis in front of a breastworks. Weary for the moment with this effort nature creates a long, narrow valley, rich in springs and sweet grasses, and beyond that builds up the grim and frowning mountains. These valleys are so numerous and bend and angle so often, that they furnish secure hiding places for parties who desire to escape observation.

Lizzie did not ask after her father. She realized that the villains had made him their first victim. Her mother, as she knew, was a wanderer on the plains. As for herself, she was so overwhelmed for the first quarter of an hour that she could not speak. Bob rode beside her and guided the horses, while the others rode on ahead and on the flanks.

"Needn't be afraid of me, honey," said the leader as he put a hand on the girl's shoulder; "I ain't bad. I'm the best feller in the country unless I'm riled. We wanted the wagon and we wanted you, but you've tumbled into good hands, my gal—best hands in the world."

CHAPTER XIII.



A wolf crept out of his lair.

Sailors wrecked at sea go mad sometimes from the mere situation.

They may sail in their small boats or float on their rafts for days and days with the same monotony of scene—the water beneath, the sky above. There is a horror, a loneliness about it—a feeling as if shut out from the world—and even where there are three or four together to keep one another company some one will go raving mad within the week.

When a man is lost on the plains those who may set out to search for him go prepared to shoot him down.

They may have to do it to save their own lives. If lost for but a single day he will fall down and weep at sight of his rescuers. He is weak and maudlin, like one drunk.

If lost for two days he may be so under the influence of terror that he will run away at sight of human beings.

If he has been wandering about for three days and nights—beware! The chances are nine in ten that he is dangerous.

And if this feeling is so strong upon men in their prime and men who may have weapons of defense and the experience of years, what must it be in the case of a woman fleeing out into the darkness to escape the murderers of her husband and the abductors of her child?

The mother was near enough to hear her daughter's cry of pain and the shouts of the man who overhauled her. For a moment she thought of returning to give herself up, but then came the thought that if Lizzie was to be rescued and the murderers punished all depended on her. She could see through the entire plot now, but she could not believe that it included any one except the four renegades. If she could reach the camp on the river the men would turn out and hunt the four to their deaths.

The widow and mother was crouched on the earth within thirty rods of the wagon when it drove away. She feared to move until she could no longer hear the rumble of the wheels, and then she rose and ran forward, believing she was following the trail of the train. She remembered it was only six miles, but it was two long hours before she stopped for a moment's rest. She saw no signs of a stream. She had come far enough to reach the south fork, but where was it?

Almost like a flash of lightning the thought came to the woman, "I have gone wrong—I am lost!" The thought took away her courage in a moment, and she found herself unable to reason intelligently.

She was lost—lost on the great plains, and that by night!

Then the poor woman did exactly what many a man has done. Instead of resting until the alarm had passed away and until daylight should come to guide her aright, she rose and ran away from herself, or tried to. All night long she wandered about in an erratic way and daylight found her back within half a mile of the spot where the wagon had stood.

She seemed to have aged twenty years in a single night. Her face was pinched and drawn; her eyes were sunken; her form bent as if she bore a burden on her shoulders.

"They are lost! I've got to find 'em—Daniel and Lizzie!" she muttered as she faced the sun. "I've called and called, but they won't answer. Coo-ee! Coo-ee! No, they won't answer."

She was advancing slowly upon the dead body of her husband.

"Where's Daniel? Where's Lizzie?" shouted the woman. "Why, this is Daniel! He is asleep! Poor man, but he must be tired!"

She had discovered the body.

"Poor Daniel, but you were lost!" crooned the woman as she sank down beside the body. "You are tired and sleepy. Yes, you may sleep. I will keep very quiet. Maybe Lizzie will soon come."

She rocked her body to and fro as if she had a child in her arms, and now and then she reached out her hand and patted the arm which lay stiffly extended on the earth beside her.

The sun climbed up and up.

Would some of the trainmen ride back to see why Brown had not joined them? The fact that he had not come up the night before would be proof that he was still in trouble. Would they leave the river without knowing or caring what had become of him and the helpless women? And they would also miss the renegades, and perhaps suspect some plot of evil.

Higher climbed the sun.

The train had gone on. It was not like Americans—it would have been disgraceful to heathens to thus abandon one who had come with them so far and met with an accident to render him helpless. It was avarice—the thirst for gold—the fear that some one would be ahead of them at the base of yonder grim mountain.

The woman rocked and crooned and dozed all through the long afternoon. A wolf crept out of his lair in the rocks and approached the spot.

"Has Lizzie come?" queried the watcher as a savage growl suddenly aroused her. "No, it is not Lizzie! Go away from us! You are one of the renegade gang! You helped to steal my child!"

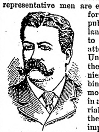
The wolf drew back. It was only a woman watching the dead, but he feared her.

The deserted one resumed her lonely vigil, rocking weakly and muttering vaguely. As the sun sank in the western sky her voice grew fainter, and when its dying rays illumined the mournful scene she fell forward beside her murdered husband and expired without a sigh.

GREAT IS SOUTH AFRICA.

A Country That Has Developed Much of Late.

South Africa has developed with such rapidity of late years and promises so much for the future that the views of her representative men are eagerly sought for and widely published in England, and begin to attract much attention in the United States. If the British colonies are to combine with the mother country in a great imperial federation, then it is highly important that Cape Colony and Natal should join and give South Africa the same standing Canada and Australia now have.



SIR JOHN ROBINSON.

Sir John Robinson is the latest authority to be quoted. Born in England, he went to Natal in early manhood, soon became prominent and has been a member of the legislative council for twenty-nine years. He says the movement for a confederation has been in progress for seventeen years, yet he cannot see that it has made much progress, one great difficulty being the anomalous position of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. These were settled by discontented Boers and others who left the British territories and are free republics. Nevertheless they are cut off from the sea by the British colonies and connected with them in ways so peculiar that only politicians on the spot can understand their relations.

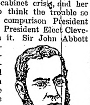
Cape Colony and the Free State, for instance, have a customs union, and therefore a common tariff, but Natal would not join it because she preferred a much lower tariff, and the Transvaal because her Boers opposed union of any sort with the hated Englishmen. This last feeling is giving way, and a customs union might be effected, but this would involve a financial system including two British colonies and two foreign states and deprive the colonies of the advantages proposed for imperial federation. Prosperity, however, is a great solvent of racial and social hatreds, and the rapid development of the country is expected to reconcile Britons and white Africanders, Boers and Zulus.

It is a pleasing fact that the writings of Olive Schreiner have interested many people in South Africa, and tens of thousands of Americans acquired their chief knowledge of life in that country by reading the "Story of an African Farm." As indicated in her work, the greatest difficulty in the new lands is want of water, and with a scientific system of irrigation it is probable that many millions of fertile acres could be utilized.

SIR JOHN THOMPSON.

Just Now He Is Conspicuous in Canadian Politics.

Canada has a cabinet crisis, and her editors seem to think the trouble so great that for comparison President Sadi-Carnot and President Elect Cleveland are not in it. Sir John Abbott resigned the premiership recently, and the governor general asked Sir John Thompson to take the place and form a new ministry. In the Canadian system the central government appoints the governor of each province, who is considered the lieutenant of the governor general, and is therefore styled lieutenant governor, and as one province is French and Catholic and every province has its local grievances the task is no small one.



SIR JOHN THOMPSON.

Sir John Thompson is a native of Nova Scotia and made his first step in public life in 1877, when he entered the legislature of his province. He became attorney general in the following year, and in 1882 became a judge of the supreme court, but three years later he resigned to accept the ministry of justice in the Dominion cabinet. On the death of Sir John Macdonald he was spoken of for the premiership, but was passed by largely on account of the opposition evinced by the Orangemen on account of his religion, as he was born and raised a Protestant, but became a Catholic.

He took the leadership of the house of commons and had as much power in the government as the premier. Since Premier Abbott's appointment Sir John has conquered prejudice by his ability, and especially by his masterly codification of the criminal law, which was enthusiastically approved by both parties. He has many serious problems to confront, and nearly all of them are complicated with the school and religious questions.

The English Pilgrimage to Rome.

It has been determined that the English pilgrimage to Rome shall start from London on Tuesday, Feb. 14, and arrive in Rome on the following Friday. The pilgrims will only make a brief stay in the Eternal City, and will be back in London on Friday, March 3. Very favorable terms of transit have been arranged, and it is expected that there will be a large company. The Duke of Norfolk is taking an active part in the arrangements.

England's Latest Grab.

The Ellice islands, which have recently been added to the British empire, are a small group of islets in mid-Pacific, between the Gilbert islands and Fiji. They are on a coral reef surrounding a lagoon, in latitude 8 degs. 30 min. south and longitude 179 degs. 18 min. east. They are sparsely inhabited and were discovered in 1819.

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

THOUSANDS

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

CURED

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

A VICTIM OF A CORPORATION.

How a President and General Manager Was Frozen Out by His Companions.

"Speaking of corporations," said a prominent St. Louis banker, "I recall with painful reminiscence the first one of which I had the honor to be a stockholder. It happened in 1865, and I was just fifteen years of age. Of course I had no idea that it was really a corporation in which I had invested, but as I look back upon the incident the realization rushes upon me that I was a victim of corporation methods.

"It happened in this way. At a very early age my tendency for mercantile pursuits developed. At school I noticed a very general demand for candy and cakes and an exceedingly limited supply in the market. Many of the children possessed coppers and nickels, but it was nearly a mile from the school house to the country town, and the boys were compelled to forage upon the neighboring sugar cane fields and orchards to satisfy the youthful stomach. After a careful survey of the market I decided that the school was confronted by a condition, not a theory.

"In a few days I had secured the cooperation of half a dozen boys, with a capital of thirty cents, in which I held ten cents of the stock, and was consequently named as president and manager of the candy store which we proposed to open on the grounds. We found an enormous dead and fallen tree, whose butt end offered little resistance to our penknives. At noon one day I notified the stockholders that a meeting would be held immediately after school, and at that meeting I, as president and manager, cut an opening into the dead tree, fashioned a shelf therein and attached a door, while the stockholders looked on in admiration. I then proposed that early in the morning each stockholder should bring with him five cents' worth of candy wherewith to stock the juvenile store.

"To my astonishment it was moved and seconded and carried that the candy should be purchased and delivered at once, so that the store might have an early and perfect opening. Tired as I was I repaired to the town, invested my ten cents in cheap candy, returned to the school grounds, where already the twilight was making ghostly figures among the trees, and deposited my treasure in the store. It was quite dark when I reached home, and being unable to account for my whereabouts the president and manager went to bed supperless and with a back stinging from the effects of a switch liberally applied. Next morning I hastened to the school grounds in order to be first at the ceremonies. Imagine my surprise when I found there, seated in a row, all the stockholders. I congratulated them on their interest in the enterprise, and then threw open the door of the candy store. It was empty!

"For a moment I was speechless. The stockholders bent their heads and said nothing. They looked suspiciously contented, and when I intimated that some good man among us had gone wrong they were all prepared to prove that a daring burglar had, in the midnight hour, deprived the corporation of its assets.

"Ten years later one of the stockholders admitted that he had helped his brethren in disposing of the stock."—St. Louis Republic.

Shaving the Beard in Russia.

Peter the Great thought to civilize his savages by making them shave and imposed a tax of 100 rubles on the wealthy and middle classes and a copeck on peasants and laborers. Now it was a superstition among the poorer people that no beardless son of Adam could ever enter heaven, and being obliged to part with their beards the great majority treasured up their hairs to be buried with their bodies. In dealing with his soldiers the great Peter enlisted the aid of the priests, who cunningly pointed out the fact that they were going to fight the bearded Turk and that their patron, St. Nicholas, would be unable to distinguish them from their enemies unless they sacrificed their beards.

This was all right, and the beards of the beloved Russians went down before the razor in deference to St. Nicholas. But, unluckily for the priests, the next little war happened to be with the Swedes, who wore no beards, and thus it was that the Russian soldiers demanded to be allowed to abjure the razor, so that the holy Nicholas might have no difficulty in arranging for their protection.—English Illustrated Magazine.

Recent Applications of Paper.

The year 1891 was certainly one of those in which new industrial applications of paper were most numerous. The idea of using paper in place of stone in the construction of houses is already old, but paper to take the place of glass in windows, of clay in flowerpots, of iron in railway rails, wagon wheels and horseshoes, of porcelain in laboratory ware, of wood in barrels, it having already taken the place of that material in small boats, paper in pulleys, are applications as novel as bold. The manufacture of window panes of paper was first tried in the United States.

The panes have the appearance of milky glass, and the property of intercepting the light rays while letting the heat rays through, which makes them suitable for greenhouses. It is estimated that a paper window pane ninety-four by sixty-three centimeters in dimensions in a wooden sash with iron appliances, will cost about eighty-five cents, and last on an average four years.—E. Ratoin in Popular Science Monthly.

Douglas Jerrold in School.

Douglas Jerrold wrote "Black Eyed Susan" when he was twenty-one, and contributed to Punch the immensely popular "Candle Lectures" not long afterward. But at nine years of age young Jerrold had been scarcely able to read, and it was not until he was apprenticed to a printer, after serving for some time as a midshipman at sea that he showed either desire or capacity for intellectual improvement.—London Standard.

Haunted by an Advertisement.

Have you ever been haunted by an advertisement?

I have asked lots of people that question and they nearly all tell me that they have undergone such an experience at one time or another.

The particular "ad" that haunts me is one containing the picture of a man's face. A very insipid face it is, too, with an absolutely perfect black mustache attached to it. It has a grewsome effect, too, as there is no neck visibly attached to the head, and I have often wondered if it would be possible to cut a man's head off so that none of the neck would be left on.

This face persists in getting in front of me and staring at me with those meek eyes. No matter which end of an elevated car I go in just as soon as I am comfortably seated in a seat I can feel that face looking at me; and sure enough there it always is—above the windows directly across the car. If I open the advertising pages of a magazine that face will be the first thing to meet my eye. On the street I am always seeing it on the billboards or some advertising dodger.

You may say that this is all very easily explained by the fact of the advertisement being a very common one that everybody would be running against. On the contrary it is rather of an uncommon one, but wherever it is I am sure to find it. I don't know w.... the article is the face advertises, and I don't want to. I only want to be freed from the nightmare of that mask.—New York Herald.

Placer's Big Cherry Trees.

In some remote age the deep, whirling waters of the American river at Monte Rio washed out the rock layers of long previous geological formation to the depth of probably 200 feet or more, and this excavation being filled to half its depth by alluvial material from the sides of adjacent hills, formed a deposit over sixty feet deep and some ten or twelve acres in present area.

The waters of the American now form only a small stream, the alluvial deposit that has made the giant cherry tree growth being ten or a dozen feet higher than the usual current of the deep river channel. The soil of Hector's cherry orchard has been bored to over sixty feet in depth without touching bed rock or rock of any kind, the alluvial quality continuing to this great depth. On about four acres of this soil black Tartarian cherry trees were set in 1862 or 1863 by ancestral relatives of the present owner, several smaller orchards or additions having been planted since.

There are 150 large trees that yield 40 boxes, or 400 pounds each, in alternate years. The trees are kept trimmed of all dead wood and lime washed every season, and are still making vigorous and healthy growth. The tallest tree is 63 feet high, with a head from 50 to 55 feet in width, and over a score more of the 150 large trees are from 40 to 50 feet tall, with corresponding width of top growth so that the excess in height of the tallest tree is not very conspicuous.—Country Gentleman.

The Story of a Suicide.

I remember being called a year or two ago, in my capacity as police reporter, to a tenement on the west side—I think it was in West Thirty-seventh street—where a painter had that day cut his throat. Standing there by the corpse I learned from the sobbing widow that the man was desperate for want of work. He had been on the streets for weeks, and his children were starving. It happened that I had been for just the same length of time looking for a man to paint my house out in the country, where painters were scarce and very busy. I had just made up my mind to advertise that day. There lay this painter dead because he could find no one to give him work, while I would have been glad to pay him more than the wages of his trade to get him to work for me.

Had there been any means of bringing us together to which we would both naturally have resorted, he would have been alive and his family self supporting. Now it seemed certain to become a burden upon the public.

It was not the only instance of that sort by very many I had come across.—Jacob A. Riis in Forum.

Women Office Seekers.

The women who apply for places are very hard to get rid of. When informed that there is no vacancy they usually say, "The secretary can always make one more place." Many of them make most humble and pathetic appeals, saying, "For pity's sake, let me scrub the floors or do anything by which I may earn my bread." Yet these same individuals, after securing situations and occupying them for two or three days, are pretty sure to demand three things—promotion, leave of absence and lighter work. Women can never be convinced that there is any sincerity in the civil service law. They almost always think that they can get around it and secure places in the classified service through influence.—Washington Cor. New York Sun.

How Ladies of India Wear Bangles.

Glass bangles in India are regarded as sacred objects. If a glass bangle be accidentally broken, its pieces must be gathered together and kissed three times. Every Hindoo woman wears these ornaments until her husband dies, when she breaks them with a brick or stone and substitutes for them gold or silver ones, a sign in north India that the wearer is either a widow or a less estimable woman. The demand for glass bangles is never failing. They are manufactured in abundance in the northwestern provinces as well as in the Punjaub.—New York Press.

A Natural Compass.

The rosin weed, a species of silphium and first cousin to the burdock, is a natural compass. It grows everywhere in the west, and wherever it is found in open ground—that is, in ground not shaded by trees, houses or fences, its leaves point directly north and south.—Exchange.

BETWEEN
WHAT YOU MAY LOOK LIKE, WHAT YOU OUGHT TO LOOK LIKE,
when you make your appearance in a new suit. You ought to look as though you hadn't made your purchase with your eyes shut. The suit ought to look as though you had bought it with your eyes wide open. If it doesn't, even the old may be better than the new. You'd better part with neither your old suit nor your money, if all you succeed in getting is something that looks as if the wrong wearer had got into it. How are you going to avoid this experience? Jack Conley, yardmaster, went to Barnesville on No. 20 on Monday.

Benz & Son's genial traveling man Mr. Butzerin, arrived in the city from Grand Forks on Tuesday's freight.

Andrew Hanson of the Scandia American bank is spending the week visiting relatives at Fergus Falls.

Hugh Thompson went down to St. Paul last week to see how matters are progressing at the state capital.

Mr. Sylvester, of Alderman and Sylvester, has been on the sick list for a week or so. He has been very sick but is now reported better.

Conductor Harry Norrie is away on a furlough. Meantime Hank Murray handles the punch with becoming dignity and grace in Harry's place.

E. D. Childs left for St. Paul on Sunday evening for a brief business visit. He is as busy as a bee at his saw mill near Fosston this winter.

Fred Rauch is fixing up his pool tables in elegant shape. He says "Old Nick does his work ever so much better since he was married."

Lawrence Larson, while out driving the other day, was thrown out of the rig by the upsetting of the cutter, and sustained several bruises on his face.

Remember the Benefit to take place Jan. 26th, besides getting double your money's worth you are helping "The Women's Relief Corps" in their good work.

Joe Hoch has moved his family into August Wentzel's house on North Main Street to live with Mrs. W. while Joe and August are away on their California trip.

A petition numerously signed, asking that A. N. Hixson be appointed railroad commissioner was sent to the governer last week or early this. Mr. Hixson would be an excellent man for the position, but the appointment is not likely to come to Polk county this year. We wouldn't be surprised it it did next year.

C. O. Espe has started a wood-sawing business in the city. On Tuesday he commenced sawing stove-wood for Fred Anderson. He has a little upright engine that is easily and quickly handled, and he can saw wood very quickly and cheaply. If you have any quantity to saw, it would pay you to see Espe and get prices.

The Great Northern is tearing down the old ice house opposite the passenger depot and building a larger one opposite the brewery. Soon they will have everything cleaned away from around the depot, and as Agent Fegan says, "it looks as though they were preparing to put up some good buildings." We hope so.

Senator Lommen spent the Sabbath with his family. In speaking of his opposition to the confirmation of the appointment of Al Kaiser as surveyor of logs and lumber the Senator said: "That was one of Governor Merriam's appointments made during recess and expires in April. I do not think the people generally would sanction the appointment."

Otto Kunkel, G. Krouschnabel, August Wentzel and Joseph Hoch, intended to start for California this week if August, (who has been somewhat under the weather for some days) was able to start as soon as that. It is said that Henry Nolan contemplates going with them. They intend to be gone six months at least, and some of them may conclude to locate there.

G. J. McManus left on Monday evening for his new field of labor in St. Paul. He will have the southern part of the state in the insurance field. Mr. McManus came to this city somewhere about '79 or '80 and entered into the law office of H. Steenerson as law clerk. Later on he formed a co-partnership with Mr. Steenerson and a year or so ago entered the life insurance field in which he has had great success. Mac leaves many friends here who will wish him abundant success in his new field.

John Alderman informed the JOURNAL scribe that his wife has been very ill for some days, which has caused him deep concern, but he is now more hopeful for a favorable termination than he was for a time.

C. H. Saake has returned this week from a visit to the twin cities where he indulged in all of the gaities of the season. Saake is busy making arrangements to build a commodious brick block on his property on the corner of Broadway and Second street.

Another fire on Tuesday morning of last week again demonstrated the efficiency of our fire department and the magnificent system that serves as an effective protection against fires. About 2 o'clock the fire-bell sounded the alarm for a fire in Dainard's Bros. meat market, and although the fire had gotten good headway and had already caught into the saloon adjoining, the boys were able to hold it down and put it out before the meat market was entirely consumed, The buildings were owned by Geo. Vine and occupied by Dainard Bros. meat market and Asselyn & Sylvester's saloon. The buildings were insured as well as the stocks in them.

One of the great reformers of the day—a man whom we have trusted for several years, a man who has said by his actions that he was in the movement for the office, fired his copy of the JOURNAL back in the office last week with "not wanted" written on it. He evidently felt very bad because the JOURNAL has had the boldness to attack hypocrisy in high places, but he evidently did not feel bad enough to be honest with us by coming in like a man and paying us what he owed us. This is the kind of a reformer who always seems to have money enough for liquor but don't seem to have enough to pay his honest debts. He is the kind of a man who says that the government ought to take all of the property in the United States and divide it up around share and share alike; he is the kind of a man who if such a wild-cat scheme could prevail, wouldn't have a cent in six months and would be clamoring for a new deal all around. He is the kind of a man who is such a mutton-head that he could not be rich if gold rained down from the skies and if by any chance he should inherit millions for a short time, he would not be man enough to think of such a thing as a newspaper debt. Three farmers this fall have got mad at the JOURNAL and ordered their paper stopped but this is the only farmer who was not man enough to call and settle first.

A Good Recognition.

The council called to recognize the beginning of the pastorate of Rev. J. G. Smith over the Congregational church of Crookston was held at the church Wednesday of this week. Rev. Wm. Gill, of Glyndon, was moderator and conducted the examination of the pastor elect. Rev. L. E. Brown of Grand Forks was scribe. Mr. Smith read a scholarly paper stating his views of christian doctrine, church life and work; and the council, after the usual custom, cross-examined him upon a wide range of subjects. It was seen at a glance that this new preacher in our city comes thoroughly prepared for the work he has been called to perform. He is of the progressive orthodox school of theologians. His clear, firm, and very original way of stating his religious beliefs, as well as his ready response upon a wide range of important themes, shows him to be a preacher of hard study and thorough research. The public were treated to a program of entertaining and impressive services in the evening when the sermon was preached by Rev. G. R. Morrison, of Ada, and spicy and appropriate addresses were made by members of the council and others. Rev. O. H. Elmer of the Presbyterian church presented the greetings of the Crookston Minister's Union.

A. C, Wilkinson had an important suit at McIntosh last week.

The Buffington post office has been discontinued and the patrons of that office now get their mail at Euclid.

Joseph Netzer went to St. Paul last week. The JOURNAL was informed that the old gentlemen contemplated going to the soldiers' home. but cannot say for sure about that.

We don't seem to see the name of W. G. Hunt among the fortunate office-seekers whose hopes ended in fruition, although the News assured us that Hunt was a deserving critter and if we listened we would hear something drap—a good fat office for Hunt. We havn't. heard it drop yet.

The Times says Mike Kirsch received a gold-headed ebony cane last week and Mike don't know where it came from! Well, it is funny that he could not guess, so soon after the Times little printing deal was engineered through by Mike. Singular how such things do happen to happen so kind o' simultaneous like, ain't it?

The state agricultural society has decided not to hold a state fair this year on account of the world's fair at Chicago. That hardly seems wise in view of the fact that no doubt many strangers would come here from Chicago in case a fair was held so that they could easily see what are the resources of the state and the fair would not interfere with the world's fair a cent's worth. It looks to us like a wrong conclusion.

The Prattsburgh (Steuben Co., N. Y.) News has the following clipping from the Hammondsport Herald:

"During the grape shipping season Miles Rossiter, of Fredonia, N. Y., placed a note in a basket of Concords requesting the purchaser to write back to him the price paid for them. Last week a letter was received by Mr. Rossiter from Aspen, Col., stating that the consumer of the grapes had paid $1.25 for the basket, and that a week earlier the fruit brought $1.50 per basket. He also stated that ninety cents per basket was considered very cheap. Mr. Rossiter received eighteen cents for this basket of grapes."

Had that same basket of grapes been sold in Crookston early in the season it would have brought 50 cents at retail. Later in the season it would only bring 35 cents, which was the ruling price paid most of the time. That is one advantage we have here that such fruits as we cannot raise can be bought at very reasonable figures.

In our issue of January 5th we stated that somebody tried to work the N. P. road on Senator Woods' pass, and now comes Love, of the Hallock Enterprise, and says it was Tommy Topper, a man for whom the senator had secured a job at the capitol, and Love says the senator loaned Tommy his N. P. pass, while Wood himself went down over the Great Northern road. Well, they made the thing work all right enough from Crookston to Winnipeg Junction, but the main line con smoked out the little job and raked in the pass. It is said that when Wood applied for a pass for 1893 he was requested to call at the general office but had failed to show up and will have to count ties on that line hereafter. The senator is one of your reformers who made so much fuss about legislators accepting passes, but he seems to have a knack of getting the most out of those he does get. If it is wrong to accept them, what can be thought of a man who has pledged his word of honor not to transfer them, when he gives them away even to his friends?

Lars H. Fykerud, the renowned Norwegian violin virtuoso will give a concert at the Grand Opera house next Monday evening, January 22d, 1893. This will be one of the grandest events the music loving citizens of Crookston hava ever had the opportunity to enjoy. Mr. Fykerud enjoys the rank of being the foremost violisist of his country, and in a nation so generally excelling in the handling of that most difficult of instruments, it is a distinction of the greatest force. He has been traveling in this country nearly two years and his path has been lined with successes everywhere. Mr, Fykerud comes of a family of musicians consisting of seven brothers, all of which are experts on the violin. He is the foster parent of the national music which has lately characterized his country. The peculiar weirdness and sweet melancholy which obtains in every strain originating in that country has never been made so wonderfully beautiful as by him. The nature and life of that far Northland is vividly portrayed in the most appealing strains. Love, hate, the infirmity of age and the buoyancy of youth are spoken as plainly as words could make them, beneath his bow and fingers. He is especially desirous of meeting his countrymen and bringing them a freshening glimpse of their fatherland through notes of their native country's most generally beloved instrument.

Supreme Court Decisions

The case of Halvor Steenerson vs. L. Waterbury & Co. has been decided by the Supreme Court against the appellant Steenerson. Mr. Steenerson had brought suit against Waterbury & Co. for fees, and had been awarded $500 by the jury. The defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was granted by Judge Baxter. Steenerson then appealed to the Supreme Court to set aside the order granting a new trial, but the Supreme Court decided in favor of the defendant and ordered a new trial.

Wilber F. Powell vs. August Gagnon was a case wherein the respondent Gagnon had given a note and mortgage for the payment of a threshing rig, but being unable to pay the note when due, the mortgagee seized the mortgaged property and not realizing enough from the sale of the property to pay the note, brought suit to recover the deficiency. Gagnon appealed to the supreme court on the ground that where property was taken and converted without foreclosure proceedings the mortgagee waived his right to a deficiency. The supreme court holds that it does not, and decided against Gagnon.

Benefit.

"The Eastern Star Quartettee" of five people, and "The Marcato Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Club" of eight people, will appear at the Grand, Thursday of next week, Jan. 26th, in a benefit for "The Women's Relief Corps" of this city. The program arranged by those two excellent musical combinations promises to be one of the most entertaining ever rendered in this city. The former doing the singing and the latter the instrumental music in the way of solos, duets, trios on banjos, mandolines, guitars, etc. We trust the ladies will get a good house, as they are deserving, besides engaging two companies to appear at one time.

Real Merit

is the characteristic of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is manifested every day in the remarkable cures this medicine accomplishes. Druggists say: When we sell a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla to a new customer we are sure to see him back in a few weeks after more,—proving that the good results from a trial bottle warrant continuing its use. This positive merit Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses by virtue of the peculiar combination, proportion and process used in its preparation, and by which all the remedial value of the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus peculiar to itself and absolutely unequalled in its power as a blood purifier, and as a tonic for building up the weak and weary, and giving nerve strength.

FOR A COUNTY ROAD TAX.

The Iowa State Agricultuaal Society Puts Itself on Record.

DES MOINES, Jan 16—The good roads feature of the state agricultural society meeting proved to be a great success It brought out a great many men interested in this all absorbing question Ex Governor Larrabee said he was in favor of building good roads the state over He believed in taxation for that purpose, the county to pay half the expense and the state the rest. Judge Thayer read an exhaustive paper on government aid in making roads As to the cost of bad roads in the United States Judge Thayer said: "I have made a careful computation from such data as I have been able to obtain, of the cost of bad roads, and I find they tax what is understood to be agricultural products fully $135,000,000 annually I think it a moderate estimate to put the contributions to bad roads by the remaining traffic at an equal amount, making a total of $270,000,000"

Clever Girls Who Play Football.

The School of Design for Women in Philadelphia has two football teams, and ever since October twenty two young women have entered into the rough and tumble sport with the same enthusiasm which distinguishes their efforts with the brush. The sophomore team of the University of Pennsylvania, hearing of the prowess of these fair rushers, sent in recently a letter addressing the manager of the art team as "dear sir" and desiring information as to their open dates.

After a period of brow corrugating reflection, the reply to the very flattering request of the wearers of the Pennsylvania red and blue, was sent in the shape of a red and blue Tam O'Shanter of sugar, gorgeous with floating ribbons and filled with succulent open dates stuffed with cream. It is quite easy to imagine the girl art student "kicking the goal," but you can trust her woman's wit to get the better of the university team without trying it.—New York Sun.

The Wives of French Men of Letters.

Apropos of what is now being written of Mme. Renan's co-operation in her husband's works, the records show that many of the wives of French men of letters have afforded valuable assistance to their lords. Alphonse Daudet not only discusses the plots of his novels with Mme. Daudet, but she also helps him to write them. Mme. Dieulafoy's co-operation in her husband's scientific missions and writings has won for her the red ribbon. Mme. Champfleury, who was the pupil as well as the goddaughter of Delacroix, executed many of the caricatures in Champfleury's comic works, and Mme. Esquiros is known to have written a portion of her husband's "Histoire des Montagnards."—Paris Letter.

Hood's Sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world admired in prosperity and envied in merit by thousands of would-be competitors. It has a larger sale than any other medicine. Such success could not be won without positive merit.

Hood's pills cure constipation by restoring the peristaltic action of the alimentary canal. They are the best family cathatic.

For pains in the chest there is nothing better than a flannel cloth saturated with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain. It will produce a counter irritation without blistering, and is not so disagreeable as mustard; in fact is much superior to any plaster on account of its pain-relieving qualities. If used in time will prevent pneumonia. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

"For the past two or three years I have been subject to cramping pains in the stomach," says Mr. W. A. Baldwin, a hardware merchant of Boonville Dallas Co., Iowa. "I have tried a number of different remedies; the best one being Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea remedy. One or two doses of it always cures me." Sold by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

The Woodpecker's Home.

The woodpecker's home is very like the kingfisher's, but it is dug in rotten wood instead of being bored in a bank of earth. From the great ivory billed species down to the little downy fellow of our orchards, the woodpeckers build their nest, or rather excavate them, on the same general plan. The hole at first goes straight into the wood, then turns downward, widening as it descends, until it gives room for the home. If you will go into any bit of unshorn woodland during early spring and will keep your eyes open, you will see a bright red head thrust out of a round window in some decaying trunk or bough, and the woodpecker will sing out, "Peer! peer!" which always seems to mean that his or her home is a most comfortable and enjoyable place.—Maurice Thompson in Golden Rule.

CAN STILL LOVE.

I thought I could not live if you were gone,
But life has taught me sterner things;
The bird whose mate is dead lives on—
Aye, lives and sings.
Perhaps his song has more of sadness—
A note or two of pain;
'Tis sweeter music with the mournful cadence
Than was the careless, joyful strain.

I stood beside your grave and wept alone
And thought love was forever dead to me;
My life had early lost love's glorious sunlight
And never more my heart could happy be.
But time has taught me many tender truths—
That life can never wholly be unblest.
I cannot live all lonely in this world of woe
Because I loved you, dear, the best.

The tender love that bears so much for me
I gladly take, nor feel
My love for you, dear one, has weaker grown,
My heart less stanch and leal.
I love you first, and you were always dearest,
Yet, like the bird whose mate is gone,
I still can find a tender joy in loving,
Nor wish to dwell forever here alone.

—Agnes L. Pratt.

The Sense of Smell in Dogs.

Dogs are able to track their masters through crowded streets, where recognition by sight is quite impossible, and can find a hidden biscuit even when its faint smell is still further disguised by eau de cologne. In some experiments Mr. Romanes lately made with a dog he found that it could easily track him when he was far out of sight, though no fewer than eleven people had followed him, stepping exactly in his footprints, in order to confuse the scent.

The dog seemed to track him chiefly by the smell of his boots, for when without them or with new boots on it failed, but followed, though slowly and hesitatingly, when his master was without either boots or stockings. Dogs and cats certainly get more information by means of this sense than a man can. They often get greatly excited over certain smells and remember them for very long periods.—Chambers' Journal.

Why the Child Cried.

A Brooklyn physician says that he was recently attending a family where the little man of the house was in a somewhat refractory humor, and thinking to quiet him he said, "How would you like it now if to punish you I should take your little sister away from you?" The boy sulked and did not reply, but as the doctor arose to take his leave the child burst into a woeful blubbering. He was asked what was the matter. "Doctor's goin away without takin sister," he answered.—New York Recorder.

Two Honest Men.

A Paris furniture dealer recently bought from an architect an old writing table, and in overhauling it he found a packet containing 1,600 francs. He at once informed the former owner of his find, and he was rewarded by an honest declaration on the part of the architect that the latter knew nothing whatever about the money and would not accept it.—Paris Letter.

Sumatra Buffaloes in Water.

The buffaloes in Sumatra, according to an English traveler, in fear of the tiger take refuge at night in the rivers, where they rest in peace and comfort, with only their horns and noses sticking above the water.

Handling a book with apparent respect or disrespect is of course too fantastic a standard to be accepted literally, since physical awkwardness or nervousness may be responsible for harm rather than a lack of mental grace.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

A Subscriber's Reasons Why it Should be Closed on Sunday.

ANGUS, Jan. 21st, 1893.

Editor JOURNAL,

In the Crookston Tribune of last week, I saw an article on the Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition which was very nearly akin to articles that used to appear in the JOURNAL concerning the passage of the Mills bill. It would not be worth a passing notice were it not so openly insulting to all Christian opinions.

The writer seems to greatly fear that this nation will violate the spirit of the constitution, and perhaps adopt a state religion and compel its citizens to adopt the same if it decides to honor the Sabbath by closing the Exposition on that day. He intimates that legislating religion into people is inconsistent with free government, and unjust to some people, probably meaning a few Jews and a fewer Seventh day Baptists or Adventists. He advises throwing the exposition open on Sundays and having each church which thinks it is wrong to attend on that day, discipline its members who do so, showing not only his lack of knowledge of church government, but his utter ignorance of the first principles of the Christian religion.

The Creator of the universe owns this little globe by right of creation. He also owns each individual thereon by that same right. He has commanded among other things to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Has explicitly forbidden all kinds of labor and pleasure on that day. Has promised to honor and bless all nations and persons keeping His commandments and to condemn and destroy all nations or persons who do not. This Sabbath day, originally the seventh, was changed to the first day of the week in honor of the resurrection of our Saviour and this change is recognized by all christian nations.

This nation by closing the exposition does not commit itself to any form of sectarianism or religion, it does not compel its citizens to keep the day, it simply declares to the world that, as a nation, it chooses to obey God and come out from under the condemnation pronounced against Godless nations. Should it fail so to do it has no right to the name Christian nation longer. It leaves the individual free to keep the day or not, and to take the consequences of his own doings. Should this nation allow the exposition to be open on Sundays, it would be another example of the greatest nation of the earth bowing down to the golden image, and worshiping it, in the place of God, for the only real reason for so doing would be for the money accruing to the management from Sunday's traffic, only I trust there would be many times three persons found who would not bow down even though the furnace yawned.

A greater question than this was never met by this nation and it must soon be decided on the one hand, in favor of God's humanity and righteousness, on the other, mammon whiskey and the devil. If we renounce our allegiance to the King of Kings and disobey his plain commands, letting our greed for gold and love of pleasure take their place, we lay ourselves as a nation, open to his hot displeasure and many look for the speedy destruction already being foretold by the signs of the times.

If this nation, the "refuge of all nations," founded by the christian fathers, is the great nation shadowed with wings (those of the eagle) beyond the rivers of Ethiopia which Isaiah foretells all the nations of the earth are commanded to watch when we lift up the ensign and to listen when we blow the trumpet then let it be with no uncertain sound. When citizens of all nations are visitors upon our shores, that we proclaim our allegiance to the King of Kings and honor him by obeying his commandments.

FARMER.

Peterson vs. Bakke.

A contest involving 160 acres of land near St. Hilaire was tried recently at the land office here. It appears that Per Peterson filed a preemption entry to the land some time in 1889—alleging settlement in 1886—which was prior to the government survey. His pre-emption expired in 1891, but for some cause he was unable to make proof and payment thereon as required by law and within the period allowed by law. Subsequently, in June, 1892, one John Bakke made application to enter the land under the homestead law and his application was accepted and his entry made June 25th, 1892.

A few days after Bakke's entry was filed, Peterson appeared at the local office, and made application to transmute his D. S. to a homestead entry. His application was refused for the reason that Bakke's homestead entry had been made and a second homestead could not be allowed on the same tract.

Peterson thereupon made application to the commissioner of the general land office to be allowed to transmute his D. S. and in support of his application recited that he had resided continuously on the land since 1887 and had made valuable improvements thereon. The commissioner of the general land office on October 11th, 1892, ordered a hearing in the premises, and January 17th, 1893, was the day set for hearing.

Both parties appeared on the day of the hearing with their respective attorneys. The evidence adduced at the hearing which continued during the 17th and 18th appeared to sustain all of the allegations of Peterson, and on the other hand, wholly failed to show that Bakke had made any attempt to comply with the law since he made his homestead entry. Although the period for establishing his residence had expired, it was not shown, at the hearing that he had done so.

A decision was on Jan. 21st made by the local office in favor of Peterson's right to the land.

Much interest was taken by both parties in the contest and tends to show that Polk county farm lands are being eagerly sought after. The land involved is about 12 miles east of St. Hilaire and in former years was not deemed very desirable, but the rapid settlement of the country in the meantime has rendered it desirable.

Cures for Diphtheria.

S. L. Dobson: "I hear that diphtheria is somewhat prevalent in some parts of the county, and I thought that a few remedies that I have preserved would be good items of news for your readers—and especially if any of them should be afflicted by this dread disease. So I brought these along for you:"

AN OLD CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.

One of the most successful cures for diphtheria is one of the old woman remedies left over from the last century, says the New York Telegram. Medical science can't tell why it is good, but the facts remain that it cures as many people as drugs do. All the paraphernalia needed is a basin, some hot water and a good-sized funnel. The basin must be filled three-quarters full with very hot water, as hot as can be secured, boiling if possible. The patient takes the basin in his lap and places the open end in the water, then he blows through the mouth of it. This will send the steam from the water up from the basin to the throat and chest and he will naturally inhale a good deal of it. After ten or fifteen minutes relief will be experienced and if the operation is repeated frequently enough a permanent cure will be established.

ANOTHER REMEDY.

We have just received a recipe for diphtheria, says the New York Tribune, from a physician who says that of a 1,000 cases in which it has been used not a single patient has been lost. The treatment consists in thoroughly swabbing the back of the mouth and throat with a wash made thus: Table salt 2 drachms, black pepper, golden seal, nitrate of potash, alum, 1 drachm each. Mix and pulverize, put into a tea cup half full of boiling water, stir well and then fill up with good vinegar; use every half hour, one, two three or four hours as recovery progresses. The patient may swallow a little each time. Apply one ounce each of spirits of turpentine, sweet oil and aqua ammonia mixed, every hour to the whole of the throat and to the breast bone every four hours, keeping flannel to the part.

AND STILL ANOTHER.

Take a common tobacco pipe, place a live coal within the bowl, drop a little tar upon the coal and let the patient draw some into the mouth and discharge it through the nostrils. The remedy is safe and simple and should be tried whenever occasion may require; many valuable lives may be saved, the informant believes, by prompt treatment as above.

Senator Hompe's Scheme.

Moorhead News:—The News has good reasons for stating that the bill introduced by Senator Hompe providing for erecting a grain and produce elevator at Duluth, is a scheme of the large farmers to procure a place to store their grain at the expense of the state. It would be of very little if any practical benefit to the multitude of small farmers, while to the large ones, who are already better able to take care of themselves than the small ones, would derive large and valuable benefits from such facilities. There are insuperable objections to the enactment of such a measure, as the News has heretofore pointed out, and we do not think it will pass the judiciary committee of the houses. If it should run the gauntlet of both houses, it would find in Governor Nelson an obstacle hard to pass, in our opinion.

Rhinehart-Anderson Election Case.

Last Saturday the election and contest case of Rhinehart vs Anderson was brought before Judge Ives in the court house here. Montague & Bucklen appeared for Rhinehart and L. E. Gossman for Anderson. Rhinehart was short only three votes. The dispute is only about the vote cast in the town of Grand Forks, in which 51 votes were cast—49 for Anderson, 1 for Nesbit, and 1 for Rhinehart, as appears by the returns. Some of the points presented by the prosecution are that: two men swear they voted for Rhinehart, one man swears that Anderson, in violation of the law, asked him in the voting room to vote for him (Anderson), and he did on that request vote for him and would not otherwise have done so. Two men—one a brother-in-law of Anderson's and the other his hired man—were appointed by the board to show men how to vote, and these two men went into the booths with the voters. Anderson was himself clerk of election and numbered all the tickets after they were voted.

The judge has the case under consideration and will render his decision as soon as possible.

Thief River Falls Press—Wood is being brought into town in abundance this winter. It ranges in price from $1.50 for soft to $3.00 per cord for hard wood.—The poles are set and wires strung to connect this station with the outside world by telegraph. The line will be in operation this week.

Detroit Record:—Governor Nelson made an important appointment last Monday in the selection of Judge Ira B. Mills as a member of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, vice General Williams, of Fergus Falls, whose term had expired. In this important position Judge Mills' experience on the bench will serve him well, and we predict that time will prove the wisdom of Governor Nelson's choice.

Suffocated by Sweet Odors.

The Sybarites slept on beds stuffed with rose leaves; the tyrant Dionysius had his couch filled with them; Versus would travel with a garland on his head and around his neck, and over his litter he had a thin net, with rose leaves intertwined. Antiochus luxuriated upon a bed of blooms even in winter days and nights, and when Cleopatra entertained Antony she hand roses covering the floor to the depth, it is said, of an ell.

We are told that Heliogabalus supplied so many at one of his banquets that several of his guests were suffocated in the endeavor to extricate themselves from the abundance—victims of a surfeit of sweet odors.—Philadelphia Times

Ammonia in Coal.

Some 13,000,000 tons of coal are burned in London yearly. About 4,000,000 are utilized by the gas manufacturing companies; 9,000,000 are burned in household and industrial fire grates. Each ton contains sufficient ammonia to produce, if treated with sulphuric acid, twenty-two to twenty-eight pounds of sulphate of ammonia. The total loss of this fertilizing agent is therefore, say, 9,990 tons. As the price of sulphate of ammonia is £9 10s. the ton, the monetary loss is £94,905 every year. If we were less wasteful we should not be so much obliged to ransack Chili and Peru for artificial manures.—National Review.

Hard to Find.

Walter Satterlee, the artist, says one of the greatest difficulties he meets is the lack of models in this country whose hair is so black that it has blue or purple lights in it. He adds that what he wants is common in Europe, but almost unattainable here.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cause for Regret.

Lady—I don't like this picture so well as I did the last one you took of me.

Photographer—Ah, madam, I have not the artistic taste that I had when I was young, and besides my camera is getting old.—New York Weekly.

WHERE WOMEN REIGN

THE GENTLE SEX HAS BECOME A POWER IN WASHINGTON.

Hundreds of Women Hold Working Positions in the Various Departments of the National Capital Without Losing Their Social Standing.

Washington is getting to be woman's paradise. There is no other place in the wide, wide world where women earn as much money, are as independent and are as deferentially treated by men as they are in Washington. The influence of women in the affairs of this mighty nation has been a subject of frequent comment. Many interesting and highly imaginative stories have been told of the woman lobbyist until the discreet wives of most of our migratory statesmen have taken to traveling around with them, and never under any circumstances let them remain alone amid the temptations of the capital. This is a palpable injustice to the lawgivers, and involves an unnecessary hardship upon the anxious matrons.

In the place of an imaginary and romantic influence upon the lawmaking of this free for all government there has thus grown up the real and substantial influence exercised by the ever present and zealous guardian of her husband's morals. Meanwhile, from being the mender of her lord's socks and torn trousers, the wife of the statesman has come to realize that she can occupy another and higher sphere in life, and feeling her power has begun by making all around her feel it, who in turn emulate her independence. So it comes that from a combination of politics, society bobbing and female domination the women of Washington have established a status for themselves.

Should all the men be suddenly called away from the capital for a journey across the Styx there is no legitimate business that would be left without a votary and no profession would fall into decline. Beyond the closing of a few charitable institutions things would remain as they are. Lawsuits would be no fewer or less skillfully conducted; doctors and druggists would still get in their daily work; butchers and bakers and candlestick makers would still be sufficiently numerous; preachers and merchants would equal the demand; barbers would be more plenty than beards; real estate agents would still be forming pools and combinations and speculating in city and suburban property. An undertaker is about the only thing of importance which would not be found. Thus far the men have that business to themselves.

When Spinner opened the departments for the emplyment of women he gave them an opportunity for advancement. The thing has worked itself out now and the female clerk is an established institution, so to speak, in good standing, with a fair income—and sometimes a fair face as well—recognized and approved of by good society, and in a measure fashionable. Her social standing as a class comes perhaps from the fact that she is more often the friend of the wives of statesmen than of the statesmen themselves, those watchful guardians exercising some discretion in the matter of favors to their own sex.

Out of this has come the recognition of woman as a self supporting creature, without loss of standing, and not all being able to get into the departments or to always hold places once secured they have invaded other occupations and professions once sacred to the wearers of trousers. Of course female teachers, doctors and lawyers are no longer a novelty, and a great many have gone into a small private brokerage business. One woman has gone regularly into the real estate, loan, trust and insurance business, and has turned out to be one of the best "business men" of the thousand and one who keep their eyes on every foot of ground in and about Washington. She has opened up new subdivisions, formed syndicates and done booming with the best of them. The girls have almost driven young men out of the stenography and typewriting business, and even around the political headquarters, where men only used to be employed, women now outnumber men two to one.

The best of it all is that with all this the social status of the women remains unchanged; they are still treated with the greatest deference and courtesy, and a "strong minded" woman is a rarity.

What would you think to see a shopgirl in a tailor made riding habit galloping through Central park on a stylish horse? It would not be a common sight. It is not at all uncommon to see parties of shopgirls—salesladies—well dressed and well mounted, riding along the most fashionable drives, looking as stylish and pretty and enjoying themselves as much as the richest daughter of fashion whom they may pass on the road. The girls in some of the larger stores belong to riding clubs and have riding masters who take them out two or three times a week.—Baltimore News.

Charlotte, N. C., boasts of a double faced potato. One side is claimed to be a perfect representation of a bear, and the other, it is said, is a fair mold of a calf.

At the table of Cambaceres a sturgeon of 187 pounds was served, brought on by four footmen, preceded by two flutists, four violinists and a Swiss guardsman, halberd in hand.

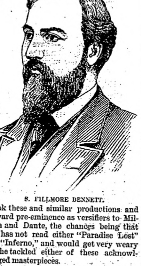
DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE PEOPLE'S POETS.

THE AUTHORS OF "FARM BALLADS" AND "SWEET BY AND BY."

Will Carleton and Dr. Bennett Are Not Miltons or Dantes, but They Touch the Popular Heart—Carleton's Beautiful Tribute to Whittier.

The songs the people love are the songs that endure. They have a vitality that is foreign to the productions of great minds. Almost any one who is in touch with human sympathies and human passions is familiar with the tunes and words of "Annie Laurie," "Garryowen," "The Girl I Left Behind Me," "Home, Sweet Home," "Old Hundred," and so on. The hearer may not know the names of the authors, although the melody thrills his very soul, yet if he is of literary pretensions and is called on for a verdict regarding poets and poetry it is quite probable that he would overlook these and similar productions and award pre-eminence as versifiers to Milton and Dante, the chances being that he has not read either "Paradise Lost" or "Inferno," and would get very weary if he tackled either of these acknowledged masterpieces.



S. FILLMORE BENNETT.

It may be as well to assert right here that this busy, bustling generation of which we are a part wants its poetry to appeal not so much to critical intellects as to hearts that throb in consonance with the woes, the joys, the aspirations and the honest triumphs of fellow strugglers in the daily toil to win bread and to make the world better worth living in.

If the singer can send out lines that live, he may not be remembered, but his words will remain the heritage and inspiration of the common people. That, I fancy, will be the case with Dr. S. Fillmore Bennett, who now resides at Richmond, Ills. The name probably is familiar to few, yet he is the author of a song that has been heard in all lands of this round globe. Years ago, at Elkhorn, Wis., he wrote "The Sweet By and By," and although the words are well known to most readers it is not inappropriate to bring them in closer touch with those glorious verses of hope and aspiration:

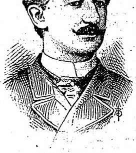
There's a land that is fairer than day,
  And by faith we can see it afar,
For the Father waits over the way
  To prepare us a dwelling place there.

In the sweet by and by
  We shall meet on that beautiful shore—
In the sweet by and by
  We shall meet on that beautiful shore.

We shall sing on that beautiful shore
  The melodious songs of the blest,
And our spirits shall sorrow no more—
  Not a sigh for the blessing of rest.

To our Bountiful Father above
  We will offer the tribute of praise
For the glorious gift of his love
  And the blessings that hallow our days.

A more voluminous writer than Dr. Bennett is the well known Will Carleton, whose reputation was made when he published those two pathetic poems of country life, "Over the Hills to the Poor House" and "Betsy and I Are Out." He has grown well to do of late and somewhat neglectful of his wizard pen, but not long ago the occasion and the theme brought him up to his standard. He went to Haverhill, Mass., attended the Whittier memorial services and read a long poem, from which the following extracts, that possess particular metrical beauty as well as heart sentiment, are taken:



WILL CARLETON.

Sing, Merrimac; lift thy sweet voice above
All other streams; thou wast his river love.
Through thy green valleys crept the unclad feet
That soon should walk fame's palace bordered street;
Upon thy banks first flashed the dreams in view
That brightened all the world in coming true;
He loved the gallant words and deeds to praise
Of thy advance guard of colonial days;
He loved upon fame's canvas high to lift
Thy brilliant present, with its scenes of thrift;
He strove to make thy future doubly sure
With precepts, which, like diamonds, will endure;
  His spirit lingers here!
His gallantry watched kindly on her way
The humble maid that tossed the fragrant hay;
His pity sought the fallen conquered brave,
And left its tears upon an Indian grave;
With flowers of justice and of love he strewed
The witch's child by zealotry pursued;
Even the soul in endless darkness thrown
Had pity from his muse; there was no moan
  Escaped his eager ear!

F. X. WHITE.

KEEPING OUT CHOLERA.

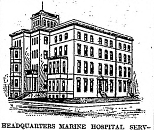
How the Federal Quarantine Service Is Conducted.

Surgeon General Walter Wyman has suddenly and one might say painfully become an exceedingly prominent member of the federal government, for he is at the head of the marine hospital and national quarantine establishment. As the law now stands he has the last word on preventive measures, and the medical authorities say cholera is certain to get in unless extraordinary precautions are taken to keep it out. The prospect is anything but pleasant. Cholera is already prevalent in some foreign ports. Its entrance here at any time would be an evil, but this year a calamity indeed, for, in the expressive language of Witness Wilkinson in the Beecher trial, it "would knock the World's fair higher than a kite."

Congress has taken the matter up, and so have all the medical associations in the coast cities. Many others have added their advice, and in the multitude of counselors there is a deal of confusion. Shall there be national or local quarantine or a combination of the two? Shall immigration be suspended for one year from March 1, as Senator Chandler proposes, or for a few months only, as others propose, or a rigid system of inspection be relied on, as Congressmen Rayner, of Maryland, and Brosius, of Pennsylvania, propose?

Surgeon General Wyman goes much further. He would combine the several stringent measures proposed and have not only a national quarantine and very rigid inspection of all cabin passengers, but total suspension of immigration by steerage to begin at once. He wanted it on the 1st of January and thinks that valuable time has already been lost. And it is a fact worth noting that the leading physicians in the Atlantic coast cities agree with him. Meanwhile it is a satisfaction to know that the national quarantine service is already well organized and has often proved its efficiency.

It was founded by law in 1798-9 and has since been much improved and extended. In 1871 it was reorganized and made a bureau of the treasury department. The statute of 1799 provided for the observance of state health regulations by federal officers and gave the president power to purchase or erect quarantine warehouses and to remove certain branches of the government to places of safety during epidemics of contagious diseases. By the law of 1878 vessels arriving from infected ports are to be kept out, United States consuls are required to report the state of health at such ports and to notify the marine hospital service of the departure of infected vessels, while officers of state quarantines are empowered to act in emergencies as officers of the national quarantine.



HEADQUARTERS MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE, WASHINGTON.

In 1879 a national board of health was created, but was allowed to expire soon after by failure to make appropriations for it. In 1888 eight federal quarantine stations were established. These divide between them the entire coast of the United States and are under the control of the national marine hospital service. The nerve center, so to speak, of all their ramifications is in the so called Butler building at Washington, a granite structure directly facing the Capitol on the south.

In the entire service are over 500 persons distributed among the quarantine stations near the coast cities. At their head, with almost absolute power, is Dr. Walter Wyman, and his assistants are Surgeons H. W. Austin, F. W. Mead, J. J. Kinyoun and G. T. Vaughan. Besides, there are sixteen other graduated surgeons, twenty-two passed assistant surgeons, eighteen assistant surgeons, seventy-six acting assistant surgeons and thirty hospital stewards. The remaining 850 persons are nurses, attendants, seamen and quarantine officers of various grades.

The service employs six vessels. Four are simply disinfecting steamers and used only locally at the main stations; but two, the Dagmar and the Charles Foster, are fine seagoing steamers. By the last assignment the former is on duty at the Delaware breakwater and the latter at the Cape Charles quarantine. The other six quarantine stations are located on Sapelo island, Georgia, Key West and the Dry Tortugas, on Chandaleur island, off the Mississippi coast, at San Francisco and San Diego, Cal., and at Port Townsend, Wash. Of all these that at San Francisco, with a hospital on Angel island, is confessedly the best and many think the finest quarantine station in the world.

In all branches of the service there is now unusual activity and vigilance, and Dr. Wyman urges that inspection shall begin in foreign ports at once by direct instructions to American consuls; that immigrant vessels from any port not above suspicion be detained; that if any contagious disease appears after its sailing the vessel be required to return; that most rigid national quarantine be established at once and every city be put in the best possible condition. In short, he means to keep the cholera out, and may the Lord be good to him!

Thinks Her Perfect.

A Baltimore artist who is at work on a statue to be called "The Diving Girl" thinks he has found a perfect model in the person of Miss Clara Beckwith, who has considerable repute as a swimmer. He declares her proportions more symmetrical than those of the lady who figures as Montana's silver statue.

LANGUAGE IS SWEET.

EXPRESSION BY THE TONGUE IS NECESSARY TO HAPPINESS.

Life Would Be Mighty Desolate Without Sweet Words—Much More Beautiful Could We Make This Existence if We Took More Pains in Talking.

How would you enjoy life with sweet words left out? My littlest one runs to me and with both arms about my neck pulls me down to kiss me, and whispers as if it were a new secret: "Papa, I love you. Oh, how I just do love, love you!" What a pest it is to be pulled about so when one is busy! How it dislocates one's collar and one's thoughts! But what would you take for such prattle? How would you like it checked, and instead of such spontaneity be compelled to imagine you are loved? Dear me, old man, but why so fussy? Do you not know you are loved? Do not actions speak louder than words? Does not your wife cook your meals, and does not your girl put your room in order? Must you also be mussed over and gabbled to in order to be satisfied?

Then comes my oldest boy, a grand fellow, stout and wholesome and brainy, and before I am aware his arm is about my neck, and he pulls my head over on his shoulder with a kiss and a "Papa, you are awful dear to me." Pshaw, what is there in words? A few sounds—nothing else! I am not so certain about that. I only know that I would not take a mint of money for that small bouquet of my boy's words. No, not for the world would I have to guess at his affection and get hungry for a solid certainty. There is not enough such eloquence, as I have looked about the world. And yet it should not flow too easily. Tonguy love is quite another thing from open heartedness. In my opinion we should bring up our young folk to easily and frankly express their feelings, only not to express any more than they feel. The art and trick of speech is to be more eloquent than true, and so to turn love into a lie.

Somewhere I have lately read a good story of a married couple that from some spleen vowed not to speak to each other. Well, if they had not really loved they could have got on without talk, but in this case they could not. So by happy inspiration they used the household cat as a go between. "Go," said Betsy, "and tell John that dinner is ready." "Go," answered John, "and tell Betsy I am on hand." "Here, puss," says John, "tell Betsy this pudding is remarkably good, and I will take another plate of it if she pleases." "Go tell John," answers Betsy, "that I am glad he likes this peach shortcake, and he shall have three pieces if he will."

So for years they kept their vows, but told their love and got on famously. It is a general fact that friendship grows stronger by a short separation and correspondence by pen. A man or woman will say sweet or true things in a letter that they would not say first by mouth. I do not quite understand this, but I know it is true. Friends treasure letters, and friendship never is quite itself until a few letters have passed. I encourage young folk to write letters to learn the art of talking well. One would suppose it would be the other way—that good talkers should write well.

How came it about that the tongue and adjacent organs got control of language? Possibly Dido can explain this. She leaps and bounds about me in overwhelming joy. Her nose is in my face and her paws on my chest. At last, utterly unable to express all her emotion, she throws back her head and explodes in a bark. It is nothing but an explosion, but it is a great relief to her. That is the beginning of speech in all creatures—only a noise made by the rush of emotion through the mouth. By and by this noise is modified to express different emotions. The dog can express a dozen passions and resentments, and yet most of these are told by the tail and the body in general.

The next step is, or was, to modify these sounds into musical roles. The bird does not enunciate first, but sings. The lower races sing well and talk badly. The highest art is to sing well and talk equally well. So language slowly gets stolen by a certain set of organs that at first had little to do with it. The legs and hands come less into play to tell emotions; the tail, which has done so much animal talking, is aborted. I think it is aborted mainly because its functions are mostly passed over to the tongue. I have not heard whether the tailed tribe of Africans wag those appendages in friendly greeting like dogs or not. I would not own a tailless cat or have a horse's tail even clipped of its hair. It is to abbreviate speech; it is to lop off the organ of expression.

You will see that my theory about the development of language accounts for many abnormal forms of speech. Profanity is a mere explosion of sound, closely allied to the dog's bark and the cat's squall. It is not so wicked as it is beastly. It is the natural language of a vulgar fellow who has no art of high language. Half the world talks by explosion and expletives. The more beastly a man's habits the more profane he becomes by necessity. It is his natural language. What a stretch it is from such a man to Coleridge or Emerson or Lowell!

I heard of a man the other day, "Ah, he is a great scientist, to be sure, but he is also such a splendid talker." The art of saying fine things finely you cannot afford to be without. "Live with wolves and you will learn to howl," says the Spanish proverb. We ought to be able to add, "Live with men and you will learn to talk well." But that is not so. There are too few really good talkers—really wise and witty tongues.—E. P. Powell in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

UNDERGROUND RAILWAYS.

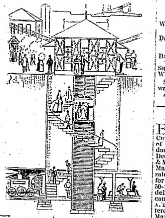
How Berlin Proposes to Solve the Problem of Rapid Transit.

Railroads on the surface, railroads in the air and railroads underground have been tried in the great cities, and their relative advantages are still hotly disputed by engineers and the public. New York and Brooklyn are completely "mashed" on their elevated roads. All they want is an improvement of the system to permit of more trains at the busy hours and one more road to supply rapid transit from the city hall region straight to the north end of the city. London seems to be equally well satisfied with her wonderful underground system, and now Berlin has declared her intention to abolish surface tracks and put all the lines under ground.

In truth, the conditions are different. The trolley and electric motor systems would not do at all in the busy sections of Berlin or New York, and the London omnibuses on Broadway or Park row would be simply ridiculous. Even in the German capital, with its placid, home loving and phlegmatic people, there were counted within sixteen hours on the corner of Friedrich strasse and Unter den Linden 120,016 foot passengers and 13,470 vehicles, and on the Potsdamerplatz 87,200 foot passengers and 17,360 vehicles. Every year social philosophers protest against the "mad rush of people to the cities," and every year the rush is greater.

The Berlin electric company intimates that the necessary tunnels will cost $212,500 per mile, as under the city at a depth of from ten to twenty feet has already been constructed a great labyrinth of gas and sewer pipes and telegraph and telephone wires, while the bed of a broad and deep river would appear to be an insuperable obstacle. But London has overcome almost equal obstacles, and since November, 1890, electric motors have been introduced in that part of the tunnel which connects the city with the southern suburbs. The result exceeded the most sanguine expectations. All the difficulties which the steam engines produced were removed at once by this change.

An additional difficulty in Berlin, however, is that the citizens will not submit to have the streets torn up even temporarily, and so a new system of tunneling must be adopted. Railroad Director Mackinson has recently invented a machine especially for this kind of work, which is considered a marvelous success. As far as the unscientific mind can comprehend his system, it seems to consist mainly of driving each separate section of the tunnel forward into the earth.



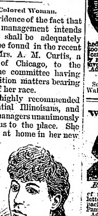
STATION OF THE BERLIN UNDERGROUND RAILWAY.

These sections are big, solid rings, made of the best iron and steel, which are so constructed that they can be fitted together hermetically before the final completion of the tunnel. One ring after the other is driven into the earth, while contrivances particularly prepared for this purpose haul away the dirt and sand as if some magical power were at work. Thick external and internal layers of cement protect the metal, all of which will constitute a mighty structure against which all the powers of the underworld will not be able to prevail. Two tunnels will be laid, with a single track in each, so as as to avoid all possible danger of collisions. As to elevated roads, the Berliners will not listen to the proposition, as they want privacy in their homes and quiet both at home and cafe, and maybe they are right.

A Talented Colored Woman.

An additional evidence of the fact that the World's fair management intends that every interest shall be adequately represented may be found in the recent appointment of Mrs. A. M. Curtis, a colored woman, of Chicago, to the secretaryship of the committee having in charge all exposition matters bearing upon the welfare of her race.

Mrs. Curtis was highly recommended by several influential Illinoisans, and the board of lady managers unanimously supported her claims to the place. She will be thoroughly at home in her new position, for she has for many years been engaged in work having for its object the amelioration of the condition of the colored race, and being a woman of remarkable intelligence and possessing executive ability in a marked degree she has earned the confidence and respect of the people of Chicago. Mrs. Curtis' wide acquaintance with prominent people was gained while she was the solicitor for the Chicago Provident hospital. Her husband, Dr. A. M. Curtis, a physician of good reputation, is the surgeon of this institution.



MRS. A. M. CURTIS.

Mrs. Curtis' work at the World's fair will consist principally in attending to what might be called the "colored press work" of the exposition.

Order to Examine Accounts.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss.
In Probate Court, special term Jan. 17, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Ole Nelson deceased: On reading and filing the petition of Hanna Nelson, administratrix of the estate of Ole Nelson deceased, representing among other things that she has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of her administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is ordered that said account be examined and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 27th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the probate office in the city of Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars, ($300.00) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jedire Draper and Alice Mariah Draper, his wife, to The Security Trust Company, a corporation bearing date the 4th day of September, A. D., 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of October, A. D. 1890, at 8.40 o'clock a. m., in book 52 of mortgages, on page 447, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lots fifteen and sixteen (15 and 16) of block eighty-two (82) of Kretzschmar's Addition to Red Lake Falls according to the recorded plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

THE Clay county agricultural society has decided to hold its fair at Glyndon this year as usual.

IF the present legislature keeps up its record of economy thus far established, the republican party will be able to point with pride to the legislature of '93.

ON January 1st, 1894, the charter of the Louisiana Lottery will expire and the concern will remove to the republic of Honduras, where they have secured a charter for 50 years.

SENATOR EATON has introduced a bill limiting the legislative session to 60 days. Better limit the salary of the members to a certain amount for the session and let them stay there as long as they want to.

EX-PRESIDENT RUTHFORD B. Hayes is another prominent American who has gone the way of all flesh. He was a gallant soldier, and was elected to congress, and afterwards to the presidency on his war record.

THE judiciary committee has submitted a measure for a revision of the statutes, and asks that $12000 be appropriated for the work. This would be money well spent if the work of revision was placed in the right hands.

SENATOR IGNATIUS DONNELLY voted for the resolution in favor of the passage of the anti-option bill by congress. He said he hated Washburn and he disliked some parts of the bill, but on the whole he thought it would be a beneficial measure.

H. M. GOODELL'S name appears at the head of the McIntosh News as publisher of that sheet. A queer combination that News seems to be. It was Paul Bodine who put in a bid on behalf of the News for the county printing, but his name don't appear in the sheet anywhere. Who is Goodell anyway?

THE Tribune calls Commissioner Anderson a republican, but as he was elected on the people's party ticket, and voted to make a democratic paper the official county paper, it is very hard to see just where his republicanism comes in. As the populists now disown him, Mr. Anderson will be a political outcast, unless he affiliates with one of the old parties.

THE Kansas legislature has done nothing thus far but quarrel. The populists control the senate and the republicans the house and in each branch the controlling party are threatening to crush out enough of their opponents to give them a majority on joint ballot. It is always said that it is a good thing to have political parties about evenly divided, and then there is less chance of the dominant party becoming corrupt, but it is detrimental to the interests of the people when no party in a legislative body has a good working majority.

BERNDT ANDERSON, of St. Paul, the editor of a Swedish paper, has been appointed state dairy and food commissioner. Some of the other appointments recently made by governor Nelson are Hon. Fred Von Baumbach, state game and fish commissioner; W. D. Tomlin, boiler inspector for old Fifth district; S. S. Brown, surveyor general of logs for Second district; Niles Carpenter, member of board of equalization, Tenth district; Dr. W. H. Leonard, member state board of health; C. P. McGinnis, member state board of corrections and charities; Dr. H. W. Brazie, member of state lunacy commission.

A. KAISER, editor of the Thirteen Towns, published at Fosston, who was appointed surveyor-general of logs and lumber for the seventh district by governor Merriam and recently confirmed by the senate, has been re-appointed by govenor Nelson. When the matter of his conformation came before the senate the first time Senator Lommen opposed his confirmation on the ground that Mr. Kaiser belonged to the "pine land ring." But he was confirmed almost unanimously. A man from the southern part of the state who may have heard some talk of a "pine-land ring" up here—might be excusable for making a break of this kind; but it seems strange that a man from this county could deliberately make such a charge, knowing, as he does, that a "pine-land ring" exists here only in imagination. Mr. Kaiser is a staunch republican—loyal to his party and true to his friends and every newspaper man in this part of the country will be glad to see him get this plum.

THE Red River Dalen is now owned by Messrs. Muus and Bydal. It seems these gentlemen have paid off some mortgages on the plant—about $1,600—and have transferred the whole business to themselves—so the story goes. This concern was incorporated as a stock company when it started, and $3,600 worth of its stock bought by the zealous people's party adherents. Although the paper appeared prosperous, it is said to have been falling behind at the rate of $1,000 per year. The stockholders have all been frozen out by Messrs. Muus and Bydal and nearly all the stock bought up at 10 and 15 cents on the dollar, until the aforesaid gentlemen controlled the paper. It was rumored last fall that the paper—or its manager—reaped quite a harvest from the Dalen's support of the different tickets in the field. But the paper continued to get into debt until it has been sold for $1,600. Its subscription list has been melting away like the snow in springtime, and some of the merchants have had to quit advertising in it as the Scandinavian have such a hatred of the sheet now that they are prejudiced against any one who patronizes it, thinking they must be friends of the paper. If things continue in this way much longer there will be another defunct Scandinavian newspaper in this bailiwick.

ALTHOUGH desperate efforts have been made by the Great Northern and the Iron Range railroads to force the Duluth & Winnipeg road into the hands of a receiver, the latter concern has paid up its indebtedness and is now—in fact always has been—in a solvent condition. Last Friday General Manager Fisher, of the Duluth & Winnipeg paid over $600,000 to the Minneapolis Trust company to settle claims which they held against the road. There is no doubt but J. J. Hill fully expected to get control of this road, and utilize the portion already built when he extended the Fosston branch to Duluth. The Duluth & Winnipeg people say that their original plans will be carried out and that the road will be completed. In this event, it is hard to foretell just what Mr. Hill will do, but if he does not absorb the aforesaid Duluth & Winnipeg, the latter will have to be possessed of plenty of money because Mr. Hill has long had his eye upon the rich natural resources of the wilds of Northern Minnesota, and has only been awaiting the proper time to push the Great Northern out in that direction. Now that the Pacific extension is completed, he can give more attention to this matter and there is every reason to believe that the coming summer will see considerable road-building through this northern country. A direct line from Crookston to Duluth would give the Great Northern a splendid line from the Pacific ocean to Lake Superior, and the through business alone would warrant the building of this connection to say nothing of the rich country it would traverse and open up.

EX-MAYOR WINSTON of Minneapolis has sent to the legislature a bill for an act to regulate elections. It is to take the place of the present election law, is to retain all its good features. It is intended to give a simple system of voting and a more rapid system of counting the votes. Under the proposed system the ballots are to contain each of the party tickets arranged in parallel columns, each tickets separate from the other, substantially as now printed under the so-called "Australian ballot system" of Colorado. Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and other states, the aim being to combine the best features of each. Proposed constitutional amendments are to be printed at the bottom, distinct from the main ballot, and each ticket is to be headed by its party designation, followed by a small square in which the voter desiring to cast a straight ticket may make a cross. To vote a mixed ticket he may cross each candidate voted for as at present or make a cross at the head as stated which will count for all candidates thereon save those crossed in the other columns. Under this system the democratic voter who at the last election wished to vote a straight ticket except for election of governor would have only to make one cross under the heading "Democrats Ticket" and a cross opposite the name of Nelson. The method for voting a mixed ticket where a number of candidates are elected to one office, as in the case of representatives, park commissioners, etc., is greatly simplified, the leading idea being how not to defeat the intent of the voter.

Mr. Winston has taken a great deal of pains to get up the present bill, and it would undoubtedly be an improvement on the present system, which has been found to be very cumbersome.

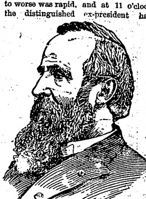
GEN. HAYES DEAD

THE EX-PRESIDENT EXPIRES AT HIS OHIO HOME.

His Death Came Suddenly, He Having Been Reported as Improving Only a Few Hours Previously—A Short Biographical Sketch.

FREMONT, O., Jan. 18—Ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes died at 11 o'clock.

Early in the evening an inquiry elicited the response that the general had passed a fairly well day and was resting easily. The change from better to worse was rapid, and at 11 o'clock the distinguished ex-president had passed away. The first intelligence was received of this when Webb B. Hayes announced that his father had just died.



RUTHERFORD B HAYES.

Ex-President Hayes left home last Monday on a trip to Columbus, Ruffalo and Cleveland. At the last mentioned place he spent a few days with his son, Webb B. Hayes. During the last month he had complained of one or two slight attacks of but as they soon passed away he thought nothing of it. On Saturday he experienced a recurrence of the malady, but being prepared for his return home proceeded on his journey accompanied by his son Webb. Word had been sent by telegraph of the general's illness and he was met at the train by his son, Rutherford B. Hayes, and Dr. Hilbist, the family physician, with a carriage. Entering the carriage they were rapidly driven to the Hayes mansion in Spiegel Grove, where all attention was given the stricken general during the day. Sunday the Hayes house was kept quiet and Dr. Hilbist spent most of the day watching at the bedside. The doctor stated that the ex-president had been suffering with a severe attack of heart neuralgia, or angina pectoris, which he had received while at Cleveland, but that he had rallied somewhat, though he was not out of danger. There was apparently no change during the day, and the death of the ex-president when it came was a terrible surprise.

Neuralgia of the Heart,

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Rutherford Birchard Hayes was born in Delaware, O., Oct. 4, 1822. He was a descendent in the sixth generation of George Hayes, who left Scotland in 1680 and settled at Windsor, Conn. He graduated from Kenyon college in 1842 and subsequently spent two years at the law school at Cambridge, Mass. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar at Marietta, O., and commenced practice at Fremont in 1849. He removed to Cincinnati and soon had a very remunerative practice. In 1861 he abandoned the practice of his profession and entered the army as major of the Twenty-third Ohio volunteers. For his gallant services in the battle of Winchester he was brevetted major general.

Mr. Hayes' war record made him very popular in Ohio and while still in the army he was elected to congress from the Second district, but refused to take his seat until the war should be ended. He was re-elected in 1866 and had serven one term when he was elected governor of Ohio. He was elected for the third time in 1876 and while occupying this place was nominated by the Republican party in 1876 as its candidate for president of the United States. The contest was severe and close and after the election disputes arose as to the electoral votes of several states. The dispute was finally referred to a committee composed of five senators, five representatives and five judges of the supreme court of the United States. The committee decided by a vote of 8 to 7 that the electoral votes of the disputed states should be given to Hayes and he was thereby elected by a majority of one over Samuel J. Tilden. He was inaugurated March 4, 1877. After serving one term he retired from public life and has since lived at Fremont.

EARTH TO EARTH.

The Last Sad Rites for Ex-President Hayes at Fremont.

FREMONT, O., Jan. 20.—At 9 o'clock morning the school children, civic bodies of Fremont and the general public were permitted to take a last look at the familiar features of their distinguished neighbor and friend, ex-President Hayes. At 2 o'clock the family, personal friends and dignitaries from abroad assembled in the parlors of the mansion, where simple and impressive ceremonies were held.

The Twenty-third psalm was read by the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church and was immediately followed by the singing of a favorite hymn of the late ex-president's, by Professor A. Arthur, and David H. Kimberly, both of Cleveland, assisted by a quartette. Prayer was offered by President Bashford of the Ohio Wesleyan university. There was no sermon, and the services closed with the singing of the Lord's prayer. The coffin was then removed to the hearse and the cortege, composed of civic and military bodies, moved toward the cemetery, two miles from town, where the interment took place. C. C. Corbin, assistant adjutant general, United States army, had charge of the funeral procession. At the grave the ritual of the G. A. R., which is very simple, was used. It is estimed that at least 10,000 strangers were in attendance on the funeral.

Nominated in Kansas.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 23.—On the third ballot the Republican caucus nominated United States District Attorney J. W. Ady for senator.

BISHOP BROOKS DEAD.

The Noted Boston Divine Passes Away Suddenly.

BOSTON, Jan. 23.—Bishop Phillips Brooks died at his residence, 238 Clarendon street, at 6:30 a. m. His death was entirely unexpected. He was taken ill Thursday with sore throat, but nothing serious showed itself until Sunday evening. Dr. H. A. Beach, his physician, discovered diphtheria symptoms and considered a consultation advisable and called in Dr. R. N. Fitz. At this time nothing serious was anticipated, and Dr. Fitz remained only a short time. Dr. Beach was with the bishop the entire night. About 6:30 the patient was seized with a coughing spasm which lasted for a few moments, and his heart ceased to beat. No diphtheric symptoms were discovered by a superficial examination.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Phillips Brooks was born Dec. 13, 1835. His boyhood was passed partly in Boston and partly in Andover. He graduated at Harvard in 1855, studied theology in the seminary at Alexandria, Va., was ordained in 1859, and became rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Advent, Philadelphia, a comparatively obscure charge. Three years later he became rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, one of the largest and most fashionable churches in Philadelphia. He remained there seven years, in 1869 becoming rector of Trinity church, Boston. About a year ago he was consecrated bishop of the diocese of Massachusetts, succeeding the late Benjamin Henry Paddock.

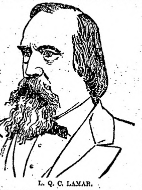
While he was pastor of Trinity church Dr. Brooks declined any calls elsewhere, a professorship in Harvard and the office of assistant bishop of Pennsylvania to which he was elected in 1886. In his Boston parish he exerted a powerful influence for good, and especially over the young men. Bishop Brooks was one of the most brilliant pulpit orators of the Protestant Episcopal church and had a more rapid delivery of any man in the country. He was noted for his "low church" views and preached in the churches of other denominations than his own.

Bishop Brooks published "Lectures on Preaching," delivered before the Yale divinity school, "Sermons," "The Influence of Jesus," "Bohlen Lectures," and "Baptism and Confirmation."

J. Q. C. LAMAR,

The Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Dies Suddenly.

MACON, Ga., Jan. 23.—Justice Lucius Quintius Cincinnatus Lamar died here at 8:45 o'clock p. m. It is a terrible shock to the community. The death was sudden in the extreme, for, although he has been ailing for some time, the justice appeared to be gaining in health. He came from Washington a month ago and was at the residence of Mr. W. H Virgin, in Vineville, a suburb of this city. At about 3 o'clock Justice Lamar took his overcoat, intending to go to the city, but was met at the door by a friend, Dr. Llewllyn, with whom he returned to the sitting room. At that time and during all the afternoon he was in good spirits and at dinner at 6:15 he seemed to have a good appetite. Dr. Llewllyn left the house about 6 o'clock and a few minutes later the justice was seized with violent pains in the heart and died at the hour mentioned.



L. Q. C. LAMAR.

A TRIFLE STRONGER.

No Very Perceptible Change in Mr. Blaine's Condition.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24—Dr. Johnston visited Mr. Blaine at 6 o'clock p. m. On leaving the house he said he considered the patient just a trifle stronger, but this was almost imperceptible. Mr. Blaine, he said, slept well during the day and from present indications he did not look for any change during the night. The doctor was asked if he considered Mr. Blaine's condition improved. He replied that he did not, as he was still very feeble.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

Some People Think Bayard Will Have the Place Again.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The Sun's special from Washington says: A report has been circulated at the capitol, said to have been brought from New York, that Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware, would be secretary of state in Mr. Cleveland's cabinet. No one could be found to verify the report, but the Delaware congressmen thought the appointment quite probable.

DEMPSEY GUILTY.

Jury in the Homestead Poisoning Cases Brings in a Verdict.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 20.—The jury in the Dempsey case find defendant guilty, as indicted.

Must Explain the Delay.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The sub-committee of the house committee on naval affairs charged with the preparation of the naval appropriation bill has requested representatives of both the Bethlehem Iron and Steel and Carnegie companies to appear before them Wednesday and Thursday next and explain the cause of delay on the delivery of armor plates and other steel.

The Washington Deadlock.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Jan. 23.—The ballot for United States senator resulted: Allen 51, Turner 35, Griggs 27, Teas 9. This is a loss of one for Allen and a gain of one for Turner.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Dec. 17.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 17.—The legislature did very little during the day aside from balloting for United States senator.

In the senate Sevatson called up the resolution endorsing the anti-option bill and after considerable debate it was passed—39 to 15. This result having been achieved President Clough announced that the hour for nominations for United States senator had arrived. Senator John Day Smith placed in nomination Cushman K. Davis, Senator McHale placed before the senate the name of Daniel W. Lawler, and Senator Lommen, in the longest speech of the day, nominated S. M. Owen. The vote in the senate was as follows:

Davis 20, Lawler 17, Owen 11, Merriam 2, Judge Dickinson 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, John Lind 1, C. M. Start 1.

In the house Mr. Wahlund introduced a joint resolution protesting to congress against the passage of a bill prohibiting immigration, declaring that such a measure was unnecessary as a national precaution and would work injury to the growth and development of Minnesota.

Several bills were introduced, but none of great importance.

The hour of noon having arrived J. B. Cotton arose and presented the name of Cushman K. Davis for United States senator. John H. Ives placed in nomination Daniel W. Lawler and John McGuire presented the name of S. M. Owen. The roll was then called and resulted as follows:

Davis 67, Lawler 31, Owen 12, C. M. Start 1, Albert Schaeffer 1, Moses M. Clapp 1.

Wednesday, Dec. 18.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 18.—The legislative session was of short duration, owing to the intervening of the joint convention. In the senate a resolution was adopted looking to the taxation of logs and lumber and of land grants, and a special committee thereon is to be appointed. A bill was introduced appropriating $150,000 for a building for the State Historical society. Senator Probstfield introduced a bill which is one of the important ones of the session. It provides for the erection of state elevators at Hamline and Duluth and makes an appropriation of $3,070,000 to carry out the provisions of the act.

In the house the pending resolution for investigating the high price of coal was passed, calling for a joint house and senate committee of nine.

Joint resolutions on the death of ex-President Hayes were passed, and after the election of a United States senator both houses adjourned for the day.

Thursday, Dec. 19.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 19.—The house held a short session, adjourning for the day at noon.

The only breeze was over the recommittal of H. F. 33 to the grain and warehouse committee. There are two bills before the house dealing with the erection of elevators and grain warehouses on the right of way of railroads, one introduced by Mr. Bjorge and the other by Mr. Jacobson. Mr. Jacobson's bill was favorably reported and Mr. Bjorge moved to recommit it. Mr. Jacobson objected, and there was quite a fuss for a few minutes. Finally the bill was recommitted.

The committee on elections in the Biddeman-Hinrichs contest case recommended that Mr. Hinrichs retain his seat.

The committee on immigration reported favorably upon Mr. Wahlund's resolution protesting to congress against the passage of anti-immigration laws, and the report was adopted.

Speaker Lee announced the house reapportionment committee as follows: Dunn, Greer, Benner, Shell, Tyler, Boggs, Markham, F. M. Wilson, Roach, Howard, Horton, Anderson, Cairns, Peterson, T. Cole, Bleecker and Rodgers.

The senate, after transacting a small amount of routine business, went into committee of the whole, Senator Sanborn in the chair. The bill relating to tax judgment sales was laid over till some future date. Senator Leavitt's bill, proposing a constitutional amendment taxing incomes, came up. An amendment taxing inheritances was offered, but was withdrawn, with notice that it would be introduced as a separate measure. The discussion was continued at some length, and the committee finally rose and reported progress, after which adjournment was taken.

Friday, Jan. 20.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 20.—A new idea in constitutional law, as well as in taxation and insurance was placed before the senate by Senator Watt, who introduced a bill proposing an amendment to the constitution providing for governmental insurance at actual cost and the allowing of the levy of the necessary tax to pay the losses by fire. It is modeled after the German plan and is proposed especially for the benefit of the country people whose risks the insurance companies will not run after.

The senate met at 10 o'clock and after the journal had been approved President Clough appointed the following committees created by recent resolutions:

Sanitary Affairs and Quarantine Laws—Senators Tawney, Dean, Bell, Dougherty and Mayo.

Taxation of logs and lumber and to inquire into the taxation of railroad lands—Senators Dedon, Smith, J. D., and Leavitt.

Senator Sanborn offered concurrent resolutions on the death of ex-President Hayes, and in moving their adoption said that if they were concurred in that at the proper time he would move to adjourn until 3 p. m. Monday. The resolutions were adopted and the senate adjourned.

In the house Mr. Fletcher, chairman of the judiciary committee was called down. At a meeting of the committee it was decided to report favorably Mr. Walsh's bill raising the maximum sum that could be collected as damages resulting from accidental death. The committee waited for Mr. Fletcher to send in his report that the bill pass. Finally, when the report was not forthcoming; one of its members set the ball a rolling and a debate of an hour's duration followed. Mr. Fletcher was roasted to a turn on all sides. His defense was that there was some defect in the title of the bill and that he was waiting to have the defect corrected. The committee was ordered to report.

The committee on appropriation recommend the passage of the resolution fixing the time for reporting the appropriation bill not later than March 15.

Mr. Gutterson reported a joint resolution declaring for the election of United States senators by the people. The resolution was adopted.

The senate memorial on the death of ex-President Hayes was adopted and the house adjourned to 4 o'clock Monday.

Monday, Jan. 23.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 23.—In the absence of President Clough Senator John Day Smith called the senate to order and presided. The first business was the allowance of a clerk for the finance committee, and then the senate settled down for the introduction of bills. A large number were handed in, the most important being one by Senator Wood, proposing to so amend the constitution that all lands held by railroads, acquired by grant or otherwise, and not necessary in the actual operation of the roads, shall revert to the state after two years. After the introduction of bills the senate spent some time in committee of the whole, Senator Leavitt's income tax bill being under consideration. No definite action was taken on the bill. When the committee arose the latest executive appointments were read, and on motion of Senator Sanborn, laid on the table, whereupon the senate adjourned.

The house of representatives was in session for an hour and a half during the afternoon. Contrary to expectation, a large number of bills were introduced, many of them of that doubtful and perplexing character known as "a bill for an act to amend an act." None of the new measures were of special importance.

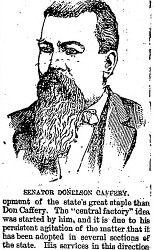
The Northern Pacific investigating committee in its report deals harshly with the Villard management, but commends President Oakes.

LOUISIANA'S NEW SENATOR.

Sketch of the Career of Senator Gibson's Successor, Hon. Donelson Caffery.

Hon. Donelson Caffery, who has been selected by Governor Murphy J. Foster to serve out the unexpired term of the late United States Senator Randall L. Gibson, is affectionately known from one end of Louisiana to the other by the title of Don, which is but an abbreviation of his "given" name.

Senator Caffery still owns the plantation in St. Mary's parish, near Franklin, La., on which he was born in 1836. His father was engaged in sugar culture, and he has followed it in part up to the present time. In fact, no man in Louisiana has taken a deeper interest in the development of the state's great staple than Don Caffery. The "central factory" idea was started by him, and it is due to his persistent agitation of the matter that it has been adopted in several sections of the state. His services in this direction have been recognized by the people of Franklin, who have named their mammoth central factory for him.



SENATOR DONELSON CAFFERY.

Young Caffery received his preliminary education at St. Martinsville, La., and was then sent to a well known educational institution in Baltimore. He studied law after graduating and was admitted to the bar, but did not practice, as he was engaged by his mother to conduct sugar raising for her on a plantation on Bayou Cypremont, near Coto Blanche island, which she had inherited from her family—the Murphys.

When the war broke out Mr. Caffery joined the St. Mary volunteers at Corinth and participated in the battle of Shiloh.

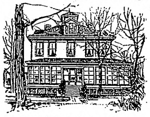
Mr. Caffrey was married in 1869 to Miss Bertha Richardson, a member of one of the oldest families in St. Mary parish. Nine children have resulted from the union.

Outside of a district court clerkship Mr. Caffery had never held any office until 1879, when he was elected a member of the constitutional convention, in the deliberations of which he took a prominent part. Since then he has been one of the foremost political figures of Louisiana, and in 1891 he was elected to the state senate, where he was soon recognized as one of the ablest and most influential members.

THE OFFICE SEEKERS' MECCA.

The "Little White House," the Present Home of the Cleveland Family.

Lakewood, N. J., is not a very large place, but it is nevertheless the Mecca toward which the eyes and in many cases the feet of all good office seekers who like to get what they are after are just now turning. The exact spot which attracts these people, and which is of great interest to everybody in the United States, was known last year as the Cleveland cottage, but is now designated by the more high sounding title of the "Little White House," for the double reason that it is the present home of the president elect and his interesting family and was treated to a coat of innocent looking white paint some time ago.



THE CLEVELAND COTTAGE.

The "Little White House" contains on the first floor the dining room, parlor, Mr. Cleveland's study and the kitchen, with its connecting pantries. The second floor is divided up into five bedrooms and a bath.

The cottage faces the south. A large piazza, which has been transformed into a sunroom by being inclosed with glass, extends along the entire front and about two-thirds of the length of the eastern side of the building. A hall practically bisects the first floor. To the right as one enters is the dining room. Opposite is the parlor. The dining room is connected with the kitchen and the main hall, while the parlor opens into Mr. Cleveland's study in the northwestern corner of the cottage. The study has a door opening into the hall, by means of which the president elect may escape to the upper regions without passing through the parlor.

A stairway leads from the main hall to the second floor. The bedroom of Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland is directly above the dining room. Little Ruth's is over the kitchen, and her nurse's is above the pantry. The baby's apartment connects with her nurse's on the east and her parents' on the south. The servants will sleep in a separate building, Mr. Cleveland's valet, Sinclair, being the only exception. He will have the room in the cupola of the cottage.

The house is nicely but not gorgeously furnished, the paper on the walls is rich, but quiet, and there is no attempt at style. Electric light for building and grounds is supplied by a hotel near by. The "Little White House" is about a half mile distant from the Lakewood railway station.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Euclid Items.

From our regular corresdondent.

EUCLID, JAN. 23, 1893.

James McWaters was with us Friday.

Jay Haseltine and family have gone to Mozomaine, Wisconsin, to spend the balance of the winter.

H. C. Misner and P. Fairweather drove down to the Queen City Friday.

C. Teal Jr. returned to the lumbering camp Saturday.

Mrs. John Schantjen is very sick.

Dr. Chapin is kept on the jump these days.

Bert Wells, of Duluth, and Stewart Chapin, of Devils Lake, North Dakota, were doing business in our city Thursday.

Miss Tiena Tiedt was in Crookston Thurday.

James Albert Teal who has had the typhoid pneumonia is convalescent.

John Vassett and wife, and John Love were among the Buffington folks that were with us last week.

Owing to so many cases of scarlet fever it was thought advisable (by the school board) to close school for an indefinite length of time.

The town clerk has a supply of scarlet fever tracts that can be had, by calling at his office.

L. Cottet and George Nelson are contemplating a trip to the Rosseau Lake country.

L. A. Dunning of Emarado, N. D., has rented the w½ of section 34-153-47 of Robert Casmey.

Miss Emma Brink and Henry Kirsch, of the Keystone farm were in Crookston Thursday.

J. R. Regan has returned to his home in Rudsville, Wis., during the closing of school.

John Gelstof came up from the lumbering camp after a team of Pete Johnson's and returned Friday.

Mrs. Davis of Crookston is visiting in the family of Tom Brown.

Mrs. Bullan is convalescent.

Andy Deffenbaugh is soon to receive his commission as postmaster at the Keystone spur on the N. P.

Cliford Biever, Harry and Clair Chapin, Harold and Vesta Misner the scarlet fever patients, are all all convalescent.

Subscriptions taken at the postoffice for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

The following new cases of scarlet fever have developed, Carl Misner, Willie Murney, Ester Shults and Johnie Ergyle. They are all doing nicely.

S. S. Simpson will erect a neat two story house on section twenty-four to take the place of the one that burned last fall.

The Buffington postoffice has been discontinued; patrons of that office will now receive their mail at Euclid.

Mr. and Mrs. Murney celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage, Tuesday evening. Many were detained from attending by reason of scarlet fever and more by the blizzard. However quite a company gathered, and proceeded to have a right jolly good time, and it is perhaps needless to say, that they had it. Mr. and Mrs. Murney have passed the tenth year of their married life here at Euclid and judging from the number of friends present, and the fine presents received we should say they had gained the esteem and good will of all who know them.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

The smiling face of Mikke Homme is again seen on our streets again. Having sold his restaurant in Thief River Falls and returned to McIntosh for good. They can't stay away from us very long.

Our enterprising little Editor Lanman, has grown an inch and a half since he got the county printing, and his heart has expanded to its fullest extent, for he set up a box of Havannas some time ago. We of course don't know whether it was on the Co. printing, or on a prospective life partner.

The new school house is nearly completed, and it is one that McIntosh can be proud of. The inside decorations are now going on, and the furniture is ordered and everything will be in complete shape for the next term of school, which will commence the first Monday in February.

J. P. Johnson and O. E. Stovem, left for an extended trip to St. Paul, Chicago and Duluth, last Saturday.

Diphtheria is raging through this vicinity, and five deaths have already been reported.

Quite a little money exchanged hands betting on the Hagen-Breen skating contest, and as usual the Hagen backers were the lucky ones.

The alarm of fire was given last Monday evening and the fire department showed their promptness in respondering to the call, but as the fire was not serious, being only the burning of a chimney, the roll was called and the department dismissed.

The McIntosh Lodge K. of H. have rented the city hall from Brother Rice, and has it fixed up in grand style. This Lodge was organized here last fall and has a large number of members. In the near future we expect to have one of the strongest lodge of the kind in the northwest, as all the members take great interest in it, and are doing their best to make it a success.

Andrew Stovern returned from St. Ansear Iowa, last Thursday and it looks as if a more southern climate suits him better, for he has gained eleven pounds on his trip.

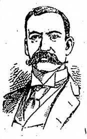
County division is the rallying cry of eastern Polk county now a days and according to appearances it looks as if there would be a split at last. It would be better for the Western part of Polk county to get rid of the Thirteen Towns, for it is always the turning point in all political issues. They can never gain their end as long as they have them along, so they might just as well get rid of them now as later.

The county division rustlers are already having the stones for the foundation of the new court house hauled. It's nothing like having everything in readiness you see.

ABOUT THE SPEAKER.

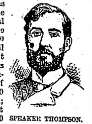
VAST AND INCREASING POWER OF THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE.

Even the Speaker in a State Legislature Is a Man of Consequence, and Here Are Sketches of Some of Them—Many Spirited Contests This Year.



SPEAKER FLYNN.

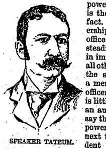
Four thousand lawmakers are now at work (or struggling desperately to "organize") in the national congress and the legislatures of some thirty states. Four thousand fallible men of all sorts of minds—for there has never been a greater variety of parties and factions—and all kinds of training, from that of sailor before the mast to that of timekeeper on a race track, are now laboring to regulate the conduct of some 65,000,000 people in all the complicated concerns of business, domestic and fiduciary relations, morals and finance.



SPEAKER THOMPSON.

And it goes without saying that they will make at least 4,000 serious mistakes, not to mention minor errors, and that in the end the country will go on very much as before, for the reason that the great mass of mankind live on a moral basis above the law and try to do right without asking what the statute directs. An expert has calculated on the basis of several years' experience that these 4,000 lawmakers will introduce about 40,000 bills, acts and joint resolutions; that of these about 8,000 will be passed; that of these not more than 400 will make any real change in substantive law, of which 400 one-half will fall dead at the start, two-fifths will soon be repealed or modified, one-half the remainder will soon become inoperative by reason of changed conditions, and the remaining twenty will have a permanent effect on the policy of the country.

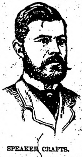
"It comes high, but we must have it." The first duty of all these legislators is to "organize," and in at least five states they seem to be getting themselves into organic form with more than the usual throes of political parturition. The most important officer, of course, is the speaker of the house, for in every constitution derived from that of Great Britain the lower house, or "popular branch," is the money power, and the speaker appoints the committees. Of course he is supposed to do it "by advice," but by whose advice is a question not yet settled.



SPEAKER TATEUM.

Though there have been fifty-two congresses under the constitution there have been but thirty-two speakers, which is explained by the fact that such men as Macon, Clay, Colfax and others held the office at will when their party was in power. And here is the significant fact. The speakership is the only office which has steadily gained in importance on all others. At first the speaker was a mere presiding officer. Now he is little less than an autocrat. To say that in actual power he stands next to the president is a very mild statement. The vice president is not in it for comparison. In the last twenty years the speaker has more than once prevented legislation which a large majority of the house wanted.

In the state legislature the speaker is not quite so autocratic, but owing to an unusual combination of circumstances this year has witnessed several extraordinary struggles for the place. Many entirely new men have come in; many of the old ones are very picturesque figures, and for the first time the legislative gavel is wielded by a man born since the siege of Sumter! It is truly a historic period.

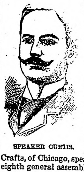


SPEAKER CRAFTS.

New Jersey's peculiar position brings to her this year many embarrassing questions, the contention between New York and Pennsylvania and their interests in the state taking truly protean forms, and her legislature has begun by electing Hon. Thomas Flynn as speaker. So he is styled, of course, in the official register, but he is familiarly known as "Tom Flynn, of the Gloucester race track," for Mr. Flynn was long known as the able and affable "starter" on that famous course.

The Pennsylvania house of representatives re-elected the former speaker, Caleb C. Thompson, of Warren, a Republican, of course. Delaware almost as quietly elected J. Harvey Whiteman, of Wilmington, but he attracts attention as the youngest, save one, of all the new speakers. He is but thirty years old.

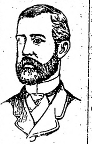
Youngest of all the new speakers is Hon. William Sulzer, of the New York house. He is but twenty-nine years old, a native and representative of New York city, and has his history yet to make. Another promising young speaker is William Aldrich Tateum, of the Michigan house. He is thirty-two, a native of Massachusetts, was educated at Yale, lived ten years in Chicago and represents Kent county, being the first speaker Grand Rapids has furnished. His political strength was shown by his election as a Republican in a Democratic district.



SPEAKER CURTIS.

Still another is Hon. Thomas W. Mabrey, of the Missouri house, who was born in that state in March, 1862, and is now on his third term in the house. He owns and edits The Prospect-News, of Doniphan, Mo. Hon. Robert N. Chamberlin, of the New Hampshire house, is thirty-six years old, a native of Franklin county, N. Y., and a lawyer. Not so young, but still a comparatively new man, is Hon. Clayton Edward Crafts, of Chicago, speaker of the Thirty-eighth general assembly of Illinois. He was born in Auburn, O., in 1848, was educated at Cleveland and located at Chicago as a lawyer in 1870. He has represented the Seventh assembly district for several years and was speaker of the last house.

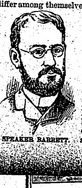
The fifty-eighth session of Indiana's house of representatives is presided over by a veteran—Captain James B. Curtis—joint representative of Marion and Shelby, and a Democrat, of course. In Ohio there was a sharp contest between the two wings of the Republican party, and the speakership went to Hon. Lewis C. Laylin, of Huron, who has been a member for four years, but this is his first term as speaker. In Massachusetts a still more spirited contest between the Republicans of the old regime and the new resulted in the re-election of the former speaker, Hon. William E. Barrett. Substantially the same may be said of Connecticut, where Hon. I. W. Brooks, of Torrington, has been chosen speaker.



SPEAKER LAYLIN.

It has been taken for granted of late years that there would be no serious contests in the south, but in the long peace the old strife between "up country" and "below" has broken out with renewed vigor. In Tennessee especially there was a prolonged contest in the senate. In the house the matter was soon settled; "below" triumphed in the Democratic caucus, and Hon. Ralph Davis, of Memphis, is speaker. The states in which there was no serious contest are North Carolina, Arkansas and West Virginia.

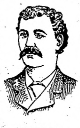
In the north the same may be said of Maine, where Hon. Albert R. Savage, of Auburn, a jurist of some eminence, has been chosen speaker; of Minnesota, Hon. W. E. Lee, of Todd, speaker, and of two or three other states where the election was so placid as to attract no attention. It is in the remote west, however—the "wild and woolly west" of romance—that legislative politics is picturesque, not to say lurid. The most remarkable spectacle, in one view of it, was presented in Washington, where the Democrats in caucus abandoned whatever claims they might have had, and "just to expedite business" voted for Mr. Arrasmith, a Populist leader, who was thereby chosen speaker at once. Their action, however, is supposed to have been in pursuance of some very deep strategy in relation to the election of a United States senator.



SPEAKER BARRETT.

Very few people pretend to understand the situation in Montana, and those few differ among themselves more vigorously and venomously than medical experts in a criminal trial. The upshot of the whole matter was, however, that after many savage threats on both sides the Democrats and Populists got the legislature and chose Hon. Thomas Matthews, Populist, as speaker. The same remark applies to Nebraska, where J. N. Gaffin, of Saunders county, Populist, is speaker, and to Wyoming, where a Mr. Tidball is speaker. He must be a very new man, as none of the correspondents seems to have thought it worth while to give his Christian name.

In the Colorado house Hon. Elias W. Ammons, Republican, is speaker. On joint ballot there are forty-eight Republicans, forty-three Populists, eight Democrats and one Independent. Kansas distinguished herself by electing two speakers.



SPEAKER LEE.

In California the Democrats captured the house and chose Hon. F. H. Gould, of Merced, for speaker. In the three remaining new states the Republicans triumphed, choosing Hon. George H. Walsh in North Dakota, Hon. J. M. Lawson in South Dakota and Hon. D. T. Miller in Idaho as speakers. In all other states things may best be described as all one way and no situation to excite anybody. While it would be idle to forecast legislation it may be said in general that three questions are unusually prominent this year—viz., road improvement, amendment of the ballot laws and reform in the management of prisons and asylums. This last is a "burning question" in several states, and as to roads—well, there is really an epidemic of interest in the subject.

J. H. BEADLE.

St. Charles, Mo., during its existence has been under the dominion of three flags—namely, Spain France and the United States.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine and twenty hundredths dollars, ($589.20) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Mary E. Smith, an unmarried woman, to George T. Ladd, bearing date the tenth day of August A. D., 1885 and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota on the [illegible] day of August A. D. 1885 at [illegible]:20 o'clock p. m., in book W of mortgages, on pages 277, 278 and 279 therein, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of section twelve in township 151 of range 47, containing 160 acres more or less in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state on the 11th day of March A. D. 1893 at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Euclid Items.

From our regular corresdondent.

EUCLID, Jan. 23, 1893.

James McWaters was with us Friday.

Jay Haseltine and family have gone to Mozomaine, Wisconsin, to spend the balance of the winter.

H. C. Misner and P. Fairweather drove down to the Queen City Friday.

C. Teal Jr. returned to the lumbering camp Saturday.

Mrs. John Schantjen is very sick.

Dr. Chapin is kept on the jump these days.

Bert Wells, of Duluth, and Stewart Chapin, of Devils Lake, North Dakota, were doing business in our city Thursday.

Miss Tiena Tiedt was in Crookston Thurday.

James Albert Teal who has had the typhoid pneumonia is convalescent.

John Vasset and wife, and John Love were among the Buffington folks that were with us last week.

Owing to so many cases of scarlet fever it was thought advisable (by the school board) to close school for an indefinite length of time.

The town clerk has a supply of scarlet fever tracts that can be had, by calling at his office.

L. Cottet and George Nelson are contemplating a trip to the Rosseau Lake country.

L. A. Dunning of Emarado, N. D., has rented the w½ of section 34-153-47 of Robert Casmey.

Miss Emma Brink and Henry Kirsch, of the Keystone farm were in Crookston Thursday.

J. R. Regan has returned to his home in Rudsville, Wis., during the closing of school.

John Gelstof came up from the lumbering camp after a team of Pete Johnson's and returned Friday.

Mrs. Davis of Crookston is visiting in the family of Tom Brown.

Mrs. Bullan is convalescent.

Andy Deffenbaugh is soon to receive his commission as postmaster at the Keystone spur on the N. P.

Cliford Biever, Harry and Clair Chapin, Harold and Vesta Misner the scarlet fever patients, are all all convalescent.

Subscriptions taken at the post-office for the POLL COUNTY JOURNAL.

The following new cases of scarlet fever have developed, Carl Misner, Willie Murney, Ester Shults and Johnie Ergyle. They are all doing nicely.

S. S. Simpson will erect a neat two story house on section twenty-four to take the place of the one that burned last fall.

The Buffington postoffice has been discontinued; patrons of that office will now receive their mail at Euclid.

Mr. and Mrs. Murney celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage, Tuesday evening. Many were detained from attending by reason of scarlet fever and more by the blizzard. However quite a company gathered, and proceeded to have a right jolly good time, and it is perhaps needless to say, that they had it. Mr. and Mrs. Murney have passed the tenth year of their married life here at Euclid and judging from the number of friends present, and the fine presents received we should say they had gained the esteem and good will of all who know them.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

The smiling face of Mikke Homme is again seen on our streets again. Having sold his restaurant in Thief River Falls and returned to McIntosh for good. They can't stay away from us very long.

Our enterprising little Editor Lanman, has grown an inch and a half since he got the county printing, and his heart has expanded to its fullest extent, for he set up a box of Havannas some time ago. We of course don't know whether it was on the Co. printing, or on a prospective life partner.

The new school house is nearly completed, and it is one that McIntosh can be proud of. The inside decorations are now going on, and the furniture is ordered and everything will be in complete shape for the next term of school, which will commence the first Monday in February.

J. P. Johnson and O. E. Stovem, left for an extended trip to St. Paul, Chicago and Duluth, last Saturday.

Diphtheria is raging through this vicinity, and five deaths have already been reported.

Quite a little money exchanged hands betting on the Hagen-Breen skating contest, and as usual the Hagen backers were the lucky ones.

The alarm of fire was given last Monday evening and the fire department showed their promptness in respondering to the call, but as the fire was not serious, being only the burning of a chimney, the roll was called and the department dismissed.

The McIntosh Lodge K. of H. have rented the city hall from Brother Rice, and has it fixed up in grand style. This Lodge was organized here last fall and has a large number of members. In the near future we expect to have one of the strongest lodge of the kind in the northwest, as all the members take great interest in it, and are doing their best to make it a success.

Andrew Stovern returned from St. Anscar Iowa, last Thursday and it looks as if a more southern climate suits him better, for he has gained eleven pounds on his trip.

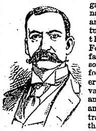
County division is the battle cry of of eastern Polk county now a days and according to appearances it looks as if there would be a split at last. It would be better for the Western part of Polk county to get rid of the Thirteen Towns for it is always the turning point in all political issues. They can never gain their end as long as they have them along, so they might just as well get rid of them now as later.

The county division rustlers are already having the stones for the foundation of the new court house hauled. It's nothing like having everything in readiness you see.

ABOUT THE SPEAKER.

VAST AND INCREASING POWER OF THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE.

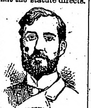
Even the Speaker in a State Legislature Is a Man of Consequence, and Here Are Sketches of Some of Them—Many Spirited Contests This Year.



SPEAKER FLYNN.

Four thousand lawmakers are now at work (or struggling desperately to "organize") in the national congress and the legislatures of some thirty states. Four thousand fallible men of all sorts of minds—for there has never been a greater variety of parties and factions—and all kinds of training, from that of sailor before the mast to that of timekeeper on a race track, are now laboring to regulate the conduct of some 65,000,000 people in all the complicated concerns of business, domestic and fiduciary relations, morals and finance.

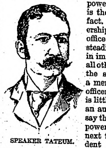
And it goes without saying that they will make at least 4,000 serious mistakes, not to mention minor errors, and that in the end the country will go on very much as before, for the reason that the great mass of mankind live on a moral basis above the law and try to do right without asking what the statute directs.



SPEAKER THOMPSON.

An expert has calculated on the basis of several years' experience that these 4,000 lawmakers will introduce about 40,000 bills, acts and joint resolutions; that of these about 8,000 will be passed; that of these not more than 400 will make any real change in substantive law, of which 400 one-half will fall dead at the start, two-fifths will soon be repealed or modified, one-half the remainder will soon become inoperative by reason of changed conditions, and the remaining twenty will have a permanent effect on the policy of the country.

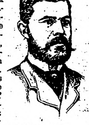
"It comes high, but we must have it." The first duty of all these legislators is to "organize," and in at least five states they seem to be getting themselves into organic form with more than the usual throes of political parturition. The most important officer, of course, is the speaker of the house, for in every constitution derived from that of Great Britain the lower house, or "popular branch," is the money power, and the speaker appoints the committees. Of course he is supposed to do it "by advice," but by whose advice is a question not yet settled.



SPEAKER TATEUM.

Though there have been fifty-two congresses under the constitution there have been but thirty-two speakers, which is explained by the fact that such men as Macon, Clay, Colfax and others held the office at will when their party was in power. And here is the significant fact. The speakership is the only office which has steadily gained in importance on all others. At first the speaker was a mere presiding officer. Now he is little less than an autocrat. To say that in actual power he stands next to the president is a very mild statement. The vice president is not in it for comparison. In the last twenty years the speaker has more than once prevented legislation which a large majority of the house wanted.

In the state legislature the speaker is not quite so autocratic, but owing to an unusual combination of circumstances this year has witnessed several extraordinary struggles for the place. Many entirely new men have come in; many of the old ones are very picturesque figures, and for the first time the legislative gavel is wielded by a man born since the siege of Sumter! It is truly a historic period.

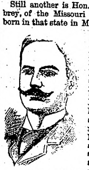


SPEAKER CRAFTS.

New Jersey's peculiar position brings to her this year many embarrassing questions, the contention between New York and Pennsylvania and their interests in the state taking truly protean forms, and her legislature has begun by electing Hon. Thomas Flynn as speaker. So he is styled, of course, in the official register, but he is familiarly known as "Tom Flynn, of the Gloucester race track," for Mr. Flynn was long known as the able and affable "starter" on that famous course.

The Pennsylvania house of representatives re-elected the former speaker, Caleb C. Thompson, of Warren, a Republican, of course. Delaware almost as quietly elected J. Harvey Whiteman, of Wilmington, but he attracts attention as the youngest, save one, of all the new speakers. He is but thirty years old.

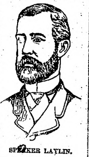
Youngest of all the new speakers is Hon. William Sulzer, of the New York house. He is but twenty-nine years old, a native and representative of New York city, and has his history yet to make. Another promising young speaker is William Aldrich Tateum, of the Michigan house. He is thirty-two, a native of Massachusetts, was educated at Yale, lived ten years in Chicago and represents Kent county, being the first speaker Grand Rapids has furnished. His political strength was shown by his election as a Republican in a Democratic district.



SPEAKER CURTIS.

Still another is Hon. Thomas W. Mabrey, of the Missouri house, who was born in that state in March, 1862, and is now on his third term in the house. He owns and edits The Prospect-News, of Doniphan, Mo. Hon. Robert N. Chamberlin, of the New Hampshire house, is thirty-six years old, a native of Franklin county, N. Y., and a lawyer. Not so young, but still a comparatively new man, is Hon. Clayton Edward Crafts, of Chicago, speaker of the Thirty-eighth general assembly of Illinois. He was born in Auburn, O., in 1848, was educated at Cleveland and located at Chicago as a lawyer in 1870. He has represented the Seventh assembly district for several years and was speaker of the last house.

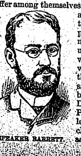
The fifty-eighth session of Indiana's house of representatives is presided over by a veteran—Captain James B. Curtis—joint representative of Marion and Shelby, and a Democrat, of course. In Ohio there was a sharp contest between the two wings of the Republican party, and the speakership went to Hon. Lewis C. Laylin, of Huron, who has been a member for four years, but this is his first term as speaker. In Massachusetts a still more spirited contest between the Republicans of the old regime and the new resulted in the re-election of the former speaker, Hon. William E. Barrett. Substantially the same may be said of Connecticut, where Hon. I. W. Brooks, of Torrington, has been chosen speaker.



SPEAKER LAYLIN.

It has been taken for granted of late years that there would be no serious contests in the south, but in the long peace the old strife between "up country" and "below" has broken out with renewed vigor. In Tennessee especially there was a prolonged contest in the senate. In the house the matter was soon settled; "below" triumphed in the Democratic caucus, and Hon. Ralph Davis, of Memphis, is speaker. The states in which there was no serious contest are North Carolina, Arkansas and West Virginia.

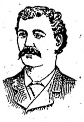
In the north the same may be said of Maine, where Hon. Albert R. Savage, of Auburn, a jurist of some eminence, has been chosen speaker; of Minnesota, Hon. W. E. Lee, of Todd, speaker, and of two or three other states where the election was so placid as to attract no attention. It is in the remote west, however—the "wild and woolly west" of romance—that legislative politics is picturesque, not to say lurid. The most remarkable spectacle, in one view of it, was presented in Washington, where the Democrats in caucus abandoned whatever claims they might have had, and "just to expedite business" voted for Mr. Arrasmith, a Populist leader, who was thereby chosen speaker at once. Their action, however, is supposed to have been in pursuance of some very deep strategy in relation to the election of a United States senator.



SPEAKER BARRETT.

Very few people pretend to understand the situation in Montana, and those few differ among themselves more vigorously and venomously than medical experts in a criminal trial. The upshot of the whole matter was, however, that after many savage threats on both sides the Democrats and Populists got the legislature and chose Hon. Thomas Matthews, Populist, as speaker. The same remark applies to Nebraska, where J. N. Gaffin, of Saunders county, Populist, is speaker, and to Wyoming, where a Mr. Tidball is speaker. He must be a very new man, as none of the correspondents seems to have thought it worth while to give his Christian name.

In the Colorado house Hon. Elias W. Ammons, Republican, is speaker. On joint ballot there are forty-eight Republicans, forty-three Populists, eight Democrats and one Independent. Kansas distinguished herself by electing two speakers.



SPEAKER LEE.

In California the Democrats captured the house and chose Hon. F. H. Gould, of Merced, for speaker. In the three remaining new states the Republicans triumphed, choosing Hon. George H. Walsh in North Dakota, Hon. J. M. Lawson in South Dakota and Hon. D. T. Miller in Idaho as speakers. In all other states things may best be described as all one way and no situation to excite anybody. While it would be idle to forecast legislation it may be said in general that three questions are unusually prominent this year—viz., road improvement, amendment of the ballot laws and reform in the management of prisons and asylums. This last is a "burning question" in several states, and as to roads—well, there is really an epidemic of interest in the subject.

J. H. BEADLE.

St. Charles, Mo., during its existence has been under the dominion of three flags—namely, Spain France and the United States.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine and twenty hundredths dollars, ($589.20) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Mary E. INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE
DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE GOLDEN CAVES.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS. "M. QUAD."

COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, 1892

"I shall insist upon that, even if we have to leave the camp alone," added Bess.

"It shall be so," replied the captain. "We shall know all in the morning."

Bess retreated to the wagon, rent with conflicting emotions and prostrated by grief and doubt, and the men went about their duties without a word to each other. All felt that there was something wrong about Taylor's story, but all hesitated to believe him guilty of the heinous crime of taking the life of a comrade.

Night came down.

Taylor had hidden his face under his blanket, but he had not closed his eyes in sleep. He was not tortured by remorse. On the contrary, he was elated over the thought that he now alone possessed the secret of the cave of gold. But he was troubled that he had not told a better story. Before firing the shot he had planned just how he would act and what he would say. The fear which guilt always brings had upset him and caused him to halt and hesitate and tell a very lame story.

Many a man who has planned a crime has thought it all over and prepared himself at every point only to realize after its commission that he left loopholes in his armor of defense.

It was long after dark before Taylor rose up. He had then settled on a story from which he would not vary. He told it to the men, and he told it with such apparent sincerity that some of them believed him, while none disputed. Bess had come forward to hear it, as was her right. When he had finished there was a long, painful silence, broken at last by the girl, who said:

"If this story be true you have done only what another might do so situated. We shall know tomorrow. You can find the place again, and you will lead us there."

"I—I was dreadfully turned around and I might not be able to find the exact spot," replied Taylor.

"You must!" answered Bess. "My father's bones must not lie unburied! His death shall not go unavenged!"

"Well, I'll try, and if we all lose our scalps in the effort I cannot be held responsible. I'm sure there's an Indian camp not far from that spot, and it's a wonder to me we haven't been attacked since I came in. There were as many as seven right after me for two or three miles."

The men, and especially Joe, had looked to see the girl break down under the strain, but she did not. She fought against it and clung to the hope that her father still lived, though he might be wounded and a prisoner.

Midnight came and all was quiet.

Joe went on guard at that hour, and an hour later, as all his senses were keenly alert, he heard a whistle. No Indian would make use of such a signal. There were no white men in the neighborhood. Was it the note of some bird of night?

There it came again—a whistle of inquiry—as if some one was seeking to locate the camp. Believing it to be some prospector or hunter who had lost himself during the day, Joe answered the signal.

It came again and nearer.

Now he heard footsteps and a moment later a man and a woman approached him from out of the darkness.

"Halt! Who is it?" challenged the sentinel.

"Harkins!" was the reply.

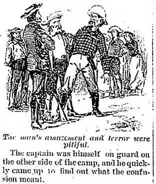
"Great heavens!" whispered Joe as the pair came to a halt before him. "But this does beat me. And that is you, Harkins, and alive!"

"Yes, it is Harkins, and here is a poor girl I rescued from a camp of white renegades up the valley. I've got lots to tell. Has Taylor come in?"

"Yes, and he reported you killed by the Indians."

"He sought my life himself, but be quiet. If he is asleep do not arouse him. Wake the captain, and after we have cared for this woman I have a story to tell."

CHAPTER XVI.



The man's amazement and terror were pitiful.

The captain was himself on guard on the other side of the camp, and he quickly came up to find out what the confusion meant.

"This girl is suffering for food and rest," said Harkins, "and must be attended to first. Then you shall have the story."

He quietly awoke Bess, made a brief explanation, and after Lizzie had been provided with food the two girls sought the wagon and Harkins sat down with the captain and Joe to tell his story. While certain in his own mind that Taylor had fired upon him, there was no proof. Neither of his listeners doubted that assassination had been intended, but unless Taylor broke down and confessed it what could they do? Moral certainty is not proof.

"And what makes the thing more strange to me is the fact that he must have had a strong motive," said the captain.

"And we can't guess it," added Joe.

Then Harkins told them of the deathbed revelation of the old hunter, and the motive was plain. Taylor was determined to possess the secret alone. He told them of the renegades and their errand—of the girl he had rescued and what had happened to her, and of the emissary who might be expected to appear in camp next forenoon. It was daybreak before they were through talking, and yet only the two men and Bess knew of the arrivals.

"The first thing is to dispose of Taylor," said the captain in response to an inquiry of what should be done. "The men will soon be astir, and Harkins had best lie low for a couple of hours. As soon as breakfast is over I shall ask Taylor to head a party to the place he described. Let us see what he will do."

Harkins sought one of the wagons, and when the men roused up, one after another, not one had a suspicion that anything unusual had occurred during the night. Breakfast was prepared and eaten, and the captain and Joe, who were watching Taylor very closely, saw by his demeanor that he was restless and ill at ease. He seemed to have lost his appetite, and he glanced around him as if expecting some sudden danger.

Bessie came from the wagon equipped as for an expedition, and, walking up to Taylor, she said:

"I am ready. We are to find and recover my father's body today."

"Yes, I will send two men with you," added the captain.

"I—I can't go—not this morning!" stammered Taylor. "I'm sick. I'm almost too sick to sit up."

"Do you still say that the Indians shot my father down?" demanded Bess.

"Do I? Of course I do! You all seem to be agin me. Do you think I killed him myself?"

"How many Indians did you count?"

"All of ten."

"How did they attack you?"

"Fired a volley at us and then began to yell."

"You are sure they yelled?"

"Sure! They kept it up half an hour."

"It was odd that I heard no other sound but the single report of your rifle!" said a voice behind Taylor, and he wheeled about to find Harkins confronting him.

The man's amazement and terror were pitiful. He essayed to speak, but the words would not come. He looked helplessly from side to side and trembled as with a chill.

"It is not the dead come back," said Harkins, "but the living. Your bullet only grazed my arm. I fell into a gulch just as you fired upon me. There were no Indians there!"

Taylor looked from man to man. Each face was hard set and vengeful.

"You are all agin me!" he finally shouted. "You've got mad at me and want to drive me away! Why should I want to take Harkins' life?"

"But you fired upon me, and here is the empty shell to prove it," said Harkins.

"If—I did, then I was scared of—of the Indians," stammered Taylor.

"You know the law of the plains!" said the captain to Taylor in a flinty voice. "The man who murders a comrade must die himself!"

"I—I didn't murder him!"

"No, you did not, but the man who attempts murder must be punished. You must go! In one hour you must be out of camp, and should you return you will be fired upon!"

To turn a man out in that locality was giving him up to a hundred perils, if not to certain death, but Taylor eagerly caught at the opportunity.

"I'll willingly go," he replied. "Indeed I don't want to stay. You are all agin me and I couldn't be easy here. I can take all my traps, I reckon?"

"Certainly."

Taylor had a horse, blankets, spare ammunition, spade and pick and cooking utensils. These articles were packed up and strapped to his horse and he was given food enough to last him a week. His "truck" had been stored in the rear end of a wagon owned by another, and his going simply decreased the strength of the party one man. As he was ready to ride away the captain kindly said:

"It's hard lines, Taylor, but it's the law we all live by. Harkins had the right to shoot you the minute he entered the camp."

"Yes, I reckon he had, though he made a big mistake in accusing me."

"I hope you'll keep clear of Indians and meet with good luck."

"And I!"

"And I!"

"And I!"

Even Harkins echoed the sentiment, and with a wave of his hand Taylor was off. He rode straight up the valley, and as he went he smiled grimly and chuckled to himself:

"It's your turn this morning. Tomorrow it may be mine. Yesterday I thought I had to kill but one. Today I'm planning to wipe out the whole pack. Not one of you shall leave this valley alive!"

Half a mile to the east a bend in the valley hid him from view. He rode on for about a mile, and then discovering a small valley leading off at right angles he entered it, followed it up for forty rods and then dismounted and prepared to camp.

"As for Indians," he mused, as he looked about him, "I don't think there are any left in the hills. They have all gone forward to fight off the rush, and before summer is over the rush will have carried every redskin out of the locality."

He threw the spade and pick aside in disgust as he unpacked and growled:

"I shan't want ye—leastwise for digging out gold—I'll get it easier. Five miles the other side of camp is the ravine, and up that ravine is the cave of gold. I'll have my hands on the stuff before tomorrow night if it is there, and then let the wagon train look out! It's death to all!"

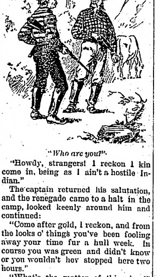
Meanwhile the camp had a visitor.

CHAPTER XVII.

From the same direction taken by Taylor, but evidently coming out of a narrow valley bearing off to the left, appeared a white man with a gun on his shoulder. He was in view when half a mile from camp, and long before he reached it all the men were watching his approach.

He was one of the four renegades, and this was the visit Harkins had heard them plotting to make. The captain, Harkins and Joe knew this, but none of the others knew that the girl Lizzie was in camp, she having kept herself secreted in the wagon.

The man continued to advance at a leisurely pace, and by and by he was near enough to the group to call out:



"Who are you?"

"Howdy, strangers! I reckon I kin come in, being as I ain't a hostile Indian."

The captain returned his salutation, and the renegade came to a halt in the camp, looked keenly around him and continued:

"Come after gold, I reckon, and from the looks o' things you've been fooling away your time fur a hull week. In course you was green and didn't know or you wouldn't hev stopped here two hours."

"What's the matter of this place?" queried the captain.

"Nuthin, so fur's grass and water goes, but if you want gold you must go whar it is. Leastwise, the rest of us hev had to."

"And where is that?"

"A matter of twelve miles up the valley. Thar's plenty up thar to be had fur the digging, and only a small party has got onto it yet. Never saw such richness afore. I believe ye kin almost load one o' them wagons in a month."

There were murmurs of admiration and exclamations of astonishment from the men.

"I belong to the party up thar," continued the stranger, "but I don't go much on digging out the stuff. Rather be moving around, you know. I kin guarantee that the boys will welcome ye if ye want to come. Thar's enough fur all."

"It is very generous indeed of you," replied the captain. "We came for gold, and of course we must take advantage of your offer."

"Aye! that we must," shouted the men.

"What brought me out this morning, at least this way," observed the man as he carefully noted everything in camp, "was a calamity. One of the boys up thar brought his gal out with him. The Injuns got arter us and skeart her clean crazy. Since that time she's bin tryin to run away, imagining that the reds were arter her scalp. She got off last night and might hev cum this way."

"That's awful!" sighed Harkins. "I've got a gal of my own down in the wagon there, and I'd rather see her dead than crazy."

"The wolves would be likely to pull her down last night," mused Joe. "Two or three big fellows were around camp just before daylight."

"So ye've got a gal o' your own?" queried the man of Harkins in tones which betrayed doubt.

"Oh, Bess!" called the latter in reply, and the girl put her head out of the wagon and asked what was wanted.

"Waal, I'll hev to look further," said the renegade as he turned away. "Poor gal! How I pity her! And when will ye be ready to move up the valley to the gold fields?"

"Today perhaps," answered the captain.

"Better not lose any time, as thar will be a rush in yere from all directions. So long to ye."

When he had cleared the camp Harkins told his story and the man's object was made plain. Harkins did not keep back the secret of the cave, but told it just as he had received it and suggested that in case the contents could be found there should be an equal division.

"They want us to move up the valley in order to let them out," explained the captain. "Therefore our plan will be to remain where we are until we know what there is in the story. They haven't found the cave yet and there is a chance of our coming in first. We shall certainly do some looking for it. We'll let that chap get well out of sight and then go on a still hunt."

Two hours later the captain, Harkins and a man named Andrews set out in company under the guidance of the second to seek the canyon and the cave. While they are searching let us see what befell Taylor, who had made a temporary camp in the small valley.

When he came to think it over he condemned himself for having acted so rashly. He was now alone and outlawed. Should he succeed in finding the gold how was he to bring it away? He was and would be in constant danger from the Indians, and if given a team and the gold loaded up for him there was not one chance in a hundred of his driving safely back to civilization. While he coveted all he realized that he must be content with a share in order to get any at all.

"If I should go back and tell 'em of the cave it would make 'em feel all right," he soliloquized as he looked up at the rugged sides of the valley.

"Fool! fool!" he exclaimed after a moment; "hasn't Harkins already told them of it as the reason why I sought his life? All know it and all will divide and leave me out in the cold! I'm the biggest fool on earth!"

"I quite agree with ye!" said a voice not five feet away, and Taylor sprang up to find the renegade who had visited the camp below standing almost over him.

"Saw yer hosses' tracks leadin in yere, ye know," said the renegade in explanation. "Rather curus to find a white man prowling around alone in this kentry. Yer scalp must be nailed on or ye wouldn't chance it this way."

"Who are you?" asked Taylor as soon as he had recovered from his surprise.

"The same question to ye, and what is it about a cave of gold and dividing up?"

Here was help. If the man belonged to a party the gold might yet be secured. He was a hard looking customer—one who would not scruple at anything.

"Sit down," said Taylor as he made himself comfortable. "I came here with a party camped two or three miles below. They came to prospect for gold, but I came to look for a cave already filled with it. They sort o' suspected me, and because I wouldn't divide they drove me out of camp this morning."

"Whar did ye hear of that cave?"

"From an old hunter named Saunders."

"Who used to chum with a pard named Bridgers?"

"Exactly."

"Waal, I'm yere fur the same purpose. What I got was secondhand from old Bridgers, but it looks straight 'nuff. There's four of us in the party and we've got ridin horses and a team."

"That's the checker!" exclaimed Taylor as he brought his fist down on the grass. "I want to join you."

"And ye know just whar that cave is?"

"I believe I can walk to it in the night."

"Suppose we should hev a row with the people camped below?"

"I'll do my share of shooting. There's two or three of 'em who will get a bullet the first time I have a chance to cover 'em."

"Come on. I guess the boys will take ye in under the sarcumstances. Haven't seen nuthin of a gal wanderin around yere, I suppose?"

"No."

"Waal, saddle up."

An hour later Taylor was in the camp of the outlaws. When the men learned that he had been driven out of the camp below and that he had received minute particulars regarding the locality of the cave of gold they extended him a warm welcome.

"Whar do ye make it out to be?" asked Bob, the leader.

"Five miles the other side of the wagon train."

"No!"

"That's what the hunter said—five miles to the left of the peak."

"And this isn't the canyon?"

"It can't be. It's below that camp. I'll stake my life on it."

"Then, dog-gone it, we've bin wrong all the time. We located this as the place. If it's below the camp then we don't keer a button whether they move or not, though they'll likely be going up the valley today. We'd better hitch up and be going."

Native Wit in a Street Gamin.

Wit in the New York "young fellow," if sometimes brutal, is usually ready and often imaginative. An unmistakable oriental, in turban, baggy trousers, gay stockings and tinseled coat, sat on a bench in Madison square the other day, an object of interest to all the boys, and apparently not displeased at the attention he attracted. There came along presently, however, two rough looking young men, and one of them, pausing in front of the stranger, looked at him in undisguised astonishment. His first surprise over, he called back his fellow, who had passed on, and said, pointing to the oriental, "Jimmy, git on to this." The eastern stranger's splendor seemed to call up some strange picture in the rearward of Jimmy's imagination, for his instant answer was, "Oh, Cinderella: pull his fringes."—New York Sun.

Fogg's Alarm Clock.

Fogg staid up very late yesterday morning, or very early, if you like that expression better—at any rate it was nearly 4 o'clock before he had roughly footed up the amount he would have to pay in hats and cigars and wine and oyster suppers and climbed into bed. He was to arise in good season, and set the alarm clock to ring "for all it was worth" at 7 o'clock. It rang with a vengeance, and fearful that it would awaken the whole household he reached up, smothered the bell with his hand and took the clock down into the bed to hold it until it would stop ringing. When he awoke again the bell had stopped ringing and he was still hugging the clock, which truthfully asserted that it was after 9.—Hartford Post.

Philosophy from a Child.

Two of the Virginians who have come to the Pasteur institute to be vaccinated against hydrophobia were in grave consultation. "I am sorry you told the doctor that he must not hurt you," said the elder, aged twelve. "I am sure you would rather suffer than die."

"No," replied the other, aged six, "I would rather die and be born again and not be bitten by a dog."

Savants have tortured their brains for centuries and not found truer philosophy, and the innocent say things that make the experienced turn pale.—New York Times.

A Grateful Old Woman.

A dean was visiting his parishioners when one of them, an old woman, informed him that since they met "she'd gone through a sight o' trouble. Her sister was dead, and there wor a worse job than that; the pig died all of a sudden, but it pleased the Lord to tak' him, and they mun bow, they mun bow." Then the poor old lady brightened up and said, "But there's one thing, Mester Allen, as I can say, and ought to say—the Lord's been pretty well on my side this winter for greens!"—Exchange.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE

RESULTS FROM A COLLISION AT WANN STATION, ILLS.

A Passenger Crashes Into an Oil Train and an Explosion Follows. Fifteen Persons Dead and Over Sixty Injured, a Number Fatally.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 22.—A wreck which in its consequences is one of the most appalling and disastrous that has occurred in years, happened at Wann Junction or Alton Junction, Ills., Saturday. The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis "Southwestern Limited" passenger crashed into a train consisting of seven tank cars standing thereon. The result was a fire and afterwards an explosion, which cost fifteen persons their lives and probably fatally injured many others, while fully fifty more are suffering from painful burns. The property loss to the company is about $150,000. The dead are:

HIRAM CORNELIUS, Iowa.
E[illegible] [illegible]on Junction.
Two unidentified men.
WILLIAM SHUTTUCK, Upper Alton.
HENRY PENNING, Wann.
WELLIS MCCARTY, Alton.
JOHN LOCKE, Alton.
EDWARD MAURIN, Alton.
DANIEL HAYES, Alton Junction.
CHARLES UTT, Alton.
WILLIAM MANTHE, Fosterburg, Ills.
WILLIAM S. MILLER, Alton.
CHARLES HARRIS, Alton.
JOHN WILLIMASON, Alton.
GEORGE ROLOFF, Upper Alton, Ills.
J. M. MURRAY, Alton.
CHARLES HALLER, Alton Junction.

Of the injured, fourteen, the hospital physicians say, cannot recover.

TWENTY-TWO DEAD.

List of Victims by the Wann Disaster Growing Rapidly.

ALTON, Ills., Jan. 24.—Six more deaths are announced as a result of the explosion at Wann station, as follows:

ASSESSOR J. N. MURRAY, of Upper Alton.
CHARLES HALTER, of Alton Junction.
T[illegible] [illegible]t St. Louis.
HENRY WEIGANT, of Wann.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, of Alton.

The total is now twenty-seven and it is quite certain that before the end of the week the necrological roll will include at least thirty names. The physicians say that all of those seriously burned will probably die.

JUMPED THE TRACK.

Three Deaths [illegible] From a Big Four Wreck

TERRE HAUTE, [illegible], Jan. 23.—The fast passenger train on the Big Four road, known as the No. 18, the Southwestern limited due here at 12:50 p. m., jumped the track between St. Louis and Terre Haute about 9 o'clock a. m. The accident occurred near Litchfield. The reports that have reached here are that the engineer, fireman and baggageman were killed, and that a number of passengers were injured. The train left the track and went into the ditch.

A NEW TRIAL.

Sentence of Dan Coughlin Reversed by the Illinois Supreme Court.

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—The supreme court has reversed the sentence of Daniel Coughlin, convicted of participation in the murder of Dr. Cronin. Coughlin has been brought back to Chicago and placed in his old cell in the Cook county jail. It is not believed here that he can be again convicted, important witnesses having died.

THE SEVENTEENTH.

Frank Woodruff, of Cronin Murder Fame, Dies in the Penitentiary.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—It is just learned that James Frank Black alias Frank Woodruff, who was arrested on suspicion of being connected with the murder of Dr. Cronin, died at the Lansing penitentiary Oct. 10. Black makes the seventeenth participant in the crime or witness at the trial who have since died.

A NEBRASKA FAILURE.

The Capitol National Bank at Lincoln Collapses.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 23.—The startling announcement of the failure of the Capitol National bank was made public shortly after 11 o'clock p. m., and with it came the statement that the state treasurer was caught in the crash in the sum of $250,000. The appearance of National Bank Examiner J. M. Griffith, who came in on the evening train, was responsible for the closing of the bank, which came in a few hours after that official began his investigation of the books and papers of the institution. It is stated that the failure is a bad one, but the exact situation cannot be ascertained. The deposits amount to about $625,000, and of this sum between $150,000 and $250,000 are state funds, for which the bond of the treasurer will be liable. The capital stock is $350,000, all paid up. Cashier R. C. Oucalt stated that the assets would protect the depositors, but there is great doubt expressed as to the correctness of this statement.

HOPE FOR DEPOSITORS.

Bradstreet's Agency Thinks Lincoln Bank Depositors Will be Paid.

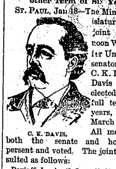
OMAHA, Jan. 24.—Bradstreet's Agency at this place has given notice to Omaha banks that the Capital National bank of Lincoln will probably be able to pay depositors in full. In order to do this its stockholders will be obliged to pay from 25 to 50 per cent. of the claims of depositors.

Without Result.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 23.—The ballot for United States senator was without result. There were a number of pairs but there was no change in the relative strength of the candidates.

MINNESOTA SENATOR.

C. K. Davis Was Re-Elected for Another Term of Six Years.



C. K. DAVIS.

ST. PAUL, Jan 18.—The Minnesota legislature took a joint ballot at noon Wednesday, for United States senator to succeed C. K. Davis. Mr. Davis was re-elected for the full term of six years, beginning March 4, next. All members of both the senate and house were persent and voted. The joint ballot resulted as follows:

Davis 85, Lawler 49, Owen 23, Clapp 3, Schaeffer 2, Start 1, Lind 2, Merriam 2, Dickinson 1.

No Choice in Nebraska.

LINCOLN, Jan 23.—The two houses of the legislature met in joint conference at noon and took the joint ballot for United States senator and adjourned. The ballot was as follows: Powers 41, Paddock 26, Thurston 5, Majors 5, Keighan 4, Boyd 3. The remaining eleven votes were divided among nine other candidates—Democrats and Republicans.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Jan. 17.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The anti-option bill, which has monopolized almost the whole of the time of the senate during the present session, was debated for nearly three hours.

The McGarrahan bill received its death blow in the senate, the affirmative vote falling eight short of the constitutional majority. A bill to repeal the silver bullion purchase provisions of the Sherman bill was reported from the committee on finance and went to the calendar.

In the house work was mapped out for the remainder of the week and for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, but beyond this little was done.

Wednesday, Jan. 18.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The senate adjourned immediately after the formal announcement by Senator Sherman of the death of ex-President Hayes.

The session of the house was a short one. The bill establishing a court of appeals for the District of Columbia was passed, and then, after the delivery of eulogies upon the late Rutherford B. Hayes, the house, as a mark of respect to the memory of the ex-president, adjourned.

Thursday, Jan. 19.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The greater part of the day in the house was consumed in filibustering. Mr. Kilgore, of Texas, prevented action on the bill for the erection of a monument to the prison ship martyrs, and on the measure for the construction of a revenue cutter for the Pacific coast; but, without opposition, a bill was passed to meet the requirements of the interstate commerce law relative to the testimony of witnesses. A bill amending the interstate commerce commission act was called up and passed, but its provision striking out the pooling section of the original measure was eliminated. A bill for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at New Orleans passed, but the opponents of the quarantine bill succeeded in staving it off until Saturday.

The discussion of the anti-option bill was continued in the senate, but without action.

Friday, Jan. 20.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The credentials of Mr. Gray for his second senatorial term from Delaware were presented and placed on file. After adopting appropriate resolutions the senate adjourned out of respect to the memory of ex-President Hayes.

In the house the general deficiency appropriation was reported and placed on the calendar. A motion to adjourn out of respect for the memory of ex-President Hayes was adopted and the house adjourned.

Saturday, Jan. 21.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The house considered the quarantine bill. Mr. Cockran offered an amendment providing that nothing in the act shall be construed to authorize any federal officer to relax, modify or suspend any rule, precaution or regulation adopted by state or municipal authority for the exclusion of disease; or to permit the entrance or discharge of any vessel where quarantine regulations have been established by such authority until the vessel shall have complied with the resolutions. Agreed to. The house passed the senate bill for the abolition of post traderships.

In the senate Wolcott, of Colorado, attacked the Columbian postage stamp on a resolution to have them discontinued. As a chest protector they might do, but not as a postage stamp. The resolution was referred. The discussion of the anti-option bill was continued.

Monday, Jan. 23.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—The house passed its quarantine bill after considerable discussion. It is not the same measure passed by the senate, but a substitute, and will have to be acted upon by the senate before it becomes a law. The New York and New Jersey bridge bill was then taken up.

In the senate Mr. Chandler spoke on the anti-option bill. At the close of his speech it was agreed by unanimous consent that a vote on the bill should be taken at 2 o'clock on Tuesday next.

There's a Big Difference

BETWEEN

WHAT YOU MAY LOOK LIKE, WHAT YOU OUGHT TO LOOK LIKE,

when you make your appearance in a new suit. You ought to look as though you hadn't made your purchase with your eyes shut. The suit ought to look as though you had bought it with your eyes wide open. If it doesn't, even the old may be better than the new. You'd better part with neither your old suit nor your money, it all you succeed in getting is something that looks as if the wrong wearer had got into it. How are you going to avoid this experience? It's simple enough. We'll do it for you with our elegant line of Since taking possession of the Commercial, Landlord Stoeser has been improving and remodeling the house until its familiar appearance is no more. Electric light has been put in and the walls have been nicely papered. The gentlemen's toilet room has been put in the basement, a cozy little room has been made back of the office where the guests can gather in the evenings to tell stories or play cards, a reading room has been made in the front of the old dining room, and the dining room has been extended into the old kitchen. A splendid new kitchen was put up on the north side of the old one, and is fitted up with all the modern conveniences in that line. A bar is to be added to the hotel for the accommodation of the guests. Mr. Stoeser has rented the old Chronicle building from C. H. Saake and will use it for sample rooms. The Commercial is enjoying a good business, and its guests are being taken care of in good shape.

WOMEN AT ENGLISH RACES.

They Are Nearly Always Wealthy and Attend Because They Love Sport.

The women one sees at the races here are the women of the fashionable world, beautifully attired, escorted by gallants. They move about on the lawn, or preside at their luncheon tables under the trees or over their hampers in their carriages; they chat and promenade, take a light interest in the races, walk about the paddock and look at the horses, do the honors in a box or rest in their seats at the grand stand; but one doesn't see them hauling out money to put on a horse or chasing around to find out "what's good in this race." One doesn't see them consulting the tips in the morning papers, or Jack's tips, or anybody's tips, or in any way showing that they are afflicted with a severe attack of gambling fever.

The English women are the most charming feature of the English races. They, with their lovely toilets and holiday airs, give it the garden party flavor that helps to keep it a sport instead of a business.

But it's not in nature for them to always look on and never participate.

English women have a finger in the racing pie also. You'd hardly suspect it to watch them at the races, but they do. They are usually women who go racing for the love of the sport and who know more or less about the horses. When they want to bet they ask a commissioner, some gentleman who is betting for himself, or else some one they can tip for the trouble, to put a certain amount on a horse for them. No money passes on the course. The "settling" is all done away from there, and usually by letter and checks.

Women who bet heavily and continually—and there are such—transact their business directly with a bookmaker, just like a man. But this again isn't evident on the course. When such a woman fancies a horse she sends a telegram from her home the morning of the day he runs, making her bet, or she wires her bet—or "order"—from the course before the race. Usually, too, she's the sort of a woman who can retail the latest fashionable gossip in piquant style, while her equine "fancy" is adding to or subtracting from her bank account.

There are a great many English women who bet in this way, and who now and then stand to win tidy sums in the early books on big races. Then there's a lot of playful impromptu betting at places like Epsom and Ascot. I've seen ladies lean over the front of the boxes at Epsom and hand the shouting bookies who stand in line in front of them sovereigns and half sovereigns and name their horses, to give the day zest or "have it to say" that they were on a Derby or Oaks favorite.

And I've seen ladies going to and from the paddock at Ascot stop to have a look at the shouting ring, and go up to some bookie and make a bet "just to have the experience," and the bookie would be "as polite as a basket of chips," and the "experience" would be filed away with those other wonderful ones of hedged in lives, like a ride on Jumbo or a dash into the slums.—London Cor. M'p'l's. Journal:—Atty. Gen. Childs has appointed Hon. Geo. B. Edgerton, now assistant United States district attorney, as his assistant to succeed Judge Ira B. Mills, who has resigned to accept an appointment as railroad commissioner, in the place of Judge Williams, Fergus Falls, whose term has expired. Judge Mills has been in the office of the attorney general only since the first of the year. For six years he was judge of the fourteenth judicial district, having been appointed to the position by Gov. McGill when the district was first created at the unanimous request of the members of the bar in that part of the state. He was repeatedly endorsed by the bar for re-election, but was defeated by a populist this year. He will be able to put his legal ability to good use as a member of the railroad commission.

Furs and Winter Styles.

With the advent of the wintry season which has been during Yuletide, the subject of "furs" becomes, as a matter of fact, of permanent importance to Modistes and their customers. Furs are in great vogue this year and fur trimmings are more used than they have ever been. They are seen in a very great variety of combinations; and since they ornament outside garments as well as walking costumes, evening and ball dresses, and moreover adorn hats and bonnets of every form, one has need of a sure guide to understand what are really the correct combinations of the season. The McDowell Fashion Journals are of invaluable service in this respect, giving with unerring good taste, and a profusion of practical illustrations and all the necessary information. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" which costs only $3.50 per year, or 35 cents a copy, each, have the finest Parisian styles, and "La Couturiere," $3.00 a year, or 30 cents per copy, gives the most practical French Fashions. Yearly subribers to either of these Journals are entitled to a premium book on "Dress-making Simplified," valued at $5.00. "La Mode," $1.50 per annum, or 15 cents a copy, is the best family journal of fashion in this country. If not procurable at your newsdealer send direct to the publishers, A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York City.

The success of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in effecting a speedy cure of colds, croup and whooping cough has brought it into great demand. Messrs. Pontius & Son, of Cameron, Ohio, say that it has gained a reputation second to none in that vicinity. Jas. M. Quern, of Johnston, W. Va., says it is the best he ever used. B. F. Jones, druggist, Winona, Minn., says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is perfectly reliable. I have always warranted it and it never failed to give the most perfect satisfaction." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

Surveyors' En Route.

Marshall County Banner:—A corps of surveyors arrived in Argyle yesterday. They are on their way to the Lake of the Woods, to complete the survey of a railroad which was begun last year.

The World's Ruler

Napoleon Bonaparte was a philosopher as well as a soldier. He said that the pit of the stomach rules the world. When you have something ail you for a great while, and cannot eat, you soon see how weak you are when the stomach goes back on you. When your appetite comes back, and you eat your first hearty meal, you feel like a prisoner liberated from his chains. Then you understand fully the value of a good digestive apparatus. However, a good deal depends on the kind of food you put into this digesting machine. If it is half cooked or ill-cooked, poor in quality, or insufficient in quantity, the stomach will rebel, and you will have a monkey and parrot sort of a time with it. And nowhere will your comfort depend more on the condition of your stomach, than when traveling. The Burlington, knowing that well-fed passengers are easily taken care of, attaches to its through limited trains, at convenient hours, dining-cars, which from the excellence of the menu and the completeness of the service, are called "peerless." For tickets and any information apply to any agent of the Burlington Route or connecting lines, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Worth makes the maid,
The want of him the gawky,
In every town from Denver to She-caw-gy.

The author of the above lines evidently does dot agree with Thomson, that "loveliness is, when unadorned, adorned the most." We shall not attempt to be an arbiter of taste in feminine fashion, but are ready to back up the man who said that the American maid (and matron) is the most attractive female individual on the round globe. In a good many cases, of course, the maids' gowns are not designed by worth, but no one dare say that the lack of the Paris man-milliner's work makes any one a gawky, in any town from Denver to Chicago. No one who has traveled to any extent on the Burlington route—on which are situated almost all the towns of any importance between Denver and Chicago (and for that matter, the towns from Minneapolis and St. Paul to Chicago and St. Louis)—can have failed to note the number of well-dressed, and handsome ladies who favor this magnificent line with their presence and patronage. "Worth (not the Parisian) makes the man; the want of it the fellow," and its sterling worth in equipment, operation, and reliability is what makes the Burlington route the peer of any and a general favorite in ten great states of the west. Any agent of this or connecting lines can sell you a ticket and give you valuable information—or you can address, W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Raising Canary Birds.

In Germany the poorer classes are nearly all engaged in raising canaries. Several hundred thousand are shipped every year to all parts of the world. There is no industry like it in existence. The birds are strong and hardy and require very little attention; consequently among the peasantry every family has is aviary, which is a constant source of income, independent of the proceeds of their daily toil. The buyers for the New York houses make periodical trips through the country; the birds are bought and are soon on their way to America, where they quickly become accustomed to their gilded cages.—Pittsburg Record.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, Jan. 30. 1892.

L. L. C. Brooks of St. Paul, came up on Thursday's train.

Joseph Heard of the firm of C. W. Hackett Hardware Co., of St. Paul, was doing business with E. Taylor & Co. on Thursday.

Elmer Blanchard spent several days in Crookston last week.

Mrs. Wm. Davidson spent Sunday with her daughter, Hattie, who is attending school in your city.

The railroad company have placed an illuminator in front of the depot, which is very acceptable to its patrons here.

Miss Katie Stuhr returned to her home at Red Lake Falls, Saturday.

Your correspondent can most heartily endorse the letter written by "Farmer," of Angus, relating to the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday.

Mr. Thedore of Hallock, is visiting with his daughter, Mrs. John Hanson.

Mr. Brink who is in the blacksmith business at St. Hilaire, was with us several days last week.

Mrs. John Salentiny returned from an extended visit in the southern part of the state, Tuesday.

A number of the children in the families of Mr. Willis and Casper Tiedeman have had a severe attack of the jaundice. But all are doing nicely now.

Lars Brink of Black River, came in to do some trading, Thursday.

Section Boss Lindman has moved into the Kirsch house.

The M. and N. and the Red River Valley Elevator Companies have been handling over all the wheat at this station, but so far they have been very fortunate—not being able to find that any of it had been overheated.

Nels Freberg, manager of the Tarbell and Buffington farm, was in town Friday. Nels is a jolly good fellow and one that we like to meet.

If the people around Euclid and vicinity have any friends at a distance to whom they would like to send some immigration matter, call on I. W. C. Misner. He has a limited supply. This is a matter that all interested in the welfare of the Red River Valley should take an active interest in.

The JOURNAL is meeting with favor here right along. We have the pleasure of sending in a number of new subscribers tnis week. Let the good work go on.

Mrs. John Shantzer who has been seriously ill, is convalescent.

Bert Teal is able to be out again after wrestling with an attack of the typhoid pneumonia.

The scarlet fever patients are all doing very nicely and we are now virtually out of quarantine.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

McINTOSH, Jan. 30.

Hon. John D. Knuteson, our representative to the legislature, returned to McIntosh last Saturday for a little recreation, and will return to the capital to-morrow.

W. G. Hunt returned last Saturday from the capital, where he has been fishing for a fat office, but judging from present appearances he had bad luck. Perhaps he didn't use the right kind of bait on his hook—or his reputation as a boodler may have been against him.

Lars Fykerud, the Norwegian violinist, gave an entertainment here last Tuesday evening.

The citizens of McIntosh held a meeting last Monday for the purpose of raising money and sending delegates to St. Paul to push the county division scheme. W. G. Hunt was selected as a delegate, he having the most gall for the purpose.

Hans Quam left for St. Paul last Saturday.

Mikkle Homme left for Bagley Dam last Thursday, where he is employed as cook in one of the lumber camps.

Mrs. Ole Narveson of Fertile is visiting friends in the city.

Very little wheat is coming in now as those who have any left are holding it with the expectation of receiving a higher price next summer. In this they may be mistaken, as those who borrow money to pay off their indebtedness in the fall, instead of selling their wheat, generally lose money by so doing.

A number of the young folks went out in the country last Tuesday evening to celebrate the wedding of Halvor Halvorson to Miss Anna Stromme.

C. F. Page, cashier of the Citizens bank, who left for Wisconsin some time ago for an assistant cashier, has fulfilled his mission and returned last Thursday with his bride. His numerous friends congregated at the West hotel in the evening to celebrate their return and present the happy couple with an elegant bedroom set. An excellent time was had, including an oyster supper and a dance.

A Good Templar lodge has been organized here, with Prof. Bratland at the head.

John Bridstone of Grand Forks is visiting friends here, and contemplates returning to McIntosh and engaging in business again.

Our fire department has ordered new uniforms—red blouses and caps.

Mrs. Glover is seriously ill with lung fever and her recovery is doubtful.

A democratic club has been organized here, and as usual there are more democrats after election than before.

Several new cases of diphtheria are reported from different neighborhoods.

Bishop Brooks Buried.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—With the impressive funeral services of the church, in connection with which his life work was done, and accompanied by evidences of public grief such as have not been manifested in this community before for a generation at least, the remains of the late Bishop Phillips Brooks were consigned to their last resting place in Mt. Auburn cemetery. The services were held in Trinity church and thousands of people viewed the remains as they lay in state.

A SPECIAL WRECKED.

The Lumbermen's Train Ditched and Four Fatally Injured.

DUBUQUE, Jan. 28.—The train bearing the returning Northwestern lumbermen struck a broken rail near Kent, about forty-five miles east of this city. W. E. Ackers, of Minneapolis, was killed. Peter Christianson of Sleepy Eye, Minn.; W. E. Attic of Chicago, and M. J. Riley of Rhinelander, Wis., were fatally injured and cannot live. Several others were less severely injured.

Mitchell Formally Elected.

MADISON, Jan. 27.—The legislature has elected John L. Mitchell, of Milwaukee, United States senator. Senator Lees cast his vote for Bragg, declaring himself bound by the mandate of no caucus. Cheers several times renewed greeted his vote, and the presiding officer was unable to restore order for several minutes. The Republicans voted for John C. Spooner.

Tennessee's First Woman Attorney.

In the United States circuit court Tuesday a very pleasant episode occurred, marking the admission to the bar of a woman lawyer. Mrs. Martha D. Strickland came to Memphis from Michigan as a member of the Association for the Advancement of Women a fortnight ago, and is the guest of Judge and Mrs. J. M. Greer. The convention, it will be recalled, assembled in the United States courtroom, the use of which had been courteously extended by Judge Hammond. On the afternoon of Nov. 18 Mrs. Strickland delivered a lecture upon "Parliamentary Law as a Science and an Art."

Judge Hammond was in the audience, and was so much impressed with the handling of the subject by Mrs. Strickland that he subsequently suggested that she apply for a license to practice in the federal courts during her stay in Memphis. This Mrs. Strickland did through Judge Greer, who in a characteristically clever speech asked that Mrs. Strickland be granted a license. The request was complied with, and the first woman attorney in Tennessee was sworn in by Clerk Clough. Mrs. Strickland has now several classes in parliamentary law among the ladies of Memphis.—Memphis Appeal-Avalanche.

Women's Work in New Orleans.

The city council of New Orleans having passed an ordinance to license the social evil the women of that city took the alarm, and under call of Mrs. E. L. Saxon convened in mass meeting. Miss Florence Huberwald called the meeting to order. Miss Kate Nobles was elected chairman and Miss Elsie Cage secretary. Mrs. Saxon, at the opening of the meeting, read a letter from Mayor Fitzpatrick in which he stated his intention to veto the bill, whereupon resolutions of thanks to the mayor and the press were passed. Mrs. Saxon, who is the pioneer in social purity work in the United States, made a most earnest address. The bill was rightly stigmatized as tending to further torture and degrade a class already degraded and oppressed, as opening opportunities for blackmailing and extortion, and as punishing only one offender, leaving the other unlimited opportunity with impunity.

Mrs. Saxon said that 99 per cent. of these women were driven to their lives of shame through want and the perfidy of man. As she pictured the present and future of the outcast twenty-six women of that class who were present sobbed wildly, overcome by her eloquence and touched with longing for a better life.—Woman's Tribune.

BLAINE IS DEAD.

THE GREAT AMERICAN STATESMAN GIVES UP THE FIGHT.

Surrounded by His Family, He Passed Away Peacefully—Recovery Was Impossible and the End Was Daily Looked For—Recent Trials and Tribulations Aided to Hasten His Dissolution—Funeral Services and Interment to Take Place at Washington Monday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—James G. Blaine died at 11 o'clock this morning.

The end came peacefully, the ex-secretary passing from an unconscious state into that of death. His wife and children were at his bedside. An attendant stationed at the door of the mansion to answer the inquires of the newspaper correspondents, made the announcement.

The news spread to the Capitol and throughout the city in a few minutes. It was everywhere expected, but when the announcement came the impression was more striking than any that has been created by similar news since the death of Abraham Lincoln.

CAUSED NO SURPRISE.

Mr. Blaine's Death Had Been Too Long Anticipated for That.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—James Gillespie Blaine's death, although it has removed from the world a character who was prominent in everything he undertook, causes but little surprise. The news of it had so long been discounted that there remained but the line of announcement to complete it. It was a foregone conclusion that his battle with death would be the final defeat of his life. Though the facts as to his illness have from the first been studiously concealed through the official channels of communication he was broken down. He was a sick man when he returned to Washington to settle down for the winter; death and its bereavements added more and more to his ailments. He has grown worse and has continued on his journey to the grave as fast as the days would carry him. Science and skill have furnished him the weapons of defense for a comparatively long time, but his death has furnished the end of the fight. He was a and to all intents he has been a dead man for these many days past. His mind has been almost a blank for weeks, his lucid moments having been few and at times far between, but his physical frame has withstood the ravages of wasting disease until now.

Doomed Man from the Start,

Dr. Johnston was summoned to the bedside of Mr. Blaine early in the morning, but his presence was not known to those outside until about 11:10, when, in company with Dr. Hyatt, he left the house.

"He Is Dead."

The physicians were unusually pale, and when accosted by the reporter for the latest news the significant look in their faces answered the question. "He is dead," said Dr. Johnston, "and he passed away peacefully."

Dr. Johnston's Report.

Dr. Johnston's report said: "I called at the Blaine residence about 9:30 and found Mr. Blaine in a very exhausted condition. He had grown weaker during the early morning hours, and about 8:30 the nurse observed that his breathing was more difficult and his pulse more feeble than it had been. Dr. Hyatt was also sent for and arrived there about 10 o'clock. After my arrival Mr. Blaine continued to grow weaker very rapidly, his pulse becoming more feeble. He died at 11 o'clock. He was perfectly conscious up to within a few moments of his death and recognized all those around him He died without suffering."

CAUSE OF HIS DEATH.

Dr. Johnston Makes a Statement to the Reporters.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—In answer to the direct question: "Did Mr. Blaine die of Brights disease?" Dr. Johnston said: "While there has been during the last several months, evidences of chronic disease of the kidneys, being a form of what is commonly known as Brights disease, yet this was not the sole cause of death. There were other consecutive complications which tended to exhaust him and to hasten the end. The lapses which he has had from time to time were that is, feebleness and irregularity of the action of the heart, accompanied by difficult breathing."

Dr. Johnston further said that there had been really no hope of Mr. Blaine's ultimate recovery since that Sunday in December, but up to within the last two or three weeks a strong hope had been entertained that his life might be prolonged. Since that time, however, there has been no hope. No effort has been made to sustain life by the use of stimulants, and practically nothing has been done except to give him his nourishment.

BLAINE'S FUNERAL.

Services Held at the Church of the Covenant.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Mr. Blaine could not have a private funeral. Effort was made to comply with his own understood wishes, and with the expressed desires of his family in this regard, but the surging wave of public interest swept over the barriers imposed and made his private funeral one of the most impressive of public demonstration in honor of the dead. The most eminent men in the nation stood around his bier. All business in the nation's Capitol was suspended during the period when the funeral services were in progress. The presence of president and cabinet, supreme judges and high officials of congress and of the diplomatic corps, was not more significant than the homage of the waiting crowds who in respectful silence lined the streets through which the funeral cortege passed. The floral tributes were many and beautiful, the casket itself resting on a bed of roses.

Grand in Simplicity.

Eleven o'clock was the hour named for the simple service of prayer which was to precede the removal of the body to the church for the more public rites. It was only a few minutes after that hour when the mourners entered and the president and all the distinguished concourse rose to pay fitting honor and sympathy to the sorrow of the deceased statesman's relatives.

The family was followed by the Rev. Dr. Hamlin, of the Church of the Covenant, who, standing beside the casket, in a low tone delivered the Presbyterian prayer for the departed soul. As he did so Mr. Walter Damrosch touched the keys of the piano to a slow dirge and the scene was an impressive one. Dr. Hamlin returned thanks to God that by His power this life was ended only that the life of immortality might be begun. He beseeched the Almighty that comfort might come to every member of the stricken household, because the one that had gone out of this life had gone to immortality. Let the consolation that came from above fall tenderly and sweetly upon them.

"Speak to them words of comfort such as Thou alone can teach. This we ask in the name of our Savior. Amen."

This completed the brief and impressive services and the casket was closed and tenderly borne to the hearse. Solemnly and in silence the family and the mourning guests left the house which has been so frequently invaded by the angel of death, and the sad procession wound its way slowly to the church.

At the Church.

It was exactly 12 o'clock when the slow and solemn organ music announced the arrival of the funeral party at the door of the church. As the sad procession moved up the aisle, Mr. Walter Damrosch, Mr. Blaine's son-in-law, who was at the organ, played an improvisation made up of several tunes of hymns which Mr. Blaine loved. All present rose and remained standing as the funeral party moved down the aisle. Dr. Hamlin, the pastor, walked at the head of the mourners and holding in his hand an open book containing the ritual of the Presbyterian worship, as he advanced read selections from the scriptures. Behind him came the pall bearers, two abreast, Senators Hale and Frye, the representatives of the dead man's beloved state, leading the way.

Scripture and Prayer.

When all were seated the deep peals of the organ ceased and Dr. Hamlin, rising from his place on the pulpit, began the church services with reading of selections from the scriptures. The reading finished, prayer was offered up by Dr. Hamlin. At the close of the prayer the funeral procession once more formed and the body was conveyed to Oak Hill cemetery. At the grave Dr. Hamlin read the simple burial service of the Presbyterian church and this was followed by an extemporaneous prayer; then came the benediction and all that was mortal of James Gillespie Blaine was consigned to earth.

LAMAR'S FUNERAL.

Remains of the Dead Justice Interred at Macon, Ga.

MACON, Ga., Jan. 27.—The funeral ceremonies over the late L. Q. C. Lamar commenced at 9:30 a. m. when a public meeting was held at the opera house and eulogies were delivered by some of the most prominent members of the bar in the state. The procession from the house to the Methodist church commenced at 11:30. Dr. Chandler, president of Emory college, where the late justice graduated, delivered the funeral sermon.

What Becomes of Vassar Graduates?

A recent systematic effort to learn what has become of Vassar graduates in after life has revealed some interesting facts. Only 45 per cent. of the dear creatures have married. The great majority of them become teachers, though Vassar is well represented in all the literary professions. She has forty-eight physicians, twelve lawyers, six missionaries and one or more in almost every [illegible] occupation.—Fall River Herald.

THE CAREER OF BLAINE

His Brilliant Attainments and Magnetic Personality.

A TYPICAL AMERICAN STATESMAN.

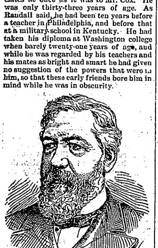
The Most Popular Citizen of His Day, Yet He Was Disappointed in His Lifelong Ambition—Dramatic Incidents of His Career as Congressman, Speaker, Senator, Secretary of State and Presidential Candidate—Colonel Ingersoll's Celebrated Nominating Speech at Cincinnati—Mr. Blaine's Domestic Life.

[Copyrighted, 1893.]

On the first Monday of December, 1863, there met in the hall of the house of representatives a number of men about thirty years of age who were destined to play an important part in national life. Allison of Iowa, Windom of Minnesota, Pendleton of Ohio, Randall of Pennsylvania and General Garfield were among them. But there was one who attracted attention from the veterans of the house the instant he entered the chamber. He was a man of noble proportions, of easy manner and perfect self reliance. He had a splendid crown of hair of reddish tinge and a full beard of the same tint. His eyes attracted the attention of every one who saw him. They were large, luminous and restless.

Sunset Cox, an old member, was attracted to this man as soon as his eyes fell upon him. He asked who he was and said that this man would make his impress in that chamber. Mr. Cox was told that this man who had thus attracted him was a new member from Maine whose name was Blaine, and Mr. Randall, who knew him slightly, said: "He is a native of my own state, was born near the town of Washington, was educated in the college there, and I afterward met him in Philadelphia, where he was a teacher. I have heard of him in Maine, where he is regarded as a man of great promise and much political ability."

Such was the impression which Mr. Blaine caused when he first entered the house of representatives, and if traditions are accurate his personality was as strongly made manifest to his Republican associates at once as it was to Mr. Cox. He was only thirty-three years of age. As Randall said, he had been ten years before a teacher in Philadelphia, and before that at a military school in Kentucky. He had taken his diploma at Washington college when barely twenty-one years of age, and while he was regarded by his teachers and his mates as bright and smart he had given no suggestion of the powers that were in him, so that these early friends bore him in mind while he was in obscurity.



JAMES G. BLAINE.

His father, Ephraim G. Blaine, was a man of rugged force of character, and from him Blaine undoubtedly inherited the great moral courage and political audacity which have been characteristic of his political career. From his mother he inherited that wonderful intuitive capacity which has enabled him in moments of great crises to act as though by inspiration. From her he also received that highly sensitive and emotional character which has been conspicuous in his political life.

Blaine Emigrates Eastward.

Of course Mr. Blaine would have developed wherever he located and in whatever calling he selected as a life career, but it was pure chance which made him the man from Maine. He met while a teacher in Kentucky Miss Harriet Stanwood, who was also a teacher. They were mutually attracted, and just after he had passed his majority they were married. She was a Maine girl, and she induced her young husband to remove to her home and make it his abiding place.

Blaine while in Philadelphia had been attracted to journalism. He has said that he discovered by pure chance that he had some facility with the pen, especially in political discussion, but it could not have been pure chance. It must have been the impulse of the spirit that was in him. And acting upon this impulse he became a part proprietor of The Journal, a weekly paper published in Augusta, Me. The profits were not great, and Mr. Blaine was if not compelled at least willing to accept employment as associate editor of the Portland Advertiser. The editor of that paper had detected Blaine's ability as a political writer and offered him $1,200 a year, a large salary for that time and place. Blaine was not slow in discovering his strength and his value, and at the end of a year he asked for an increase of salary to $1,500 and for a contract covering a period of years.

The proprietor, however, felt that he could not afford to pay this money, and Blaine returned to Augusta, determined to associate politics with his editorial work. He revealed extraordinary political capacity at once, was elected a member of the legislature and subsequently speaker, became chairman of the committee of his party and within three years was acknowledged preeminent among the politicians of his state. Exactly the same qualities which brought him those marvelous tributes of respect and admiration which were afterward his lot won for him great victories in a state and community where politics prevail, where there has been a good deal of contention, and where personal rivalry and to some extent jealousy have played their parts as dangerously as in some other states.

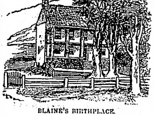
Blaine's Farsightedness.

Even thus early Mr. Blaine perceived that a politician—and he had unquestionably determined to make politics his life business—needed perhaps above other men to be free from money embarrassments. He therefore began with great energy a business career which was brief. He procured some contracts from the war department for furnishing supplies to the soldiers, and while he was aiding the governor of Maine to the extent of his ability in recruiting and equipping soldiers he was also engaged in a perfectly honorable business of supplying the government with raiment for the army. He did not accumulate much, but he got enough so that he had a home of his own in Augusta and a few thousands to his credit in the bank. He was for a time fascinated with business pursuits, and it was a serious question for some months whether he should not abandon politics and devote himself to business.

Those who knew Blaine in later years declared that had he entered the field of business activity he had the peculiar mental qualities which would have enabled him to stand with the great organizing and constructive commercial geniuses of his generation. He never cared for money for itself. He did not have the acquisitive sense. But he liked power, and he realized at that early day what the power of money is.

Why He Went to Congress.

An emergency arose in the congress district in which he lived. A candidate was to be put in nomination. The temptation was offered to him; he thought of the matter over night, and on the next morning had come to a decision which determined his career. He was nominated on the first ballot and elected with but a feeble opposition.



BLAINE'S BIRTHPLACE.

Soon after Mr. Blaine was sworn in a friend called on him at his boarding house at Washington quite late in the evening. He found Blaine at his desk, his ruddy tinted hair so near the gas burner that it seemed as though it must be singed, a copy of the house rules before him, a volume of "Cushing's Manual" and a report of precedents which had been established by the rulings of various speakers.

"Rather dry reading, isn't it, Mr. Blaine?" said his friend.

"Yes, if you read it offhand; but the man who masters this," throwing his hand down upon the pages of the book of rules, "masters the house of representatives."

It is one of the traditions of Blaine that he mastered Cushing's parliamentary rules in one night in his college days, and won a youthful victory in school politics the next day thereby. And in this chance remark to a friend he revealed the purpose of political mastery which had seized him. He was quiet in the house until he had mastered as perfectly as the rule of three those methods of procedure which govern it. And when this was his possession he began to assert himself. That was exactly what one young Democratic member was doing, Mr. Randall, and herein lay in no small degree the secret of the power which these two men gained on their respective sides of the aisle.

Blaine's Quick Perception.

He showed courage, however, once or twice in that first term. He even dared to confront Thad Stevens, who had ruled his party in the house with autocratic and dogmatic assertion. The gaunt and grizzly Old Commoner, amazed to find his authority disputed by a youngster, tried to brush Blaine off as an annoying but trivial incident of embarrassment, but he found his master. Stevens had introduced a bill providing for military governments in the southern states.

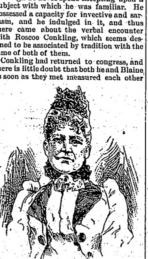
Blaine, on the first reading of this bill, with that intuitive perception which he possessed in a higher degree than any man of his day in congress, saw one fatal error in the bill. And Garfield used to say that when he arose to make his protest and delivered his speech his utterance was that of a man who had authority and his speech that of a mind which had reason. Blaine proposed an amendment by which, in spite of military government, the people of these southern states could in time establish for themselves a republican form of government again. Stevens chafed and raged, and the frown upon his brow made the flesh appear like corrugated ridges, as Cox once said, but he could not frown that congress into defeating the amendment.

Blaine's Impetuosity.

In the next congress, to which Blaine was elected by practically unanimous vote, he felt fully equipped for those struggles which had the speakership and, beyond question, the presidency in view. He had the same impetuosity in the house, the dashing, dramatic manner which characterized Sheridan in the field, qualities which, combined with courage and magnanimity, are sure to command great popularity.

These very qualities made Blaine reckless in speech at times. He never practiced oratory as those who desire to win rhetorical repute do. He wrote few and rehearsed no speeches. He was a master of good English, a ready thinker upon his feet, although he never spoke excepting upon a subject with which he was familiar. He possessed a capacity for invective and sarcasm, and he indulged in it, and thus there came about the verbal encounter with Roscoe Conkling, which seems destined to be associated by tradition with the fame of both of them.

Conkling had returned to congress, and there is little doubt that both he and Blaine as soon as they met measured each other with the eyes of rivals. Conkling had won a magnificent repute as an orator, and by the most arduous toil was cultivating it. He unquestionably aimed at pre-eminence in the party, and Blaine felt this intuitively as soon as his eyes fell upon the man. It was inevitable that these two should come into collision, and in the course of some heated remarks Blaine compared him to a turkey gobbler. The words were no sooner uttered than Blaine regretted it, and he caused an expression of his regret to be conveyed to Conkling. Conkling, however, never mentioned Blaine's name afterward when he could avoid it, and refused many tenders of reconciliation.



MRS. BLAINE.

After Mr. Conkling's death his brother, Colonel Frederick A. Conkling, informed the writer of these lines that it was a mistake to suppose that the reference to a turkey gobbler had mortally offended Conkling. The mortal wound was given, so Colonel Conkling said, by Mr. Blaine when he caused to be read in the house a letter from Provost Marshal General Fry to himself (Blaine) in which direct accusations were made against Mr. Conkling's pecuniary and official integrity. Conkling told his brother that when Mr. Blaine publicly retracted and repudiated these accusations then it would be time to talk of reconciliation.

But the incident was mighty in its consequences. It undoubtedly prevented the nomination of Mr. Blaine in 1876 and 1880 and contributed to his defeat in 1884. On the other hand can be traced to it the causes which ultimately led to Mr. Conkling's retirement from the senate in humiliation and to his withdrawal forever from public life.

Mr. Blaine as Speaker.

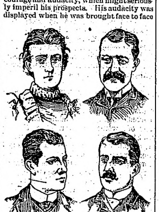
He made a superb speaker. When he was first elected he had hardly entered the prime of life. He was only thirty-nine years of age. His hair and beard, by an inherited tendency, were already showing streaks of gray, but his complexion was ruddy, his skin as smooth as a babe's, and the mysterious and splendid fascination of his eyes seemed constantly to increase with political activity. He stood behind the speaker's desk a superb specimen of manly strength. It was invigorating to those in the gallery and to those upon the floor to look at him. His eyes seemed to be everywhere. He had mastered the confusion of sounds which prevail in that turbulent body, as the head machinist is master of the distraction of a great foundry or manufactory, so that he could detect instantly that which was relevant and of importance and that which was of no consequence.

He held that great and noble body as absolutely at his command as though it was a family or a tribe of which he was the chief. He dispatched business with celerity which seems incredible. The stroke of his gavel meant authority, and the house obeyed it, and no eyes which ever looked forth from the speaker's desk upon a throng animated by the most consuming of the higher passions ever commanded such obedience by a glance as his. Therefore he gained the respect which comes from proper fear, and even Democrats joined with Republicans in saying, "There is a man!" It was the superb exhibition of these qualities which undoubtedly suggested first to the congressmen of his party, and through them to vast numbers of the party throughout the country, that here was the man to succeed in the presidency the hero of the civil war.

Blaine himself was an acknowledged candidate before he had finished his second term, and he used his power as speaker unquestionably, so far as he honorably could, to create the politics which command a presidential nomination. Over in the senate there were certainly three rivals of his for that nomination, two conspicuous—Mr. Morton and Mr. Conkling—and Mr. Blaine played his game against them and played it splendidly. At the beginning of his third term as speaker he realized that if his grasp was not quite upon the presidency his hand could almost touch the prize.

His Moral Courage.

It is therefore all the more remarkable that Mr. Blaine was capable of exploiting as he did in the highest degree both moral courage and audacity, which might seriously imperil his prospects. His audacity was displayed when he was brought face to face with grave charges affecting his integrity of character. Accusations were publicly made that he had received as a price for his influence certain securities from a railway seeking congressional aid. The proof of these accusations were said to be in the possession of a certain clerk named Mulligan and in the shape of letters. The friends of Mr. Blaine looked very solemn in these days, and he was himself most anxious.



Margaret. Walker.
James G., Jr. Emmons.

FOUR OF MR. BLAINE'S CHILDREN.

One morning when this black cloud was hanging over him and his friends he arose to a question of personal privilege. There had been a hint of his intention. The great galleries were packed. Every seat upon the floor was taken, and senators had come from their chamber that they might see and hear Blaine in this hour of his desperation and peril. For every discomfort which this throng suffered they were amply repaid. The scene which took place has been almost unequaled in parliamentary annals. Blaine stood there magnificent in his defiance. He held aloft the bundle of incriminating letters, of itself a dramatic picture and situation worthy of the greatest dramatists, and he declared with some sense of humiliation and personal outrage that he would himself read these letters to the house, that its members might see what those accusations were.

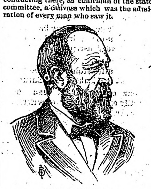
Blaine was never more superb. He conquered that house by his very magnificence of resistance. He held himself at bay so that men cheered and the galleries resounded to the echo with the applause of this spectacle. He read the letters through, and then, with dramatic power which, if it were acting, was a finer exhibition of the dramatic gift than the greatest actors have ever shown, he pointed the finger of scorn and accusation at a certain member of the house and accused him of withholding a telegram which would have proved his innocence.

Blaine's enemies always asserted that this was acting. They did not deny the magnificence of the performance, but they suspected its sincerity. For his friends it was a perfect vindication, and for himself it was a complete victory, as the formal charges were from that day dropped. It was a perilous step to take. Had it failed Blaine must inevitably have been ruined.

His moral courage was displayed when at the very last of his experience as speaker he defied the majority in his own party and made a ruling which he insisted was just and in accordance with his oath as speaker, but which enabled the Democratic minority successfully to maintain its fight against what was then called the force bill. A weaker man than Blaine would have been ruined by this ruling, but it cost him no strength in his own party and gained for him the admiration of many Democrats, so that it was long afterward said that of all Republicans Mr. Blaine was the most popular with the Democracy.

His First Failure.

He lost the presidential nomination in 1876 when it was almost his. Personal animosity unquestionably cost him that prize. The offense he had given to Conkling and anger which he had caused to arise in the hearts of men who controlled other delegations led to a hasty combination, which resulted in a ballot that sent Mr. Blaine to the rear. Men wondered how he would act in this emergency. His heart had been so enthusiastically set upon the nomination that many believed he would show some of the weaknesses of human nature, and that we would discover the weak point in his mental and moral equipment. But he revealed the highest resources. He sent a most cordial dispatch to Governor Hayes, the nominee, promised to take active part in the canvass, and did, going to Maine and conducting there, as chairman of the state committee, a canvass which was the admiration of every man who saw it.



JAMES A. GARFIELD.

In these canvasses as a politician Mr. Blaine was not less great than when upon the floor of congress. He frequently made a sleeping car his home. They would hear of him one day in Portland and the next in the lumber regions. He received dispatches and reports in this car. He gave orders like a general on a field of battle. He brought himself into personal touch with all of the politicians and as many of the citizens as possible, and some of the anecdotes which are told of the way in which he met sudden emergencies suggest his wonderful intellectual resources and the rapidity of his mental operation.

Blaine in the Senate.

His political intuitions were illustrated in another way at this time. He unquestionably suggested the arrangement by which Senator Morrill, of his state, was transferred from the senate chamber to General Grant's cabinet and Blaine was appointed to Morrill's seat and afterward elected. He felt that his day of usefulness in the house was over. He had made his record, and he believed that in the comparative quiet of the senate chamber he would find some rest, and would also be able to carry on the politics which had the presidential nomination of 1880 in view. His friends always felt that his life in the senate was irksome. He adapted himself to the traditions of that somewhat lethargic body, but at the cost of some personal discipline. Of course his personality was felt there, but as a senator he added but little if any to his repute.

While he did not enter upon the canvass for the presidential nomination of 1880 in that dashing and inspiring way which characterized him previous to 1876, yet he had the nomination in view and knew that he was the choice of a large part of the political leaders and felt that he was of the masses of his party. He advised, but he did not dictate, and he let his political friends do the work of combination to a great extent. He would unquestionably have been nominated had he not been compelled to face the enormous popularity of General Grant which was increased by his trip around the world, and was made use of with great skill by the politicians. But though Blaine could not beat General Grant in the convention himself, he could name the man who could beat him, and thus General Garfield became the candidate.

Garfield could make no other choice than Blaine for secretary of state, but what Blaine's career as secretary and Garfield's as president would have been of course is a matter of surmise. The impression has always been that Blaine's personality would have dominated the administration. He was, however, pledged to Garfield to support him for a renomination.

Blaine in Emergency.

Mr. Blaine was with General Garfield at the time he was assassinated, and from the nervous shock he then received he never fully recovered. He had never been the man physically after the sunstroke of 1876 that he was before. But this fearful experience seemed to shatter his nerves more than that. His hair, which had been iron gray, grew white, as did his beard, and his complexion became of that waxy hue which led many to believe that he had organic disease.

He was, however, capable of audacity and courage, and it was he who proposed to the members of the cabinet during Garfield's illness that the cabinet should announce to the country that the president was suffering from such disability as the constitution contemplated when it declared that the vice president should in such cases exercise the duties of the office.

Mr. Blaine felt that there ought to be no question about the soundness of this view, and it was his opinion that if General Garfield recovered he would resume the office. He was overruled, however, by the cabinet as a matter of public expediency, although it was admitted that in case of war or great emergency it might be necessary to take such a step. The incident, however, is characteristic of the man.

Blaine in Retirement.

During the winter following the assassination of Garfield those who went to the congressional library used frequently to see a man of quiet manner poring over old volumes, searching the bookshelves, wandering about like a literary recluse, and when they recognized him they were amazed that he who had won so great fame and was the idol of so many Americans should be content to conceal himself in misty alcoves and among musty books. Mr. Blaine, however, was permitting the activity of his mind to take another direction. He had retired from Arthur's cabinet, but could not be idle, and he decided, therefore, to take up the literary pen and describe political history as he had been familiar with it. He rejoiced in the work. It was the first leisure of the library and the study which he had permitted himself since school days.

When men knew that Blaine was writing this history they said, "Now he will pay off grudges, and now he will give us his opinion of men and events in his characteristic manner." In about two years the first volume was issued, and it caused amazement. Blaine the warrior was revealed as Blaine the true historian. He told his story in simple literary style, with great lucidity and with such fairness as could only have been expected of a historian of a future generation. He wrote of his personal enemies as justly and as kindly as of his friends, and he made a contribution to political history which is invaluable. The sale of the work was enormous, and its profits made Mr. Blaine a very wealthy man. He said himself that it was only after the receipts of the sale of this book that he realized the luxury of possessing money.

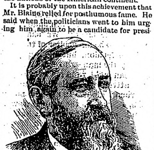
The pathos of the story of General Grant writing his memoirs upon his deathbed is the most sublime of general history. But it has seemed to many that there is something of pathos in the quiet resignation with which Mr. Blaine returned to the writing of the second volume of his history after his defeat for the presidency in 1884. He had lost the prize when a change of 600 votes could have given it to him. The alliterative blunder of Burchard had defeated him in his moment of victory, and if ever a politician went through an experience which was to test the strength Mr. Blaine did in those winter days of 1884 and 1885.

He uttered one word of protest and almost of despair, and then he took up his pen again, walking for an hour or two each day over the crusted snow of the Augusta streets that he might get exercise, and when friends went there to see him they found him Blaine the man—resigned, patient, cheerful, but with symptoms now and then of the fire of genius which burned within him. When his book was completed he took his family to Europe and spent a year, and it was while there that, acting in accordance with the monitions of his physician, he wrote the Florence letter bidding his friends that they must not look to him as a presidential candidate, for he could not accept the nomination if it came. Reluctantly and only after a second warning from him did his friends heed him. Had he remained passive while abroad he would have been nominated in 1888.

Secretary Again.

With something of the serenity of the youth of old age Mr. Blaine entered for his second term upon the duties of secretary of state. His mental genius asserted itself in that office again, and while his physical characteristics and the ardor of his youth had been subjected to change the power of his mind was illustrated. He conducted most brilliant diplomatic correspondence, and he formulated the most important commercial and financial policy which the government had undertaken since the war, with the single exception of the resumption of specie payments. He turned the attention of the politicians from questions bred of the war to those of the future and gave promise of commercial prosperity between the nations of the American continent.

It is probably upon this achievement that Mr. Blaine relied for posthumous fame. He said when the politicians went to him urging him again to be a candidate for president: "I was a candidate once. I was given one opportunity, and I never can say word or do deed again which would look as though I did not regard the verdict at that time as final."



BENJAMIN HARRISON.

On the 4th of June, 1892, the country was amazed to learn that Mr. Blaine had that day resigned as secretary of state in a brief and very formal note, without a word of explanation, and that President Harrison had accepted the resignation in the fewest possible words. This is not the place and now is not the time to comment or even surmise. On Sept. 8, 1892, Mr. Blaine addressed to Chairman Joseph H. Manley, of the Maine Republican committee, his last public letter on politics. On the evening of Oct. 14, 1892, at Ophir Farm, New York, the residence of Whitelaw Reid, he made his last speech.

Social and Domestic.

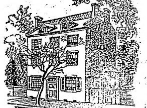
Those who knew James G. Blaine only as a public man knew but half of his life, and that not the more attractive. His ancestry was of the native American nobility, and his own family life was of a strangely varied character, a middle age of unalloyed happiness being followed by an evening of almost continuous calamity and sorrow.

The Gillespies and Blaines were people of standing before the Revolution, and the Colonel Blaine who was commissary general of the northern department of Washington's army was the secretary's grandfather. Neal Gillespie, his mother's father, was a scholar of high standing and directed his grandson's studies down to the time he entered Washington university. Equal honor is due the ancestors of Mrs. Blaine, who was Miss Harriet Stanwood, of a family that settled in Massachusetts in the early days of that colony, and went thence to Maine in the vanguard of its pioneers.

In Augusta, where her father, Jacob Stanwood, lived for many years, Mrs. Blaine was born in 1828. Her father was a well to do merchant, a man of influence, although never holding public office. He took great pride in his daughter, who was a girl of fine natural gifts, strengthened by liberal education. Full of ambition and force, so well displayed in after life, she determined to make her own way, and hence started out as a school teacher. It was at Millersburg, Ky., that she first met Mr. Blaine, then a professor at the Military institute at Blue Lick Springs, twenty miles distant. The world has heard enough of the circumstances connected with their marriage. It is a cruel feature of American political campaigns that neither man nor woman is spared. The slightest youthful indiscretion or even an error of judgment is magnified into a monstrous crime, and in 1884 both candidates suffered.

The first child of this union, Stanwood Blaine, died in infancy. Three sons and two daughters remained, and the father's heart was wrapped up in them. Walker Blaine, the oldest, was his father's trusted companion and assistant. Miss Margaret Blaine was to her mother what Walker was to his father, but Miss Harriet was best known to the public, possessing both wit and beauty and all the social qualities required for a leading lady in Washington society. Of Emmons and James G. Blaine, Jr., the world knew but little. Such was the family when Secretary Blaine took up his residence in that historic house on Lafayette square that was but too well named the House of Calamity. The tragedies previously enacted there are a part of the nation's history, and the Blaines suffered terribly.

First came the death of a daughter (then the wife of Colonel Coppinger), and but two weeks later Walker Blaine died even before the country had learned that he was seriously ill. The marriage of James G. Blaine, Jr., a mere boy, to Miss Marie Nevins, was followed rapidly by his divorce and a painful series of recriminations, and immediately after it the death of Emmons Blaine at Chicago. No comment can add color to this bare statement of the facts. Only Mrs. Walter Damrosch, nee Margaret Blaine, her sister Harriet and James G. Blaine, Jr., remain to comfort their afflicted mother. When the heat engendered by the late campaign shall have cooled the world will judge very leniently the actions of the secretary during the Minneapolis convention.



BLAINE'S WASHINGTON RESIDENCE.

Ingersoll's Eloquent Tribute.

The noblest eulogy on the departed statesman's political career and principles was that uttered by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll in the Republican national convention of 1876. It is therefore submitted here entire as the fittest ending of this sketch.

Massachusetts may be satisfied with the loyalty of Benjamin H. Bristow. So am I. But if any man nominated by this convention cannot carry the state of Massachusetts, I am not satisfied with the loyalty of that state. If the nominee of this convention cannot carry the grand old commonwealth of Massachusetts by 75,000 majority, I would advise them to sell out Faneuil hall as a Democratic headquarters. I would advise them to take from Bunker Hill that old monument of glory.

The Republicans of the United States demand as their leader in the great contest in 1876 a man of intelligence, a man of integrity, a man of well known and approved political opinions. They demand a reformer after as well as before the election. They demand a politician in the highest, broadest and best sense—a man of superb moral courage. They demand a man acquainted with public affairs, with the wants of the people, with not only the requirements of the hour, but with the demands of the future. They demand a man broad enough to comprehend the relations of this government to the other nations of the earth. They demand a man well versed in the powers, duties and prerogatives of each and every department of this government.

They demand a man who will sacredly preserve the financial honor of the United States; one who knows enough to know that the national debt must be paid through the prosperity of this people; one who knows enough to know that all the financial theories in the world cannot redeem a single dollar; one who knows enough to know that all the money must be paid not by law, but by labor; one who knows enough to know that the people of the United States have the industry to make the money and the honor to pay it over just as fast as they make it.

The Republicans of the United States demand a man who knows that prosperity and resumption when they come must come together; that when they come they will come hand in hand through the golden harvest fields; hand in hand by the whirling spindles and the turning wheels; hand in hand past the open furnace doors; hand in hand by the flaming forges; hand in hand by the chimneys filled with eager fire—greeted and grasped by the countless sons of toil.

This money has to be dug out of the earth. You cannot make it by passing resolutions in a political convention.

The Republicans of the United States want a man who knows that this government should protect every citizen at home and abroad; who knows that any government that will not defend its defenders and protect its protectors is a disgrace to the map of the world. They demand a man who believes in the eternal separation and divorcement of church and school. They demand a man whose political reputation is spotless as a star; but they do not demand that their candidate shall have a certificate of moral character signed by a Confederate congress. The man who has in full, heaped and rounded measure all these splendid qualifications is the present grand and gallant leader of the Republican party—James G. Blaine.

Our country, crowned with the vast and marvelous achievements of its first century, asks for a man worthy of the past and prophetic of her future; asks for a man who has the audacity of genius; asks for a man who is the grandest combination of heart, conscience and brain beneath her flag. Such a man is James G. Blaine.

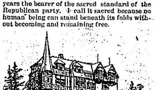
For the Republican host, led by this intrepid man, there can be no defeat.

This is a grand year—a year filled with the recollections of the Revolution; filled with proud and tender memories of the past, with the sacred legends of liberty; a year in which the sons of freedom will drink from the fountains of enthusiasm; a year in which the people call for a man who has preserved in congress what our soldiers won upon the field; a year in which they call for the man who has torn from the throat of treason the tongue of slander; for the man who has snatched the mask of Democracy from the hideous face of rebellion; for the man who, like an intellectual athlete, has stood in the arena of debate and challenged all comers, and who is still a total stranger to defeat.

Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the halls of the American congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen foreheads of the defamers of his country and the maligners of his honor.

For the Republican party to desert this gallant leader now is as though an army should desert their general upon the field of battle.

James G. Blaine is now and has been for years the bearer of the sacred standard of the Republican party. I call it sacred because no human being can stand beneath its folds without becoming and remaining free.



BLAINE'S BAR HARBOR HOME.

Gentlemen of the convention, in the name of the great republic, the only republic that ever existed upon this earth; in the name of all her defenders and of all her supporters; in the name of all her soldiers living; in the name of all her soldiers dead upon the field of battle, and in the name of those who perished in the skeleton clutch of famine at Andersonville and Libby, whose sufferings he so vividly remembers, Illinois—Illinois nominates for the next president of this country that prince of parliamentarians—that leader of leaders—James G. Blaine.

DEPOSED A QUEEN.

POLITICAL TROUBLES IN HAWAII END IN REVOLUTION.

Queen Liliuokalani Bounced and a Republican Government Established—A Commission Bound for Washington to Ask Uncle Sam to Annex.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 31.—The Hawaiian steamer Claudine arrived here at 2 a. m., bringing the news of a revolution in Honolulu. The revolutionists have overturned the government, and United States troops have been landed from the warships in port. A provisional government has been established, and a commission headed by Mr. Thurston came in on the Claudine, en route to Washington, with a petition to the American government to annex the Hawaiian islands to the United States.

How It Happened.

The first intimation of trouble came on Jan. 14, when the queen tried to get her cabinet to sign a new constitution that disfranchised all foreigners, and put the whole government in the hands of the national politicians. The ministers refused, and when threatened by the queen fled for their lives. They returned later and induced the queen to postpone the coup. There was a public meeting in front of the palace. The queen announced the failure of her plans and a native orator demanded the lives of the ministers. Early in the evening citizens met and formed a committee of public safety. On Jan. 16 a mass meeting was held in the armory. At about 5 o'clock p. m. the United States steamship Boston landed 200 men fully armed. They marched to the office of the consul general of the United States. The marines were sent to the American legation, while the sailors marched out along Merchant street with two gatling guns, and camped for a time on private grounds. They stayed ashore all night. All day on Tuesday, the 18th, the community was in a state of expectancy, looking to the committee of public safety to do something to end the tension.

The Committee Was Busy.

The committee, in the meantime, was not idle, being incessantly occupied completing its organization and completing the final arrangements necessary to the proclamation of the provisional government and its protection by armed force. At about 2:30 o'clock, an attempt was made by three native policemen to arrest the progress of a wagon which was driven up North street by Mr. Brenner and Mr. Good. Those in charge of the wagon resisted the attempt of the officers to arrest its course. One of the officers making a motion to draw a revolver, Mr. Good drew his own and fired but did not, however, inflict a dangerous wound. In the meantime the government of public safety accompanied by members of the government about to be formed, proceeded to the government building. There a proclamation was read of which the chief points are as follows:

The Proclamation.

First—The Hawaiian monarchial system of government is hereby abrogated.

Second—A provisional government for the control and management of public affairs and the protection of the public peace is hereby established to exist until terms of unity with the United States of America have been negotiated and agreed upon.

Third—Such provisional government shall consist of an executive council of four members, who shall administer the executive departments of the government with an advisory council of fourteen, who shall have general legislative authority.

Fourth—All officers of the government are to exercise their functions except the queen, Marshal Wilson and the cabinet.

The provisional government and the cabinet went to the palace and submitted their plan to the queen. She refused at first to yield, but finally retired to her country residence, her troops surrendered and the government was in the hands of the foreigners.

PAUNCEFOTE INSTRUCTED.

British Minister to Protest Against the Action of Our Officials.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The British government has instructed Sir Julian Pauncefote, its minister here, to protest against the action of the United States officials and forces in Hawaii. The protest, it is understood, will be lodged with Secretary of State Foster at once. To what length the protest goes is not known yet—whether it protests against the matter already taken place in Honolulu or against any future action.

SAILED FOR HONOLULU.

Three American Cruisers Go to the Hawaiian Islands.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 31.—Mare Island navy yard is a scene of unusual activity. The United States steamer Mohican sailed for Honolulu at 10 o'clock Sunday morning with Rear Admiral Skerrett, commander of the Pacific squadron, on board. The United States steamship Ranger is expected to sail at any moment. The Adams is also expected to sail within twenty-four hours.

Marines for Hawaii.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 31.—It was reported here during the evening but could not be confirmed, that the steamer Mariope, which leaves for the Hawaii islands Tuesday, will carry several hundred United States marines from Mare island to serve in case of an emergency at Honolulu. The steamer is very swift and makes the trip in six and one-half days.

Twenty-five Victims.

ALTON, Ills., Jan. 31.—Deaths from injuries received at the Wann disaster are still of daily occurrence, two more being reported Sunday. The list of dead now reaches twenty-five.

FOR BETTER HIGHWAYS.

The Minnesota Good Roads Covention Meet at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 26.—The first day's session of the Minnesota good roads conw s voted to organization and the reading and discussion of various papers on the subject of good roads.

At the second day's session the Minnesota State Road Improvement association was organized. Officers were elected as follows:

President, A. B. Choate, of Minneapolis; treasurer, E. J. Hodgson, of St. Paul; secretary, F. L. Hoxsie, of St. Paul; directors, First congressional district, Anson A. Pierce, Wabasha; Second congressional district, W. W. Gorman, Montevideo; Third congressional district, V. H. Harris, Meeker; Fourth, Otis Staples, Stillwater; Fifth, William Donaldson, Minneapolis; Sixth, Fred O Hodge; Seventh, Henry Feig, Kandiyahi. One vice president was elected from each county.

Resolutions.

At 2 p. m. the committee on resolution submitted their report and offered the following recommendations:

That all highway taxes be paid in money and that poll taxes be abolished; that township road districts be abolished and that highway taxes be expended by the board of township supervisors; that each township should raise a tax of not less than 2 mills nor more than 10; all bridges costing $100 or more to be county bridges and kept in repair by the same; cost of highways to be assessed against all benefitted property; taxation of unused railroad lands; all swamp lands not appropriated to corporations to be sold or leased and proceeds to go to construction of public roads; that all roads now being or that shall be used for a period of five years shall be considered as legal roads; that before the board of supervisors shall vacate any road the county attorney shall examine the proceedings of the board and report the same to be correct; that consent of two-thirds of the property owners is authority for the board of supervisors to lay out, change or open roads; that each person using a wagon with tires four inches broad shall have a rebate for four years of $2.50, and that after 1898 no traffic wagon with tires of less than four inches be allowed on the roads.

After adopting the above resolutions the convention passed another requesting the legislature to pass a measure for the appointment of a state good roads commission. After the close of the routine business, Isaac B. Potter, of New York, addressed the convention on the need of good roads. He stated that the farmers of Minnesota actually throw away $355,000 a day because of the execrable condition of their roads. The convention then adjourned.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Jan. 24.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—In the senate the credentials of Senators Gray of Delaware, and Tate, of Tennessee, were received and placed on file. A communication from Chief Justice Fuller, of the supreme court of the United States, announcing the death of Associate Justice Lamar, was read by Vice President Morton. The senate then, as a mark of respect, adjourned for the day.

The speaker laid before the house the official notification of Mr. Lamar's death, and the house adjourned out of respect to his memory.

Wednesday, Jan. 25.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Kilgore, of Texas, and Pierce, of Tennessee, successfully filibustered against the consideration of the bankruptcy bill, and the house, finally adjourned, having exhausted the two days set apart for its consideration.

The senate transacted no business of public importance. Nearly two hours was spent in secret session on the confirmation of Judge McComas as one of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Thursday, Jan. 26.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The session of the house was one devoid of any public interest. The sundry civil bill was granted the right of way, and while a few obstructions were placed on the track, none of them proved disastrous, and the bill made fair progress. Without disposing of the bill the house adjourned.

The senate considered bills on the calendar up to 2 p. m., when the anti-option bill was taken up and argument made against it by Mr. Mills, of Texas.

Friday, Jan. 27.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Both houses of congress adjourned without transacting any business, on account of Mr. Blaine's death.

Saturday, Jan. 28.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 28.—Practically the whole session was spent by the senate behind closed doors—the executive session lasted from 12:40 to 4:30, when the senate adjourned until 2 o'clock Monday—the change of hour being fixed in order to give the senators an opportunity to attend Mr. Blaine's funeral.

Beyond the adoption of resolutions looking to the investigation of the Panama canal scandal and the whisky trust, the proceedings of the house were devoid of public interest. The Sunday civil bill made slow progress. No material change was made in the measure.

Monday, Jan. 30.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Mr. Chandler, of New Hampshire, stepped to the front as an avowed Hawaiian annexationist and introduced a resolution in the senate to instruct the president to enter into negotiations with the provisional government of the late kingdom of Hawaii and to submit the matter to congress for ratification by legislation. Mr. White, of Iowa, objected to immediate action and Mr. Chandler's resolution was laid over. Mr. White then continued his speech against the anti-option bill.

The session of the house was an uninteresting one. The sundry civil appropriations bill was further discussed but not disposed of.

A Noonday Rest.

Members of Rev. Edward E. Hale's Lend a Hand clubs in Boston have established a noonday rest for women employed in the city, where they may enjoy the lunches brought from home with a cup of hot tea or broth, and may be supplied with hot lunches at small cost. The dreariness of eating cold food in the crowded and uncomfortable quarters usually reserved for lunchrooms, and the tendency of the lunchbox to destroy rather than satisfy all appetite for food, can be appreciated only by those who habitually make the noonday meal off a bit of the dinner roast and half dry bread. For the privileges of the rest a woman pays ten cents a week.—Boston Letter.

Women Who Play the Banjo.

The banjo, which is called the American national instrument, is a favorite with Miss Doremus, who is called the most accomplished banjo player among ladies not only in this city, but in this country. It was Miss Yznaga who so charmed the Prince of Wales with her banjo playing that he was tempted to take lessons in the art. Mrs. Hillhouse is a banjo player, and it is said that Mrs. Grover Cleveland has taken up the banjo in earnest, with the intention of becoming an accomplished performer.

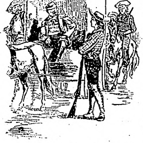
THE GOLDEN CAVES

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS "M. QUAD."

COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, 1892

CHAPTER XVIII.



"So you've got gold in the wagon!"

The next three days were full of strange events. The party which set out from the wagon train to hunt for the canyon were certain that the one near which the renegades had encamped was the place they were looking for.

Taylor and one of the renegades prospected down the valley and found a canyon which Taylor was sure contained the cave and its treasure.

Both parties were working in the dark, but the wagonmen had the advantage. They knew the renegades for what they were, and also discovered that Taylor had joined them. Some of the men were for attacking them and wiping out the whole five to revenge the murder of the emigrant and his wife, but this the captain would not approve. He would lose a man or two at least, even if he won a great victory, and he did not forget that the Indians might make their presence known at any moment.

At the second visit paid the canyon above the renegades the wagonmen penetrated far enough to be certain that this was the one described by Saunders. They would have investigated still closer but for the approach of a storm, which made them anxious to reach the shelter of camp.

Strangely enough, the other party was just as firmly convinced that the other canyon was the right one, and on the forenoon of the third day it was decided that they should move. Bob had told a big story to get the other party off up the valley, and as they had not moved the renegades did not know what to make of it. He could not see why they should question his veracity, but Taylor made the situation plain when he said:

"Harkins has no doubt told them of the cave, and they are making a still hunt for it. Depend upon it, he has given the secret away, and they'll divide up the stuff if they find it."

It was decided to hitch up and move down the valley at once. It would not do for Taylor to be seen, and he was to hide away in the wagon. Bob cooked up what he thought a very plausible yarn, and about noon Joe, who happened to be looking up the valley, saw the wagon a mile away. The rescued girl was at once hidden from sight and the seven men in the camp quietly made ready to meet an attack.

The wagon came on, three of the renegades riding their horses and the fourth driving, while the horses of the latter and the one belonging to Taylor followed the wagon. The vehicle could have passed the camp by fifty yards, but it drove up and halted within ten, and Bob called out:

"Hello! to all of ye again. I reckoned ye'd be up at the diggings by this time, but ye don't seem to keer for gold. I come out to guide these boys, who hev made their pile and are now headed for Brule. Didn't see anything of the lost gal yet?"

The captain being absent with a party, Joe took it upon himself to answer.

"We shall probably move this afternoon. The wagons had to be overhauled and fixed. So you've got gold in the wagon?"

"Gold 'nuff to buy half of Dakota, my friend. Sorry we can't let ye see it, but it's kivered up fur the journey. Meet any luck yet?"

"Only so so. Where did you get that bay horse?"

"I was jist goin to ask ye if ye had ever seen him afore. We met a chap named Taylor a couple of days ago, who was headed for the mines. He allowed he didn't need his hoss any longer, and I bought the beast for fifty dollars."

"Yes, that is Taylor's horse, and I was wondering how you came by him. Was Taylor all right?"

"Seemed to be as pert as a cat. So ye are going away today?"

"That's what we expect."

"Waal, I'm goin on with the boys fur about twenty mile and I may see you as I cum back. Good luck and goodby."

The little party moved off down the valley, every renegade chuckling with satisfaction, and they were soon out of sight. Half an hour later the captain and his party returned and dinner was quickly dispatched and the teams harnessed for a move. By three o'clock a new camp had been formed in the mouth of the canyon. The wagons were run in out of sight, a wall of rock was piled up as a screen and a defense, and in a little cave were found water and grass for the horses for the time being.

It was well that they had moved with promptness and made things secure. Before sunset the rain descended in such torrents that the main valley was almost a river. A good sized stream swept down the bed of the canyon and out into the valley, and within an hour the footprints of the horses and the tracks of the wagons had been obliterated. The storm lasted half the night, causing great discomfort in the camp, but the next day was not three hours old when everybody was made to realize that the storm was his salvation. Some of the men were still eating their breakfast when Joe, who had been down to the mouth of the canyon for a look around, returned and said:

"Injuns till you can't rest!"

"Where? Where?" called half a dozen men.

"In the valley. A band of at least fifty has just gone tearing by."

The fire was burning clear and making no smoke, although it had been built against the wall of the canyon, in a place where the smoke would go filtering up among the trees. Every man was ordered down to the wall, and they reached it in time to see the last of the Indian band disappear up the valley.

"What's your opinion?" asked the captain of Joe as they stood together.

"They are hunting for us. They've got word that we are in this valley and they are trying to locate us. They probably expected to find us at the other camp."

"Well, I hope they'll keep right on as they are going."

"But they won't, captain. They know that we left that camp about noon yesterday. They picked up a dozen proofs of it. They believe we went straight up the valley. They'll figure that we couldn't have gone over ten or twelve miles when the storm broke. Five miles above this they will be looking for our trail. If they don't find it they will ride on five miles farther. Then they will discover that we did not go that way at all."

"And then what?"

"They will come back looking into all the hiding places, and we shall have a fight with odds of five to one."

"I'm afraid so," said the captain, "and this time we cannot look for a rescue by the soldiers. The party which passed down yesterday has no doubt been butchered."

"I think the reds struck into the valley by a pass farther up," answered Joe. "There would have been fighting, and we should have heard the reports of rifles. We must got ready."

The mouth of the canyon was about one hundred feet wide. Seventy-five feet up it narrowed to fifty feet and made a bend. The wagons were in this bend and a wall had already been thrown across a portion of the fifty feet. Every man now went to work to extend this wall to a distance of thirty-five feet and to make it look like a landslide from the bank. Dirt was thrown in among the rocks, and bushes pulled up and set among them, and two or three of the men brought armfuls of vines and creepers and trailed them over the wall.

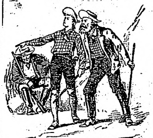
It would not do to close up the entire width of the canyon, as the Indians probably knew of its existence. The wall made a strong barricade, and as the men surveyed it from the other side they pronounced the deception perfect.

The test was at hand.

They were yet at work when the advance of the Indian party was seen returning down the valley. They knew that if the wagon had come up the valley they had dodged in somewhere.

"Every man to cover and lie low until I give the word," ordered the captain, and in a moment the gloomy mouth of the canyon was as quiet as a graveyard.

CHAPTER XIX.



"Great heavens, but what is that?"

The Indians were in truth looking for the wagons. Both parties had a narrow escape. Their presence in the valley had been detected by scout or stroller and information carried to some point from which a war party of seventy had been dispatched to surprise and annihilate them. This party had come in by one of the narrow valleys and found the camp abandoned. The severe storm had obliterated all traces, and the Indians had gone up the valley to pick up the trail. As they returned they were riding at a slower pace, and were spread out the width of the valley.

Would they look into the mouth of the canyon?

The query was answered five minutes later. Three warriors turned their ponies to the right and rode in to within ten feet of the stone wall. They rode its entire length and halted in the gap and looked up the canyon.

The men were lying flat down on the earth, each clutching his rifle, and horses and wagons were just around the bend.

Could it escape the Indians that the wall was artificial? Must not their sharp eyes detect the figures hugging the earth? It did not seem that the gold hunters had one show in a thousand to escape detection, and yet they were not detected. After a halt of not more than a minute, though it seemed a quarter of an hour to each man, the trio of redskins passed on and the moment of peril was passed.

A bit of natural philosophy stood between the gold hunters and discovery. The Indians had turned into the gloom and shadow from the bright sunshine, and their vision was shortsighted and uncertain. Had they waited a little longer they must have seen something or other to arouse their suspicions, but they seemed impatient to get on.

"Thank God!" whispered more than one man as the horses were heard moving away.

In half an hour the gold hunters dared exult and plan. Two men were left at the wall as lookouts, three or four others were held as a reserve at the camp, and the captain, Harkins and Joe set out up the canyon to search for the cave of gold. When the darkness became so intense as to interfere with their progress they lighted torches and a thorough inspection was made of both walls.

The canyon extended into the mountain for a full mile, winding and turning, and long enough before it ended the pine trees met above it and prevented a single ray of light from descending. Nothing answering the description of the dying hunter could be found. He had said, as Harkins understood, "five miles to the right of the peak." Here was the spot. He had described the mouth of the canyon and everything here bore out the description. He said that Bridger went up the canyon about a mile and then turned into a smaller one running to the left.

There was no such canyon. The left bank was solid rock and earth from the wagons to the spot where the great rift stopped short at a flinty wall a thousand feet high. The mighty wrath had split the mountain thus far, but it could go no farther.

Three times the men traveled from the camp to the end of the canyon, and then all were certain that Harkins had been mistaken. They sat down on a bowlder in the bed of the canyon to rest and discuss the matter, while the single torch, secured in a cleft, hardly allowed them to see each other's faces.

"Well, we have no right to complain, as we have lost nothing," said the captain. "Indeed, if we had not slipped in here not a man of us would now be wearing his scalp."

"Wasn't the old man flighty in his last hour?" asked Joe of Harkins, who seemed much cast down.

"He gave no evidence of it; on the contrary, his mind seemed wonderfully clear to the last."

"Perhaps he said to the left instead of the right of Custer's peak," suggested the captain.

"No, I am sure he said to the right, but he may have meant the left."

"It's no use crying over spilt milk," laughed the captain.

"If we have lost the cave we have saved our scalps. I'm inclined to think the old man misspoke himself. I believe those renegades gave this place a thorough looking over and are now in the canyon below, if there is a canyon there. If the cave is there they have got the gold ere this, and that ends it."

Harkins sat with bowed head. He had felt so sure that old Saunders told the truth that he hated to give up the search. There was deep silence for a moment, broken by a whisper from Joe, "Great heavens, but what is that!" They were near the wall which formed the end of the canyon. All raised their heads and looked into the darkness and saw a faint light shining out like a star. At the same moment their ears caught the sound of many voices chanting in low tones, and a strange, weird music filled the heavy air.

"Hush—sit still!" whispered the captain as Harkins seemed about to spring up.

Then from the face of the solid rock issued forth a strange procession of strange shadows—shadows which moved in double file right past the trio down into the blackness of the canyon toward the wagons. The one who led the procession carried what looked like a banner. Behind him was one who seemed to carry an urn. Then came four shadows which bore a bier, and those who came after had their faces upturned and were wailing and chanting.

The men saw and heard and realized, but were chilled and powerless to move.

Can the dead come back to earth? Do the ghosts of those who have gone before gather in the shadows and the darkness and hold reunions?

Chant! Chant! Chant!

Out from the solid wall—a wall in which the sharp eyes of the gold hunters had failed to detect a crevice large enough to conceal a squirrel—poured the strange, queer specters, and down into the darkness marched the procession.

March! March! March!

Their feet kept time to the wild, weird chant, but not the sound of a footfall came to the ears of the living. Each ghostly figure stood out separate and distinct, but not a face could be seen.

"We are doomed men!" groaned Harkins, as he covered his face with his hands to shut out the sight.

"Aye! We shall never leave this spot alive!" added Joe.

"Hush, men!" whispered the captain as he raised his hand. "They are dead, true enough, but they are the dead of a thousand years ago—of the cave dwellers and the Aztecs. I have seen them twice before, and they brought no bad luck. Here they come on the other side!"

The three were seated on a rock in the center of the rift. The head of the spectral procession had gone down the canyon several hundred feet and then turned to come back on their left, passing them again within a few feet.

March! March! March!

Chant! Chant! Chant!

Soft and low and sweet came the notes—like the murmur of the August breeze in a forest pine. The feeling of awe was crowded out of the hearts of the living, and a feeling of sadness and reverence crept in.

It was the dead burying its dead!

March! March! March! Never the echo of a footfall, never the touch of skeleton foot to the flinty rock. The ear caught no sound but that of the ghostly voices chanting in unison.

And of a sudden he who headed the spectral procession swerved to the left and disappeared into the solid wall and was followed by the long lines until the last had been swallowed up and lost sight of. And then, as silence and darkness reigned again, the captain said:

"Men, we have a treasure here. Examine that wall and you will find an opening to a cave behind it."

CHAPTER XX.

"Were we awake or asleep?" asked Joe, as he rubbed his eyes.

"Very wide awake," answered the captain.

"And was it a procession, and did we hear music?" asked Harkins.

"Yes. I saw and heard the same thing once in the Rocky mountains, and once again in an old ruin in Arizona. I have met several men who have also seen and heard."

"There is no opening in the cliff," said Joe as he held the torch aloft; "not a crevice where they came out—not a hole where they went in. We have been fooled by the darkness."

"You and Harkins return to the wagon for crowbars, and while you are gone I will collect wood and build a fire to work by," answered the captain.

His seeming confidence inspired them, and without waiting for a closer inspection of the cliff they headed down the canyon for the tools. Upon reaching the wagons all was quiet, and the queries of the men regarding the use the crowbars were to be put to were made light of, as it was deemed best not to raise hopes which might be disappointed.

The captain had a bright fire blazing against the cliff as the men returned, and in response to their looks of inquiry he put his hands on the rocks and said:

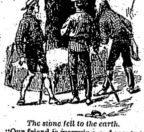
"See this line running here, and up this way, and to the right, and down and back? A great stone has been set in here and cemented in its place. The work was done so long ago that the cement is as hard as the rock and almost the color of it. One of you begin at that side, while I take a hand here."

Ten minutes' work proved what he had asserted—that a large stone had been fitted to an opening—but the work of drilling out the cement was like drilling into the stone itself. When noon came they had made a considerable impression, but fully realized that they had undertaken a laborious task.

The forenoon had passed with those at camp without alarm. The sentinels thought they heard the reports of rifles down the valley, but were not certain. Not an Indian had shown himself, and it was hoped that they had been thrown off the scent and would leave the valley.

From the first the two girls had been drawn to each other, and Lizzie found a deep sympathizer in Bess. When brought into camp by Harkins the poor girl was in a truly forlorn condition, as may be imagined. While she still labored with the grief which choked her every time she thought of the sad fate of her parents, she had been made very presentable in appearance, and more than one of the wagonmen felt his heart beat faster at sight of her sweet, sad face.

As the trio returned to camp from their labors up the canyon, Bess beckoned her father aside and said:



The stone fell to the earth.

"Our friend is worrying and wants to talk with you."

"Yes, I want to ask you about my mother," added Lizzie.

"I am sure I saw father lying on the ground, and have no doubt the renegades killed him as the first part of their plan. Mother and I both got away, and she was not overtaken. What would be her fate?"

"It is hard to say," replied Harkins after reflecting on the matter. "If she got through the night all right she may have found the trail of the wagons in the morning and overtaken the party. We must hope that she did. It may also be that your father was only stunned by the blow, and is ere this all right again and with his friends."

"Do you think there is even the faintest hope?" she tearfully asked.

"I do."

"Thank God for that! I shall almost cease worrying under that hope. And now what of myself?"

"You are to remain with us, of course."

"But for how long?"

"We cannot even guess. We may head back for civilization in a week—perhaps not for three months. It depends on our luck as gold hunters. It is more than likely that some of the party to which you belonged will be encountered soon, and who knows what good news we may receive. You are thrice welcome to all it may be in our power to do for you."

Meanwhile Bess had whisperingly inquired of Joe what chances the mother had of escape.

"God help her—none!" he answered. "She was wild with fear when she ran from the wagon, and she would grow wilder. Before morning came she was a maniac, but I doubt if she lived to see another day."

"Indians?" gasped Bess.

"No—wolves. At that distance from the mountains a man loaded down with firearms could hardly have kept them off all night. Encourage the girl all you can, but don't hope in your own heart that there is one chance in a million that she will ever see her mother again."

As the pair stood together apart Harkins observed them with a start and whispered to himself:

"Well, well, but I do really believe that my Bess has taken a liking to that chap! How queer!"

He might more truthfully have said, "How natural," and he might have used the word "love" for "liking." And when the man looked upon the sweet face of the orphan he had so gallantly rescued at the peril of his life, and felt his heart beating faster, he might have discovered another queer thing—that somebody else had "taken a liking."

The captain had given the men to understand that he was prospecting up the canyon for gold, but had said nothing of the discoveries made. When dinner was finished and the trio were ready to return he renewed his caution about keeping a steady lookout for danger, and ordered that no one was to leave camp on any pretext till his return. Then the three set out for the scene of their labors and began work immediately upon their arrival. They had no fear of their fire being seen or their blows overheard, and men who work to solve a mystery do not tire.

After three hours of hard work the crowbars secured such a grip on the stone that it moved. One united effort would heave it out of the opening. It was then that the captain stepped back and sat down and said:

"Let us take a breathing spell now, and let us prepare ourselves to be disappointed."

"What do you think is behind the stone?" asked Joe.

"A cave of some sort."

"And what shall we find in the cave?" asked Harkins.

"The shriveled bodies of dead Aztecs. That lost race always buried their dead in caves, and when the place would hold no more it was walled up. I have helped to open three or four."

"But why go to all this trouble to open a cave of bone and dust?" petulantly queried Harkins.

"As the Indian of today places the property of the dead warrior beside him that he may have an outfit in the happy land beyond, so the Aztecs placed the wealth of their dead beside them in these caves. I have seen many ornaments of gold and silver which came from such caves."

"Then let us to work!" exclaimed Joe as he seized a bar.

"We shall find a cave of dead if not a cave of gold," added Harkins.

The bars were inserted on the left hand side of the stone, each man drew a long breath and at the word each threw his weight on his lever. The stone trembled, moved forward, hung a moment and then fell to the earth with a heavy thud, and an opening appeared into which a horse could almost have walked.

CURED

THOUSANDS

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which would bring me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 63 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelien, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

Detecting Disease by the Eye.

It is perfectly possible, by means of the instruments of the Nineteenth century, to exactly learn the optical condition of an eye, to decide just what glasses, if any, are needed for its perfect working, and it is also possible to look in upon it, and by the appearance of its tissues and its blood vessels to decide as to the existence of serious disease when there are few other symptoms that point to it, when there may be none besides to be found in the body that positively prove it.

I may mention two classes of disease, one constitutional and the other local, which illustrate this statement. The eye mirror opthalmoscope is the instrument by which such things are settled. Bright's disease, a name carrying dread to many a household, is the constitutional disease to which I refer. In not a few cases the diagnosis of it is made by the examination of the retina with the eye mirror.

The expert will make no mistake if the eye gives evidence of it, for its signs are positive in minute bleeding from the blood vessels and peculiar fawn colored spots on the retina. The surgeon dreads to find them, because they are evidence of an advanced stage of the malady which prematurely destroys so many lives. Bright's disease is in fact a degeneration of many of the tissues of the body, the walls of the arteries being among them. In no part of the body can this degeneration be so readily detected as in the retina of the eye.—Cosmopolitan.

Pure Narcotic Death.

Under chloroform, as under all anæsthetic gases and vapors, there is a mode of death which may be called the final or natural. It need never be produced, and never could be except under the most unskillful management, and it is a long time in its progress. When death does occur in this manner it is by the slow extinction of the natural animal zymosis, and is illustrated, as to method, perfectly by the simple experiment of gradually extinguishing a candle in a confined space by introducing vapor of chloroform into the air that fills the space.

It can be illustrated also by the experiment of stopping ordinary fermentation by the presence of chloroform, and even by the simpler process of using chloroform vapor as a preservative of animal tissues from decomposition. All anæsthetics are open to kill in this manner, but that is the safest anæsthetic which puts out life in no other manner, which does not, that is to say, cause either of the reflexes of spasmodic character during administration.—Asclepiad.

When Jay Gould Was a Boy.

"At one time," said Mr. Woolhiser, who as a boy worked in the same store with Jay Gould, "while Gould was in the employ of Burnham he fell sick. My father, who was a general nurse and something of a doctor, attended him and brought him around all right. Not long after he recovered he met my father and said, 'You saved my life, and if at any time you are in need and I can help you I shall do so with pleasure.' Fortune has not smiled on my poor old father of late, and being in absolute need he wrote to Mr. Gould, telling him of his condition and asking for help. No reply was ever received. I think that our letters never reached Mr. Gould, or he would surely have helped us. I wrote to him only a few days before his death for the fourth or fifth time. Gould was always a good boy, and for awhile we slept together in the same bed in the old store in Roxbury. Jay never missed saying his nightly prayers before retiring."—New York World.

The Number "Three" in the Bible.

When the world was created we find it and its surroundings composed of three elements—air, water and land—the whole lighted by the sun, moon and stars. Adam had three sons mentioned by name, and so did Noah the patriarch. Daniel was thrown into a den with three lions for the crime of praying three times. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego were rescued from the fiery furnace. Job had three special friends. There were three patriarchs—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Samuel was called three times; Elijah prostrated himself three times on the dead body of the child: Samson deceived Delilah three times before she discovered the secret of his great power, and the Ten Commandments were delivered on the third day.

Jonah was three days and nights in the whale's belly. "Simon, lovest thou me?" was repeated three times. Paul makes mention of the Three Graces—Faith, Hope and Charity. The famous allegorical dreams of the baker and butler were to come to pass in three days. Then we have the Holy Trinity—Father, Son and Holy Ghost; the sacred letters on the cross were three in number, they being I. H. S.; so also the famous Roman motto was composed of three words—viz., In hoc signo.—St. Louis Republic.

A Tale of Two Barns.

There was a man named Hibbs who bought a farm, built a large, stately dwelling at the end of a long, shady avenue of maples and settled down to enjoy the comfort and independence of a farmer's life. He built a cozy little barn of logs and shingled it with clapboards.

There was another man of the name of Hubbs who bought a farm in the same neighborhood, built a cozy little dwelling of logs, shingled it with clapboards and settled down to the hard, grinding monotony of a farmer's life. This man Hubbs built a large, stately barn at the end of a long, shady avenue of maples. At the end of ten years Hibbs' big house had broken him up, and Hubbs' big barn had enabled him to buy Hibbs' stately dwelling for about half price and move it over on his own farm.

Hubbs has a big dwelling and a big barn and represents his county in the state legislature. Hibbs has a little log cabin and a little log stable and is trying to sell out to Hubbs. He wants to quit farming and travel with a peddling wagon.—Toronto Mail.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine and twenty hundredths dollars, ($589.20) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Mary E. Smith, an unmarried woman, to George T. Ladd, bearing date the tenth day of August A. D., 1885, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 10th day of August A. D. 1885, at 3:20 o'clock p. m., in book W of mortgages, on pages 277, 278 and 279 therein, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of section twelve in township 151, of range 47, containing 160 acres more or less in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of March A. D. 1893, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage. In case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Order to Examine Accounts.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, special term Jan. 17, 1893. In the matter of the estate of Ole Nelson deceased: On reading and filing the petition of Hanna Nelson, administratrix of the estate of Ole Nelson deceased, representing among other things that she has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of her administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is ordered that said account be examined and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 27th day of February, A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the probate office in the city of Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 17th day of January, A. D. 1893. By the court.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred dollars, ($300.00) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jedire Draper and Alice Mariah Draper, his wife, to The Security Trust Company, a corporation bearing date the 4th day of September, A. D., 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of October, A. D. 1890, at 8.40 o'clock a. m., in book 52 of mortgages, on page 447, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lots fifteen and sixteen (15 and 16) of block eighty-two (82) of Kretzschmar's Addition to Red Lake Falls according to the recorded plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said county, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1893 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 26th, 1893.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of forty-three and thirty-seven hundredths dollars ($43.37) interest now due upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by George Richards (single) mortgagor to The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut mortgagee, bearing date the first day of November 1889 and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the fourteenth day of November 1889 at 9:20 o'clock a. m., in book 48 of mortgages, on page 91.

And whereas the said The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgagee due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and fifty-two and forty-seven hundredths dollars ($652.47) with interest on six hundred and forty-two ($642) dollars thereof at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 19th day of January 1893, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgagee, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼) of section twenty-four (24) of town one hundred and fifty (150) of range forty-two (42) in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the eleventh (11th) day of March, 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of six hundred and fifty-two and forty-seven hundredths dollars ($652.47) and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

A SERIOUS wreck in Illinois came near depriving the state of one of its brightest newspaper men—J. Newton Nind, of the Lumberman, Minneapolis. While severely injured his case is not considered dangerous.

REPRESENTATIVE CHESLEY, of Norman county has introduced a bill—declaring all elevators at terminal points public elevators and to compel the construction of sidetracks to private elevators adjacent to the right of way. Senator Lommen has introduced a similar bill in the senate.

OWING to his private business matters and his duties as Mayor of St. Paul, Col. Fred Wright has resigned his commission as colonel of the Third Regt. state militia. The Col. has hosts of friends in the state who will regret the move. It is thought that Lieut. Col. Shandrew will succeed to the coloneley.

The signs of the times indicate that lots of railroad building will be done in this country next season. President Fisher, of the Duluth & Winnipeg road announces that D. & W. matters are now all arranged so that road will go ahead with its construction in the spring, and it is probable that President Hill, of the Great Northern will push his road from Fosston to Duluth, in which case this country may look for lively times next summer.

THE Hawaiian monarchial government has been overthrown, the queen has been deposed, and a provisional government established. The direct cause of the trouble was an attempt on the part of the Hawaiian queen to promulgate a new constitution, which virtually disfranchised the whites on the island, and gave the queen unlimited power. The white populace rebelled, with the above result, and have also sent a commission to this country asking to have the island annexed to the United States.

AND now the Globe is trying to make out that Governor Nelson is implicated in a pine-land ring having in view the gobbling up of vast quantities of pine-land in Minnesota. The Globe seems to be quite subject to bad dreams, so much so that people are beginning to expect it as a regular occurrence and are surprised if it does not have an attack once in about so often. Meanwhile the governor keeps right on attending to his duties in the interest of all of the people.

GOVERNOR NELSON, despite the views and wishes of some prominent politicans in the state keeps along steadily in the even tenor of his way making only such appointments as in his judgment are for the best interests of the people of the state. It cannot truthfully be said of him that he is trying to build himself up politically by these appointments nor that they are made at the behest of prominent policicans. The JOURNAL is convinced that we have a governor who is running things himself and as near as it can be done in the interest of the people.

THE North Dakota legislature hasn't succeeded in electing a United States senator yet, although the session is more than half over. The republicans have a good working majority, but cannot agree on a man. Neither faction will give in, and the voting is simply horse-play. They have voted for every prominent politician in the state, and now they are voting for prominent ladies. Last Monday Mrs. M. L. McCormack of Grand Forks, received thirty votes. This sport costs the state between $1000 and $1500 per day but when this point is raised it is met with the remark that it is better for the legislature to be doing this than enacting fool laws that cannot be enforced.

A BILL has been prepared by the Red River drainage commission which met in St. Paul last week, and has been introduced in the legislature. It provides for an annual appropriation of $25,000 four years for opening the closed waterways in the northwestern counties of the state. President J. J. Hill of the Great Northern railway has agreed to give $25,000 for this enterprise, provided the state will appropriate $100,000. The bill also provides for the appointment of a commission to consist of the governor of the state, one of the grain and warehouse commission and a person to be named by the Great Northern railway company to take charge of the work. The Great Northern's donation of $25,000 is contemplated in the bill. Among these closed waterways which are to be redeemed are the following rivers: Buffalo, Wild Rice, Sand Hill, Snake and Tamarack, all tributary to the Red river. The valley was surveyed nine years ago at an expense of $7,000 to these counties and the Great Northern road.

The Red River Valley Drainage Commission met in St. Paul last week and drafted a bill asking for an appropriation for $100.000 for drainage purposes. This bill provides for the creation of a commission consisting of the governor one member of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners and one person to be appointed by the Great Northern railroad, whose duty it shall be to take charge of the work that is to be done there. Should the bill become a law, President Hill, of the Great Northern road is to add $25,000 to the amount. The prospects are good for the passage of the bill as all of the representatives from the Valley are united in its favor and the commission feels very sanguine of its success.

A STOCK FAIR.

Next Tuusday evening occurs the annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural & Driving Association in this city. The advisability of holding a county fair this year will come up for discussion, as the members of the association recognize the fact that they must add some other features to their race meetings to make them a success. The July meeting last year was a success, owing to the fact that it was held during the G. A. R. encampment, but the fall meeting was a sad failure, and showed very plainly that there are not enough enthusiasts of the turf in this northern country to make a race meeting a success. Some attractions must be added to get the people to the city, and the question is what will they be? The holding of a stock fair in July has been suggested, and this seems to the JOURNAL as the best plan to adopt. In July the farmers are not very busy, and the weather is generally pleasant. It would have all the features of a fall exhibition except the omission of cereals and vegetables. There is an abundance of good stock in Polk county and an attractive show could be made with live stock alone, but it need no be confined to stock.

Almost every county in the state holds an annual county fair, and while some of them are not a howling success as a financial investment for the stockholders, still they are made to pay expenses, and are always of pecuniary benefit to the place where they are held. Every business man should look at it from the latter standpoint. Everything which benefits his city will benefit him. Our citizens subscribed liberally last year for the encampment, and there is no question but it was money well spent.

It may be a little previous to discuss this matter, but the JOURNAL hopes the association will decide to do something of this kind should the spring prove favorable.

"AMERICAN FARMER" AGAIN.

EUCLID, Jan. 24th, 1893.

EDITORS JOURNAL:—I shall not endeavor to answer your sweeping charges against the people's party in detail. I am not possessed of facts and data, to answer all of them justly. I did not intend to be drawn into a lengthy discussion, but allow me to notice briefly, and in a general way, your reply to my letter in the JOURNAL of last week. I accept your idea that it is only "our methods that are at variance," I agree with you that "your true interest in the prosperity of our local surroundings, is much greater than mine. I have no right, or wish to dictate the management of the JOURNAL, in the least, and you ought not to expect, (as you are one of the managers of the republican party,) to dictate the management of the people's party, which was fairly organized to see that legislation shall be more just to the laboring community, and to protect them from the greed of piratical corporations, millionaires, etc., which the republican party more than any other, has fostered and protected. It seems to me, when you say the people's party is dead, or "in the last throes of dissolution" you are not quite sincere, you really mean that you wish it would die, and your "method" is to kill it, since they will not be bamboozeled around into the republican party, which has been widening the gulf between the rich and the poor, until millionaires are beginning to be looked upon with actual disrespect. My method is to wish them God speed.

You think "Donnelly has never done a good thing for the farmers." Well, he has been a power for good in our legislature ever since you were a little boy, promising and urging the passage of laws that the people's party think, would have benefited the farmers, but of course the two old pluocratic parties have (as Tolliver would say) "been too many for him." But many of those "wild theorics" and "visionary impractical suggestions," will eventually come around, U C.

Do you think that the common people don't know what is good for them, and ought to have a republican guardian appointed over them? It is the easiest way to oppose their suggestions to call them "visionary impractical and wild theories" Donnelly has, in my estimation done more than any one man to arouse the common people to action, to protect our free institutions from usurpation, if it is not already too late. I do not know that Donnelly fused with democrats, I know he did oppose fusion, but it would have been foolish for him to oppose democrats voting the people's party ticket, because it might injure the republicans party boodling schemes. The National Democratic Committee dropped some of their electors, and recommended their party in this state to vote for people's party electors the people's party did not fuse that I know of, none of the people's party candidates were dropped.

The people's party, which seek more just and equitable laws for toilers, is in my opinion pre-eminently the party for the people, and why the majority of the newspaper press oppose them God knows, I can only guess.

You cannot speak too highly of Mr. Owen. He too has done noble work for toilers, and he will have their blessing. If some of our county commissioners have intentionally committed unwise and illegal acts, I hope they will get their come-uppance without regard to party and if guilty ones belong to the people's party, they should be doubly damned. I hope there will be a fair investigation of all their doubtful acts; let no guilty one escape. Malfeasance, in people's party officers at this time, I hold to be a crime, but I know nothing of the merits, or demerits in the case. Whiskey is undoubtedly the greatest evil of the age and I advocate prohibition by all means, but I would not like church to ride into congress upon the shoulders of temperance. I believe after all, that the JOURNAL means well, and if it will throw off its smoked republican glasses, it will see more clearly that the interists of the masses, are not with that party, and the poor need the help of all honest capable men. The rich will take care of themselves. I cherish great respect for the JOURNAL. If I have spoken harshly, it is only intended to apply to methods and principles in general.

AMERICAN FARMER.

Beginning his reply to our arraignment of the leaders (not the rank and file mind you) of the people's party, our friend reveals a condition that we have stated frequently, that he is "not possessed of facts and data" to refute our "sweeping charges." But he should have been; if he is so confident that the people's party is right, he ought to have plenty of evidence for the faith that is within him and be able to clearly demonstrate to his brother farmers wherein they are to be benefitted—for American Farmer is a man who reads a good deal, and studies up all questions affecting the interest of his profession; and if he, with all that advantage is unable to show the benefits of the cause he so ardently advocates, what can be the condition of those who never read for themselves, never think for themselves, and blindly accept what some leader tells them? Can you trust such important interests to such people? He intimates that we are not quite sincere when we say that the people's party is in the throes of dissolution. Well, we are willing to trust that question to the near future and rest our reputation as a political prophet upon it. It does not take much of a politician to see the evidences of dissolution plainly on every hand, prominent among which is the fact that only in a few states has it gained any headway, that in the New England and Middle states, it is almost wholly unknown and many other indications that we will not take the time and space to mention but will appeal to your own strongest party leaders to corroborate our statement. In this state Donnelly and Fish are the acknowledged leaders, and they are engaged in a war to the death. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." In Kansas, where the movement is as strong, if not stronger, than in any other state the leaders are agreed that the movement is in its death throes. Speaking of the fusion of the populists with the democrats, whereby John Martin was elected to the United States Senate Mrs. Lease says:

"This is a death blow to the People's Party, state and national. It will drive 400,000 populists back into the democratic party, and in Kansas, as in the North, thousands will return to the republican party. John Martin's election killed our party, and that is all there is to it.

Speaking of the fusion Mrs. Driggs, another prominent populist leader says:

"The people's party committed suicide in Kansas by the election of John Martin to the senate. Another victory may possibly be gained in this state by fusion and bargaining, but it is a death blow to the national organization. The party has gone to pieces upon this rock!"

In speaking of what Donnelly has done for the farmers you deliberately mix us all up by assuming that we desire nothing good for the farmers because we do not endorse Mr. Donnelly's wild and visionary schemes, which you say will some day triumph. If that day ever should come you would find that Mr. Donnelly has been doing all that he has done for his own aggrandizment—and the farmers would not be in it. We asked you to tell us WHAT THINGS Mr. Donnelly has ever DONE for the benefit of farmers and you utterly dodge the question by replying in a general way that he had been working ever since we were a boy for farmers. What are the facts? Mr. Donnelly has, it is true, done a vast amount of talking in that time. Mr. Donnelly has belonged to every political party in existence in that time and finally made one for himself. Mr. Donnelly has had honors showered down upon him in that time. Mr. Donnelly has become rich in that time—but the farmer—where has he been all that time? Why, while Mr. Donnelly has grown rich and great in that time, the farmer (you say) has grown steadily poorer and Mr. Donnelly—is still TALKING! You have not told us what Mr. Donnelly has done for you, but we will tell you one thing that he has not. We remember that, when W. R. Merriam was governor the farmers complained that the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners was made the stepping stone to Governor Merriam's political ambition, and yet Mr. Donnelly in the Senate voted to confirm every one of his appointments on the board—in fact it has been often said and without contradiction that anything and everything that Gov. Merriam desired Mr. Donnelly voted in favor of and yet Mr. Donnelly was not supposed to represent the same party that Gov. Merriam did. How do you reconcile that? No sir, we do not think the common people need a guardian appointed over them of any political stripe, but we do contend that under such a government as ours they must hoe their own row in politics the same as they do in business—and this principle applies to all alike both common and un-common people. If they neglect their business—whatever it is, their financial interests suffer. If they neglect their primaries, don't take interest enough to attend to them—their political interests must suffer whatever their political name may be. The JOURNAL has always urged farmers to attend their primaries and send such men as they can trust into the conventions, men who will represent their true interests. If the farmers will not do that, scheming politicians will always be found to take advantage of their negligence and this is where a great evil creeps in. No the JOURNAL does not want to see the farmers in leading-strings. It wants to see them independent and prosperous. It wants to see them play their own part in the battle of life and not be dependent upon leaders. We do not agree with you that the people's party LEADERS seek "more just and equitable laws." If they did they would not try to fuse with other parties to secure OFFICES. We have no doubt that the rank and file of the people's party have their eyes fixed upon these things but how they expect to bring them about under their leadership is what puzzles us. The JOURNAL seeks to aid farmers to be self-reliant and does not like to see them blindly trust their all-important interests in the hands of their party leaders as many of them are doing to-day for as sure as fate, disappointment, sooner or later must surely come of it. This idea of holding Donnelly or any other man up as a paragon of perfection, is unworthy the name of any American farmer in free America where all classes are supposed to have equal rights under our government. That is the glory of this government that the poorest and the humblest being in it has an equal voice in its management, but if he allows himself to be cajoled or wheedled out of that right, whom can you blame? In view of its importance to him should he not study up all questions and find "facts and data" sufficient to enable him to exercise his rights under the government? Is he ever going to help himself by allowing himself to be used as the tool of designing men? Do you not really think, 'way down in your heart that if the American Farmer had always exercised his God-given rights in this country, his political condition, his moral condition and his intellectual condition would now be far better than it is? Is there not among some a tendency to allow others to do the work that only ourselves can do and then grumble because it is not done right? You say the rich will take care of themselves. True. How do they do it. By depending on Donnelly? We know of only one rich man who ever made anything that way—Ignatius Donnelly himself, and the fact that he got rich in that way does not seem to benefit the ordinary farmer any although he does—sometimes talk loudly of the ills they endure. Talking of their ills forever does not seem to cure them and it is the cure for them that the JOURNAL earnestly desires to see accomplished. Give us a class of contented, happy and prosperous farmers and this is one of the best countries on earth.

AMONG the many prominent Americans who have passed away lately, there is none whose death has caused such universal regret as that of James G. Blaine, and it may be a long time ere another be found who can secure and maintain such a hold upon the affections of the American people as did the "Plumed Knight." Few men have ever lived who have combined as many qualities of greatness as did Mr. Blaine. As a statesman he was unequalled in his day, as a diplomat he could cope with the shrewdest men of the world. He was a polished orator, a forcible writer and a deep thinker. Above all, he was intensely American, and to this is attributable in a large degree his popularity amongst all classes.

A Manly Stand.

Fergus Falls Journal:—It is more than probable that if Knute Nelson had consented to the defeat of Senator Davis he would have been his successor, an honor which any man under other circumstances might have coveted. But instead of even tacitly consenting to his defeat he has openly advocated and worked for his election. Gov. Nelson on every occasion has taken the stand that Senator Davis' election was as much an issue of the election as his own, and the people having ratified it at the polls it would have disrupted the party to have disregarded its expressed wish. Gov. Nelson has not only been for Senator Davis in public but in private and under every and all circumstances. Until the last ballot not one of the Scandinavian republicans who were regarded to be friendly to Gov. Nelson deserted Senator Davis, and then the one who did it in opposition to Gov. Nelson's wish. He held them in line with this single exception. Senator Davis' friends have recognized this fact and as soon as the result was known Senator Davis' partner walked into Gov. Nelson's office and frankly admitted: "Governor, we owe this election today to you." Gov. Nelson's stand in this matter, when his associates were plotting Senator Davis' defeat has increased his popularity in every corner of the state.

Joseph V. Dory, of Warsaw, Ill., was troubled with rheumatism and tried a number of different remedies, but says none of them seemed to do him any good, but finally he got hold of one that speedily cured him. He was much pleased with it, and felt sure that others similarly afflicted would like to know what the remedy was that cured him. He states for the benefit of the public that it is called Chamberlain's Pain Balm. For sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Jan. 24.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 24.—The house concurrent resolution, calling for an investigation of the operations of the coal combine, caused a good deal of trouble in the senate. Senator Donnelly offered an amendment to limit the expenditure to $500. Senator Day wanted the limit of expenditure raised to $1,000, but was voted down by a vote of 22 to 24. The $500 limit was then adopted and the resolution was passed as amended by a vote of 41 to 4. Donnelly, Dean and Morse were named for the joint committee.

Senator Craven called up his resolution calling for an increase of the committee on municipal corporations. The motion was lost and the senate adjourned.

The house had a busy morning session, but there was nothing of special interest on the programme except the introduction of bills. There were a host of these, but the majority of them were of comparatively little importance. Mr. Bleecker, of Hennepin, introduced two important bills. One of them is to knock out that clause in the standard policies of insurance companies which provides that the company shall not be bound by the action of any agent who has not a written contract. Mr. Bleeckers second bill provides for taking the limitation off railroad tickets and making a ticket good either way between the points of destination.

Majority and minority reports on the ticket scalpers bill were brought in, the majority recommending its passage. It was referred to the judiciary committee for scrutiny.

The speaker announced that the time had arrived to take up the Bidderman-Hinrichs election case, but at the request of Mr. Cairns it was postponed until the same hour on the 27th.

Wednesday, Jan. 25.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 25.—The senate session was a short one, that body adjourning after a sitting of an hour to enable the senators to attend the good roads convention. It was enlivened, however, by the introduction and passage of a memorial to congress, fathered by Senator Donnelly, calling on congress to take possession of the anthracite coal fields and operate them in the interests of the miners and producers of coal.

Senator Dean introduced a bill calling for the appointment by the governor of a commission of three persons to take into consideration the entire subject of taxation and report to the governor by Jan. 1, 1895, some method of making the present tax laws bear uniformly on all the people, or report a new scheme.

Following the introduction of bills an invitation to visit the university was received from President Northrup. On motion of Senator McMillan it was accepted, and next Wednesday, Feb. 1, was set as the day for the visit. The senate then adjourned.

The house received an invitation to visit the state university, and it was decided to accept the invitation for next Wednesday.

The house then went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Cairnes, of Hennepin, in the chair, and on rising several bills of minor importance were recommended to pass.

The speaker announced the appointment of Hopkins and and Kelly, P. H., as additional members of the committee on legislation.

Thursday, Jan. 26.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 26.—Enough legislation was proposed in the senate during the morning to occupy the time of a whole session. There were only six bills, but they cover the widest scope. Senator Brown is of the opinion that we have too much legislation now. His two bills design to wipe from the statute books chapters 144 and 188 of the General Laws of the session of 1887. These chapters are those establishing the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, and providing for the state system of grading and inspection of wheat.

Senator Nelson introduced a bill placing all the express companies of the state under the control of the board of railroad commissioners.

Senator Lommen handed in a bill which is designed to reform the whole manner of handling and inspection of grain. It makes the elevators of Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Cloud and Duluth public warehouses and subject to state supervision.

A second bill from Mr. Lommen is designed to secure a better enforcement of the long and short haul clause.

Senator Wood sent up a bill providing for a reduction of passenger rates to 2¼ cents a mile and freight rates must be reduced 25 per cent. from the figures prevailing on Dec. 31, 1892.

Appointments of D. L. Keihle. Berndt Anderson and Captain Meuhlberg were confirmed. Senator Dedon's bill relating to tax sales was passed.

In the house Mr. Walsh's bill prohibiting indemnity insurance companies doing business in the state was indefinitely postponed. The resolution regarding the coal combine was received from the senate and the $500 limit of cost concurred in.

Mr. Winston introduced a bill for government of cities of the state and dividing them into classes.

A bill similar to one in the senate provides for a reduction in freight rates. Some minor measures were introduced and the house adjourned.

Friday, Jan. 27.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 27.—The house as a body does not favor the idea of having the federal government go into the coal business, and take possession of the anthracite coal fields as eminent domain. They voted down the senate memorial to congress on that subject with a majority that was large and enthusiastic. The vote was a non-partisan one.

There was little else of importance done in the lower branch of the legislature save the introduction of bills, and there were but few of these. Two free text book bills were among the number.

The Biddeman-Henrichs contest case was settled by seating Henrichs. Resolutions were then adopted regarding the death of Mr. Blaine and the house took a recess to 2:30 p. m.

After the introduction of bills, the senate went into committee of the whole, with Senator McMillan in the chair.

The first bill taken up was that of Senator Wood, reducing court reporters' fees for transcription from 15 to 10 cents. The bill was recommended to pass.

The committee arose long enough to receive and concur in the house resolutions with reference to the death of Mr. Blaine, and then settled back into the harness again. On motion of Senator La Due, the world's fair appropriation bill was taken up. The bill calls for an appropriation of $100,000 for the uses of the board, designed to be used in repayment of the money raised by the board by private subscription Before disposing of the matter the committee arose, and senate adjourned to 3 p. m.

Both houses met pursuant to adjournment. Nothing of importance was transacted outside of routine matters, and adjournment was taken to 4 p. m. Monday.

Monday, Jan. 30.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 30.—By meeting at 3 o'clock, while the house had adjourned to an hour later, the upper body found itself with an hour of waiting before it, when President Clough called it to order. So after adopting a resolution offered by Senator Davis to meet with the house in joint session at 4:15 a recess was taken until 4:05. At that hour the senate reassembled and proceeded to the house chamber, where the joint session was held.

The committees of each on the Blaine memorial reported the same, and after its adoption by both houses and the delivery of eulogies by several members, including Senators Donnelly, John Day Smith and H. F. Stevens, adjourned for the day in respect to the memory of the illustrious commoner, whose funeral occurred during the afternoon.

No Change in Montana.

HELENA, Jan. 31.—The Clark and Dixon factions have apparently settled down to a fight to the end of the session. The last ballot showed no change. Sanders received 31 votes, Clark 23, Dixon 11 and Collins 2.

EXPLOITS OF A CROW.

VERY CLEVER INDEED, BUT HE MET AN UNTIMELY DEATH.

Anecdotes by a Man Who Saw Some Strange Things Even Though He Had a Gun—The Crow Disliked Certain Kinds of Animals—He Was a Great Hunter.

"When this region was nearly all woods sixty years ago," said an old resident of Bell Meadow, "I picked a young crow out of the mud in Tamarack swamp, where he had tumbled out of the nest before he was old enough to fly. I named him Abe and tamed him, and he developed into the brightest bird I ever saw. Like all tame crows, Abe was mischievous and inquisitive. There was a knothole in the floor of our cistern, and the crow couldn't find out what was under it, although he tried very hard.

"Several times a day Abe flew down to the creek, hunted up a pebble and carried it in his bill to the floor of the cistern, where he dropped it through the knothole. The instant he let the pebble drop he would put his ear close to the hole and listen. He could hear the pebble strike the water, and the noise out of his sight excited his curiosity so much that he dropped a half bushel of pebbles into the cistern before he gave up.

"Abe accompanied me on all my hunting trips in the fall and winter, and he saw me kill five or six wolves, half a dozen wildcats and several deer. The woods were full of deer, and there were so many wolves that we couldn't keep any sheep. Abe took a great liking to deer and rabbits, but he hated wolves and wildcats, seeming to understand that they were destructive and dangerous. One afternoon, the summer that he was a year old, Abe flew into our little clearing and cawed and fluttered about as if he wanted me to leave my work.

"I knew the crow had seen something that displeased him, and so I picked up two rifles and told him to go ahead, just to see what he would do. He went squalling through the air toward Bell Meadow brook, and when he alighted on a tree he kept yelling and looking down in the ravine. I looked, too, little expecting to see what I did. A pair of wolves were tearing at a doe they had pounced on and pulled down. I killed them both before they got three leaps from the doe, and when Abe saw that they couldn't move he cawed and croaked as though he was glad.

"The next winter there were three feet and a half of snow on the level, and we had to wear snowshoes to get around. While I was splitting wood near the house one cold morning the crow came sailing and squalling to the settlement from the direction of Lake Henry. He was excited about something, and he perched on the log and went to flapping his wings and dancing up and down. I understood him well enough to know that he had seen something that he didn't like the looks of up in the woods toward the lake, so I and my brother and cousin put on our snowshoes, shouldered five loaded rifles and started into the woods, Abe leading the way and yelling.

"He led us to the lake, where we saw a sight that I shall never forget. In a space where the wind had blown the snow from the ice a flock of seven deer had been cornered by a pack of five wolves. The deer couldn't get out on account of the deep snow, and the wolves had killed three of them when we got there. While we were blazing away at the brutes the crow flew overhead and shouted his approval. We killed the whole pack, and Abe felt so good that he rolled over on the crust several times.

"One day in the spring the crow saw a fisher catch a rabbit and carry it to a hole in a basswood tree, thirty feet from the ground. My brother and I were chopping near by, and Abe squalled around till he attracted our attention, when he flew up to the hole where the fisher was concealed. We chopped the basswood down, and the fisher skipped out and ran up a hemlock tree to where the leaves were so thick we couldn't see it. Abe flew up, alighted above the fisher and began to squall, and squinting through the foliage below him I could see enough of the fisher to fire at. I banged away, and down came Mr. Fisher with a bullet in his head. Abe fairly laughed when the fisher tumbled.

"One morning I found six pullets on the floor of the hen shanty. A mink had killed them, and that night I set two steel traps and put one of the pullets between. In the morning a mink had its fore feet in one of the traps and one of its hind feet in the other. Abe tagged me in, and when he saw the mink struggling to get out he ran up in front of it and began to yell in its face. I let the crow torment it, and while my back was turned the mink caught Abe by the neck and bit him so hard that he died in a few minutes."—Cor. New York Tribune.

A Financial Crisis.

"My mother-in-law never understands a joke," says a correspondent. "I finish a good story, and she always looks up and asks, 'Well, what did the other man say?' As she can't appreciate wit, I was surprised to receive a letter from her a few weeks after my little boy had swallowed a farthing, in which the last words were, 'Has Ernest got over his financial difficulties yet?'"—Exchange.

The Work of the Interior Department.

The duties which devolve on the secretary of the interior were performed prior to the establishment of that post by the heads of the other departments. The patent office was attached to the state department, the land office to the treasury department, and the pensions and the Indians had been looked after by the war department.—New York Sun.

The Limit of Population.

Philosophers and statisticians have compared figures and find that the limit of the earth's capacity is 5,294,000,000 human beings; also that this number will be reached before the close of the Twenty-first century.—St. Louis Republic.

Geo. Carpenter returned Thursday from a trip to Lake City, Minn. He reports that the farmers around Lake City are wearing diamonds this year. It is a great hog-raising country, and the price of hogs this year—7 cents per pound live weight—nets the farmer a handsome revenue.

Our great reform board met in session on Monday morning and resumed its labors in the interest(?) of the taxpayers. If they keep on managing the affairs of the county on the same basis as they did the county printing it will not be many years before the average taxpayer will awaken to the fact that there is something decidedly rotten in Denmark. It is a wonder that the dose they got last time did not awaken them—but it did not seem to. P. T. Barnum once said the people like to be humbugged—and this looks like it.

Robert Anderson came over from Grand Forks in Monday evening to attend the board meeting and made this office a pleasant call. Sickness in his family prevented his coming in time for the morning session.

The Box house fire suggests that an examination of all chimneys, where they pass through an attic, would be a good plan. Some houses are so constructed as to render this a difficult thing to do—but should be done nevertheless.

We have known people to make more money in managing their own affairs than in attempting to regulate their neighbor's affairs or in trying to regulate the whole world. "Paddle your own canoe" is a very homely but a very expressive saying.

Dr. Leguee is putting on lots of lugs with the fine team he do be driving about the city. His excuse for this extravagance is that his business requires him to get there right lively sometimes, in critical cases and he can't afford to behind in his professional work. All the same that is a dandy team and Mike is justly proud of 'em.

Three more names added to our list this week encourage us to continue in the work. By the way that reminds us that our list has grown very encouragingly this fall despite the hard times and we shall put forth every endeavor to make the JOURNAL a welcome visitant into every household in the county. Every name added helps us just that much. Let the good work go on.

The employes at the Great Northern depot on Tuesday morning found the body of a man buried in the snow and dragging him through the deep snow into the depot found him to be dead—drunk. He was discovered in the nick of time for in a few minutes more he would have been covered with snow and would without doubt have perished. As it was it was an uncomfortably close call.

Doc. Rutledge remarked, while gazing on the fire Monday: "I tell you that Crookston has a fire department that she may be proud of. The manner in which they handle that fire in 30 below zero weather convinces me of the fact. They amply deserve all the puffing you newspaper boys can give them." Saying which the doctor gravely adjourned to the nearest good place for a smoke.

Tollef J. Farden drove down from Tilden on Monday with a fine span of horses to sell to Supt. Lommen and called at the JOURNAL office for a chat. Says he "reckons that Moe—of the firm of Moe & Buhn, will soon" —but then he told us not to say what, but that we might say that that firm was a pleasant firm to deal with and he thinks that Moe's new house will not long lack a housekeeper.

Halvor Steenerson returned Monday from St. Paul, where he argued the case of Dexter Horton againt the Northern Pacific railway in the United States circuit, court Horton had two fingers taken off last summer on the defendant's road and sued for $10,000 damages. The jury awarded him $7,500, but the judge thought the amount was excessive and cut it down to $2,000. Mr. Steenerson is making a record as an anti-corporation attorney.

It seems to be the opinion of our best informed agriculturists that the high price of pork, of potatoes and of other products must necessarily tend to a better price of wheat in the near future and if these prognostications are true our farmers have every reason to sow their fields next season, in renewed hope. Be it as it may, however, the JOURNAL would not advise a larger average in wheat for whatever may be the effects of gambling in wheat we are of the opinion that heretofore there has been too much wheat raised. Pork and potatoes bid fair to be very profitable products for sometime yet, and stock of all kinds seems to be about to have an innings.

A good sketch of Mr. Blaine's life will be found on another page.

W. J. Murphy and wife, of Minneapolis were registered at the Palace Sunday.

The eight-months old baby boy of Mr. and Mrs. James Simpson died on Sunday.

Judge Benson took off the stays from his injured arm on Saturday and now feels quite like his own self. The Judge says the next time he tries to interfere with a cow in her laudable efforts to hook a cat he will just allow the feline to shift for heself.

Stephen Leader:—Rev. R. H. Battey, late pastor of the First Congregational church of Crookston, delivered sermons to large audiences in the Congregational church at this place last Sunday afternoon and evening. There is some talk of trying to secure his services here permanently.

Willing hands took hold and soon cleared the endangered buildings of furniture, at the Box house fire on Monday, but the greatest damage was incurred by water with which the hotel was thoroughly drenched from cellar to garret. Though the fire had gained good headway before the boys arrived it went out of busines soon after.

Stephen Leader:—From a private letter received from Rev. S. H. Barteau, we see that he is located as pastor of the Congregational church at Lake Charles, La. He says that Lake Charles is the fourth city in size in Lousiana. The land in that part is all prairie but is so poor that it has to have fertilizers to raise anything except rice. He says the climate is delightful there now, but that they intend to return to the north next summer.

Geo. W. Sprague, of Prosper, Filmore county, died suddenly at Big Island, Prince Edwards county, Canada on Sunday. He was there on a visit to relatives and immediately after sitting down at the supper table fell over and expired. His death is attributed to heart failure. Mr. Sprague was one of the founders of the original farmers Alliance in Minnesota, was prominent in the Austin Hail Insurance Company and was well known throughout the state.

Rev. and Mrs. R. H. Battey have been called upon to mourn the loss of their little babe—little Ruth Lois, who died at 7:30 on Sunday morning of a complication of troubles ending in pneumonia. Its brief span of life closed after one year and twenty-seven days on this earth. The funeral services were held at the family residence in this city on Tuesday at 4 o'clock, and on Wednesday evening Mr. Battey started with the remains for Hesper, Iowa, for interment in the family burial ground. The sympathies of many loving friends go out to Mr. and Mrs. Battey in their great bereavement, knowing that He who hath said "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto Me," will be with and comfort them in their bitter trial as no human being has power to do.

About 3 o'clock on Monday the fire department was summoned to attend to a fire in the hotel familiarly known as the Box house. The fire caught from a defective chimney in the old part and had made good headway in the attic before it was discovered. It was owned by Dr. Thomas and fully insured; it was occupied by Mrs. Scherer for hotel purposes. The furniture was nearly all saved. The saloon part was occupied by Fred Reyer and escaped uninjured. The original part facing on Front street, was built by Wm. Stuart early in the seventies, and for several years was run by him as a saloon. In 1878 Wm. Box came up from Wabasha and rented it, eventually buying it and building the extension that reached out nearly to Main street. For some time it was the leading hotel in Crookston. When Mr. Box left it Wm. Heidrich rented it and run it until a year or so ago, when he went out to his farm and since then several parties have had possession. Last summer Dr. J. H. Thomas bought the property and has been talking of tearing down the old buildings and building a brick block upon the site. The hotel part was so badly burned as to be of no further use and will now have to be removed probably. Despite the cold weather the department did noble work and again has a serious fire missed us through the efficiency of our fire department.

A Card of Thanks.

I desire in this public manner to express my heartfelt thanks to all those who by little acts of kindness showed their sympathy to me and mine during our recent severe trials in the sickness and death of my wife.

Tuesday will pass for the most stormy day of the winter so far. A light fleecy snow-fall, assisted by high winds made merry all day and rendered our streets all but impassable. It must have been wild and woolly out on the prairie.

Mrs. George Holden came over from Dakota to see her sick sister, Mrs. John Alderman bringing her child with her. The child was taken down with croup and died on Monday about 4 o'clock. Mr. Holden will be remembered by some of our readers as having once been a resident of Crookston.

It seems that the JOURNAL was in error as to the time of Maj. Stansbury's death last week. Our informant was V. D. Carruth, commander of the Post who had seen a telegram to that effect. It seems that the Major lived until Friday the 27th. He was buried on Sunday last from the residence of his sister, Mrs. R. B. Galusha, in St. Paul.

The entertainment given by the Women's Relief Corps, at the opera house on Thursday of last week was well attended, and if the management had seen fit to have had the house warm enough to be comfortable would have been quite enjoyable though the performance was not up to what people had been led to expect. The ladies' quartette singing was very fair even though hardly a word they said could be distinguished. Will Johnson, a local singer of some note, was encored repeatedly and responded several times. He has a good voice and speaks his words distinctly. The ladies of the Relief Corps had worked hard to make the entertainment a success and were not to blame for any of its shortcomings.

Mr. Albert Favorite, of Arkansas City, Kan., wishes to give our readers the benefit of his experience with colds. He says: "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly recovered from it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I would never get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen years ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. When I had got through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or a cold since. I have recommended it to others, and all speak well of it." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

To Play Musical Whist.

In these days when it is the fashion to understand and study whist, it is interesting to know that as a novelty for a bazar the game has been introduced as "Musical whist with living cards." Four players are seated upon raised seats; a large, square cloth on the floor or on a platform or stage forms the card table. The cards are represented by persons in appropriate costumes, and the gowns for the court cards may be very original. The clubs usually wear gray and white, the emblems being in black velvet, and have crowns of silver gray and jet. Hearts wear a pretty shade of green, with white, and the emblems are in red. Spades are in pink with black velvet emblems; diamonds in yellow, with deep red. The parts of the smaller cards may be taken by children in gowns of cream white and mob caps, the cards being indicated in large characters on the front of their dresses, or they may carry an immense card, two feet in length and hung over the shoulders, hanging in shield fashion in front, on which are the spots of the card, and a card should hang at the back also and display the ordinary kind of a card back.

The cards enter to the music of a march, and are preceded by two little pages clad in slashed satin suits, capes with ostrich tips, and carrying wands of silver. Shuffling, cutting and dealing are shown by a dance, and the cards then arrange themselves in front of their respective players. Each player indicates in turn the card to advance to the center, with musical accompaniment. The winning card of each trick leads the others to one corner of the square, where they form in file, and so on, closing up when six tricks are made on either side. At the conclusion of the game the tricks of the winning side lead off in triumph those of the losing side.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Unconscious Feminine Cruelty.

"Let me off at Thirteenth street, conductor," said a woman as she paid her fare on a Broadway car at Cortlandt street.

The car was packed, the place just two miles away and the woman a New Yorker. From 50 to 100 people would get on and off, half a hundred stops were to be made and something like a half to three-quarters of an hour would be consumed before reaching Thirteenth street.

Yet this woman, who bore evidences of more than ordinary intelligence in her face and from her easy self assurance every indication of being able to take care of herself, expected the conductor to remember her request and to put her off at the right street.

The Broadway conductors are the hardest worked, most abused and criticised railroad officials in this city, but this is the sort of thing they are called upon to endure every hour in the day. It is usually at the hands of women, and is unnecessary, foolish and cruelly inconsiderate.—New York Herald.

Modern Matrimony.

Jones (calling on Smith in the evening)—I thought I would find you at home. You don't go out much at night now?

Smith—No. I've given up all my clubs and societies. I should be glad to have you come up and spend an evening with me occasionally.

Jones—But your wife might think me in the way.

Smith—Oh, she's never home at night till late. Tonight she's at a meeting of the Ladies' Society for Supplying Thimbles to the Destitute Poor. Tomorrow night she goes to the Queen's Daughters, next night to the sociable of the Royal Women, and so on every night. Come up and see a fellow. It's awfully lonely to be married, I can tell you.—New York Press.

As Good as He Gave.

A reproof which was just and not discourteous was once addressed to a young rector who had been reared under the highest of church doctrines, and who held that clergymen of all other denominations are without authority and not entitled to be called ministers of the Gospel. One evening at a social gathering he was introduced to a Baptist clergyman. He greeted the elder man with much manner and ostentation.

"Sir," he said, "I am glad to shake hands with you as a gentleman, though I cannot admit that you are a clergyman." There was a moment's pause, and then the other said, with a quiet significance that made the words he left unsaid emphatic, "Sir, I am glad to shake hands with you—as a clergyman."—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Study of Philately.

Philately is a study. It is a pursuit that adds more to the life of the young collector than any other of his pleasures. Philately in the present generation is assuming vast proportions as an instructive science and is even now a formidable rival of numismatics. No longer is it called a mania or a craze, but a science teaching the geography, history, language and the morals of a country. Our philatelists are not mere schoolboys and girls, although they collect stamps, but men of mature minds—men well established in business and professions, men of sound judgment, intellectual and thoughtful men. And it is this fact that gives the young collector encouragement, the knowledge that such men do exist in the ranks of philatelists.—Ohio State Journal.

The Toledo Weekly Blade.

The most popular and best known weekly newspaper printed in this country is the Toledo Blade. For more than twenty years it has had a circulation of 100,000 to 200,000 going regularly into every state and territory of the Union. From fifteen to twenty-five tons of print paper is consumed in each week's edition and it is regularly mailed to more than half the postoffices of the United States. It is made to interest every member of the family. Besides all the news of the world, it has Serial and Short Stories, Wit and Humor, Farm, Young Folks, Poultry, Puzzles, Household, Etc. As a special feature for 1893. Mr. Locke, editor and proprietor of the Blade, has just sailed for Japan, and will contribute a series of illustrated letters on the manners and customs of that peculiar country and its people. These articles will be commenced sometime in February or March and will be worth many times the subscription price. Every reader of this paper is invited to send for a specimen copy. Subscription price of the Blade, one dollar a year. Five dollars in cash will be paid to any person sending in a small club of subscribers. Write for agents' terms, giving particulars. Address, "The Blade," Toledo, Ohio.

A Great Seed Establishment

We are in receipt of a seed catalogue for 1893, published by F. B. Mills, Seedsman, Rose Hill, N. Y. Mr. Mills has a very novel idea in getting up his catalogue. It is very plain, and his idea is to give his customers a very large amount for their money.

His seeds are becoming known everywhere for their excellent quality and Mr. Mills guarantees to please all his customers. After looking this catalogue all through we would advice our readers to write for one at once, for it is to free any applying, and try some of his seeds this spring.

A COUNTY FAIR

Third Annual Meeting of the N. M. Agricultural and Driving Association.

New Directors and Officers Elected for the Ensuing Year—The Secretary's Report.

It was Decided to Hold an Agricultural Fair During the Coming Summer or Fall.

The third annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association was held in the city hall, Crookston, on Monday evening, Feb. 6, 1893. President Alex. McKinnon occupied the chair.

The report of Secretary Wyatt was read, showing that while the association has an outstanding indebtedness of $1,150.86, the assets amount to $12,503.72. There are 82 stockholders who own 172 shares of stock. Each $10 share of stock, considering the assets—which are in ground, track and buildings—is worth $67.93 over and above liabilities. Considering the drawbacks which the association has had to contend with, this is a very flattering condition and shows that if the association had the support it should have it would be one of the best paying institutions in the country. And while speaking about the secretary's report it will not be out of place to say a word about the secretary. Mr. Wyatt has shown that he is the right man in the right place. He is an enthusiastic worker for the association, and has given a great deal of his time to make it a success. His books are kept in good shape and his last report is a model of neatness and correctness.

After the reading of the secretary's report a new board of directors was elected, consisting of the following gentlemen: Hugh Thompson, E. M. Walsh, J. E. O'Brien, E. M. Lancaster, S. L. Collins, Archie McKinnon and R. B. Vining.

The board elected their officers for the ensuing year as follows:

President—Hugh Thompson.
Vice-president—R. B. Vining.
Secretary—J. V. E. Wyatt.
Treasurer—J. E. O'Brien.

Alex. McKinnon in retiring from the presidency thanked the association for their hearty co-operation and hoped the association would go right ahead with the good work already begun.

President Thompson on assuming the chair, said that he would accept the office for one year only, and would endeavor to make the organization successful in every way. He then announced that a number of farmers had been invited to attend this meeting and express their opinions as to the advisability of holding an agricultural fair in connection with the race meetings, but they had failed to put in an appearance.

Mr. Geo. M. Swift, who was present, was asked for an opinion on the subject. He thought an agricultural fair the proper thing, and the fall of the year the proper time to hold it, and was quite confident it could be made a success.

Mr. Thos. Johnstone of Fisher, who is interested in importing horses, and is well acquainted with the resources of the county in the way of stock, was asked to advance his ideas on the fair question. "Tommy" then addressed the meeting and gave many practical suggestions. He showed himself to be thoroughly familiar with the workings of agricultural fairs and the best means of making them a success. One of the points which he made—and it was a good one—was that liberal premiums should be given for stock exhibits and less money for races. For instance, where a man had a $2,000 horse and had spent a great deal of time and labor fitting him for exhibition, he could not afford to bring him to town and compete for a paltry purse, neither could the man who had a draught team of horses afford to let them be idle for a while before the fair to put them in condition, and then compete for a purse not big enough to pay his expenses at the fair. Mr. Johnstone favored a fair in the summer months when the farmers were not very busy. A fall exhibition is more successful in the east, where the farmers have less fall plowing and threshing to do than they have out here. The speaker was heartily applauded for his little "spiel," and it is safe to say that every member of the association caught a little of Mr. Johnstone's enthusiasm.

Dr. Warninger and Archie McKinnon also spoke in favor of holding a fair, and it was then resolved to hold a fair this year, and the secretary was instructed to solicit the opinions of the principal stockmen throughout the county as to the best time for holding the fair.

The board of directors is a good one—every member being a worker—and if the fair is not a success it will not be their fault. The next meeting of the board will be held at E. M. Walsh's office on Wednesday, March 1st. In the meantime anyone having any suggestions to make should write to Secretary Wyatt, Crookston.

An Honest Ballot.

In another column of the JOURNAL will be found a statement of the Rhinehart election case. In that decision the Judge denounces in the strongest terms the conduct of the election officers in the town of Grand Forks and states the penalty for such violations to be a fine of $1000 and two years in the penitentiary.

There were gross violations of the election laws in many towns last fall which must not occur again. Mr. Rhinehart and his attorneys have done good service in exposing this matter. The different political parties should before the next election unite in their efforts to induce election officers to strictly obey and enforce the law. Freedom and secrecy to the voter is intended, that he may by his vote express his honest conviction.

Due in Ninety Days.

The writer once knew a farmer who was an inveterate borrower. He inherited from his parents a magnificent farm, which was ere long devoured by mortgages. When making the rounds of the money-lenders, his query invariably was: "Mr.—, have you any money to loan for thirty, sixty or ninety days?" Poo devil! Ninety days looked far off when he was borrowing, but the thirty days before maturity flew away with frightful rapidity. Only about ninety days until the opening of the World's Fair at Chicago. Are you getting ready to go? If you are, possibly a few notes about it may interest you. The estimated cost is about $20,000,000. The grounds are at Jackson Park and Midway Plaisance, in the southeastern part of Chicago, and on the lake shore. The Exposition will open May 1st., and continue until October 31st. The countries that have already aroused to participate are Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, Argentine Republic, Denmark, Cuba, Algeria, Peru, and many others. To have a satisfactory visit to the exposition, you should arrange to stay several days, and two weeks would not be too long a time, even to take a cursory view of the thousands of objects of interest to be seen. In making your preparations do not forget to make sure that your railroad ticket to and from Chicago reads via the Burlington Route. Your home ticket agent can sell you one—but if he cannot, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent. St. Paul, Minn.

Red Wing Republican:—The Fergus Falls Journal thinks if Gov. Nelson had consented to the defeat of Senator Davis he might have been senator himself. That is almost certain. But there is once in a while a man, still, who prefer honor to any office, and we are not surprised to find that Knute Nelson continues to be such a man.

Fergus Falls Journal:—A St. Paul man well informed as to democratic politics, informs the Journal that democrats who are applicants for office in the Seventh congressional district will do well to get Mr. W. F. Kelso's O. K. on their papers before presenting them to Mr. Cleveland. The old style of "Me and Mike" will not go this year but the democratic candidates for congress whether elected or defeated will have the say about the appointments, in their respective districts. This is as it should be.

ANDERSON OUT.

The Contest Case of Rhinehart vs. Anderson Decided in Favor of the Former.

Judge Ives Finds That There Were Irregularities in the Election in the Town of Grand Forks,

And the Vote in Said Town Was Thrown Out, Thus Seating Rhinehart as Commissioner.

Rhinehart vs. Anderson.

An important case has just been decided by Judge Ives. Important not only for its political bearing but from the fact that it was the first election contest tried in this county, and is an adjudication by the district court of the effect of our new election law and decides that many of its provisions are mandatory.

The facts are, Rhinehart and Anderson were candidates for election to the office of county commissioner, for the fifth commissioner district of Polk county. This is the East Grand Forks district. Mr. Anderson was the populist candidate. The county canvassing board declared Anderson elected by 11 plurality. Mr. Rhinehart thought the election in some of the towns was not fair and employed Messrs. Montague & Bucklen as his attorneys and directed them to contest the election.

The case was decided in favor of Rhinehart, declaring him to be legally elected, and throwing out the fifty-one votes cast in the town of Grand Forks for fraud, irregularities and violations of the law in conducting the election in that town.

It was found that 8 votes for Rhinehart were through error of the county canvassing board omitted from their returns.

That Anderson acted as clerk of election in the town of Grand Forks, helped to canvass the vote and carried in the returns to the county auditor. That he canvassed for votes for himself in the polling room.

That his brother-in-law and nephew were allowed to go into the booths with at least three or four different voters and there assist and instruct voters in marking their tickets without any of the judges being present and without the voters being sworn that they needed such assistance. The returns from that town showed only one vote for Rhinehart while two men swore on the trial that they voted therein for Rhinehart.

The decision seats Rhinehart and unseats Anderson.

The judge decides the sections of the election law as to preventing canvassing in the polling room, or booths and as to the fact that no one shall be allowed in the booths with the voters except as provided by law and the ballots shall be marked as the law provides, must be observed strictly or the election is void.

Mr. Rhinehart is on the Red Lake Reservation, in the employ of the United States. He was not present at the trial and has not heard of the decision. He no doubt felt sure that he had a good case and that it was safe in the hands of his attorneys, Montague & Bucklen.

RUM AND ROADS.

A Scheme to Make the First Build Up the Latter.

St. Paul Pioneer Press.

"Build good roads from the profits of the liquor traffic," is the central idea of Capt. H. W. Donaldson's plan for killing two birds with one stone. Capt. Donaldson is a delegate from Kittson county to the good roads convention, and his plan is the result of considerable thought over the remedies for the two evils.

The captain's argument in favor of his plan depends upon what he considers two maxims of practical government: We need a reformation of the liquor traffic, and we need better roads and drainage. He proposes to fill both needs by one law, which, theoretically at least, will wipe out many of the evils of the liquor traffic and will result in excellent roads. Both objects are to be accomplished without expense to the community at large and to the pecuniary profit of everybody, including those who patronize saloons.

His suggestions for putting the plan into operation are few and very pointed. It is that the legislature pass a law centering the sale of all intoxicating beverages in the hands of the county commissioners of the smaller counties, those having a population under 10,000 or 15,000. These are the agricultural counties and those which suffer most from the selling of liquor and from bad roads. The counties to which the law would be applicable are to decide by popular vote whether they will avail themselves of the provisions of the law. In the counties adopting the law the county commissioners will refuse a license to sell liquor to all private individuals, but will open and operate such saloons as the commissioners think are required by the people. These saloons will be conducted by agents of the board of commissioners, who will be employed and paid a fixed salary. The saloons are to be conducted on business principles, that is to make money, but the profits arising are to go to the county, and to be placed in a fund to be used for building roads and for draining the county.

Capt. Donaldson claims that the practical operation of the proposed system will be all that can be desired by those urging a reformation of the liquor traffic by those advocating better roads. He predicts that the sale of liquor by persons not immediately interested in the profits of the business will tend to a better enforcement of the existing laws. Minors, intoxicated persons and habitual drunkards will not be able to procure liquor. The saloons will cease to be the rendezvous of loafers, and the law regarding the hours of closing will be observed. All gambling devices will be excluded from the saloons, and the habit of playing games of chance or skill for drinks will receive its death blow.

Of the other feature of the system Capt. Donaldson is very sanguine. He estimates that the profits of the business will be sufficient to give all the good roads needed. In fact that in a few years the roads will be improved to such an extent and the drainage of the level counties will be so much better that the value of land will be much higher. He said: "I think we would add $1,000 to the value of every quarter section in Kittson county. Our county would adopt the plan by the vote of 90 per cent. of our citizens, and we would make such a success of the law that the other counties would be glad to try it."

This is Meant for you.

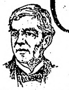
It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medecine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its merits and its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in greater or small degrees, they certainly mean to include you.

IT WAS A GREAT YEAR

LINCOLN, TENNYSON AND GLADSTONE WERE BORN IN 1809.

Interesting Reminiscences Told by Contemporaries of the Great Emancipator. Side Lights on Lincoln's Character—His Native Wit and Rugged Honesty.

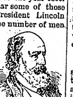
[Copyright, 1893, by American Press Association.]



OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES reading the dispatch announcing the death of Tennyson, said: "Only Gladstone is left of the great men born in the year 1809. Lincoln, Gladstone and Tennyson, who were of the same age, were geniuses as great as the world has ever seen, and each of them will be remembered as long as the English language is spoken or read."

It is a little strange that this same thought should have occurred to others as distinguished as Dr. Holmes, for the English newspapers and some of the English statesmen, in speaking of Tennyson's life, saw fit to couple his name with that of Lincoln and of Gladstone as those of men who were the choicest gift to the human race of the year 1809.

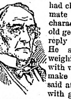
During the past year some of those who were close to President Lincoln have died, and of all the number of men who were conspicuous with the politics with which he was so pre-eminently associated perhaps only William M. Evarts and David Dudley Field are left. Field had gained fame while Lincoln was an awkward legislator in the Illinois house, giving but slight hint of those powers which made his career what it was. Evarts had won such repute as rejoices the lawyer's heart while Lincoln was an obscure—and by many deemed almost clownish—member of the national house of representatives.



TENNYSON.

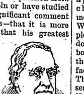
George William Curtis, who came to have profound admiration for Lincoln, and who in the convention that nominated the rail splitter made a speech having genuine eloquence in it, which gave him fame throughout the land, having died within the past year, Mr. Evarts alone is left of those men who were mighty warriors upon that historic occasion.

Two years ago the writer, meeting Hannibal Hamlin on the occasion of his last public appearance, at the dinner of the Lincoln club in New York city, asked that venerable statesman if, in his old age, as he reviewed his association with Mr. Lincoln as vice president, he had changed his estimate of Lincoln's character at all. The old gentleman did not reply on the instant. He seemed to be weighing the words with which he should make answer, but he said at last, speaking with great solemnity of manner: "Yes, I have changed my opinion. I always regarded Lincoln as a good man and an able man, but in these days of my retirement, as I look back upon my acquaintance with him, I see him as not only a good and an able man, but as the purest, the most unselfish, and, all things considered, the ablest man our country has produced since it was established." And that message was almost the last characterization of Lincoln which Mr. Hamlin made, for he died a few months later.



GLADSTONE.

If one seeks today an impression from men who knew Lincoln or have studied his life, the most significant comment which is made is this—that it is more and more realized that his greatest power perhaps was his mastery over great men, and the astonishment which this understanding gives is that an obscure man, one who had no advantages, whose life was circumscribed by a little prairie town, who had no schooling, scarcely any intercourse with the great men of his day before he became president, who was timid, diffident and in some respects painfully modest, should nevertheless when he came in contact with the greatest men of the land, have subordinated them to his purposes and compelled them to acknowledge his intellectual power and his superior judgment. It has been possible to obtain some anecdotes which, if they are not new, have not been widely circulated, and which illustrate this pre-eminent quality of Abraham Lincoln.



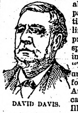
HANNIBAL HAMLIN.

His Political Mastery.

David Davis, who was one of Lincoln's earliest friends, and was perhaps the first to predict for him the probability of a great career, once said to the writer: "I believe that as time passes and Mr. Lincoln's life is impartially studied he will be esteemed as the ablest politician that political life in the United States has developed. Yet he was not a politician in the ordinary sense.

"Mr. Lincoln never managed a caucus, never urged a candidate for office, never pulled a wire, never created a following or machine, and he had little patience or understanding when such things were discussed in his presence. Yet he had a wider knowledge of the effect of moral influences upon masses and a deeper understanding of the power of moral and intellectual impulse as a political agent than any other man of his time. This was shown in two cases, which, as I look back now, convince me that he expected to be a candidate for the presidency and did what he did in these two cases as a part of his plan for obtaining the nomination and election."

Judge Davis then went on to say that Lincoln realized what nobody else at that time seemed to understand—that a seat in the senate was an almost insuperable obstacle in the path of presidential ambition. Conkling afterward expressed that idea in a speech in the senate, in which he said, "The senate breeds unhealthy candidates for the presidency." An exciting political canvass took place in Illinois early in Buchanan's administration. It was understood that if the party of which Mr. Lincoln was a member carried the state legislature his friends would bring him forward as a candidate for the senate. He made the canvass with that understanding. An element in the party, perhaps the cultured and wealthier element, favored Lyman Trumbull.

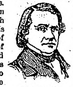


DAVID DAVIS.

The election so resulted that it was possible to choose as United States senator a member of the Republican party, and to the astonishment of Mr. Lincoln's friends he withdrew and urged the selection of Mr. Trumbull, who was chosen. Lincoln's friends were amazed. They wondered why he should thus lightly turn his face away from one of the most dazzling prizes of politics. But years afterward they had reason to suspect that Mr. Lincoln realized that with Lyman Trumbull in the senate his most formidable competitor for the presidential nomination, at least in Illinois, would be beyond the power of doing his own ambition injury.

"He Never Can Be President."

Two years later Mr. Lincoln again did something which seemed to his friends then a grievous mistake, but which they afterward perceived was a stroke of politics such as would be suggested only by pre-eminent genius. He was carrying on that debate with Stephen A. Douglas which is now one of the great traditions of politics. He prepared a series of questions which he proposed to ask Douglas on the stump. He permitted some of his friends to cast their eyes over these interrogations, and they said to him, "Don't ask him this question, Mr. Lincoln, because if you do he will answer it in such a way as to make his re-election to the senate certain."



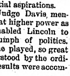
DOUGLAS.

"Ah!" replied Lincoln, with a twinkle in his eye. "Yes, that is true, but if he takes that shoot he never can be president." The friends who heard this were amazed that Lincoln should be willing thus to let Douglas defeat him for the senate, but they perceived afterward that Lincoln was entirely willing to let Douglas resume his oratorical flights in the senate if thereby he would be able to defeat his presidential aspirations.

These anecdotes Judge Davis mentioned to illustrate that higher power as a politician which enabled Lincoln to win the greatest triumph of politics. It was a great game he played, so great that it was not understood by the ordinary politician until results were accomplished.

The "Skeered" Merchants.

Chauncey M. Depew tells a story of Lincoln which illustrates this quality which enabled him to appear at ease, and also to demonstrate his mastery when in the presence of great men. It was at the time that the ironclad Merrimac was being built. The story was that she should sail upon the ocean and into the harbor of New York and either bombard the city or exact enormous tribute. A committee of New York merchants appointed by the chamber of commerce was sent to Washington to implore Mr. Lincoln to do something to protect New York harbor. He received them courteously, but there was a very grave expression on his face as he listened to the spokesman. That man said: "Mr. Lincoln, we represent hundreds of millions of property. New York is practically defenseless. If the Merrimac comes into our harbor, it can ruin us, and we implore you at once to take measures to give us defense."

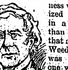


C. M. DEPEW.

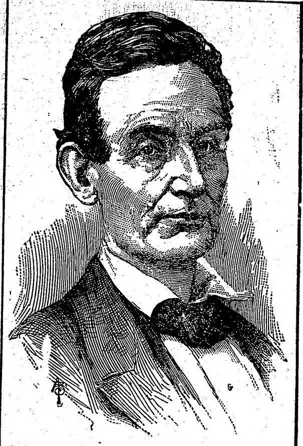
For a minute or two Mr. Lincoln did not reply. He knew the government was straining every nerve to prevent depredations by the Merrimac. It could do nothing more. It seemed for an instant as though there were a suggestion of anger in his glance, but if he had that impulse he subdued it. That quaint smile which anticipated a humorous story came to his face, and he said: "Well, gentlemen, I think if I had as many millions at peril as you say you have, and I was as 'skeered' as you seem to be about the coming of the Merrimac, instead of coming down here and making speeches about it I would go home and spend some of those millions in making defenses myself." And that was all he said to them. The New York merchants were amazed, and yet as they went away they confessed that common sense was in his humorous advice, and they also confessed their sense of the mastery of this man.

His Simplicity at Great Moments.

Thurlow Weed in his old age was full of anecdotes which he was fond of telling to illustrate that simplicity of greatness which characterized Lincoln perhaps in a higher degree than any other man that astute politician, Weed, ever met. Weed was fond of telling one which suggested strikingly that quality of simplicity. On the day that the Chicago convention nominated Lincoln, he went to the office of the local newspaper in Springfield and sat there with his friends, his long legs extended and supported by a chair, his manner cooler than that of any man in the room, while he chatted and told stories with such delicious abandon as would have suggested that he was the least concerned of any man in the United States in the mighty events at Chicago.



THURLOW WEED.



A telegraph operator while this chatting was going on wrote upon a slip of paper a message which had just been ticked over the wire. These were the words, "Mr. Lincoln, you have just been nominated for president." Lincoln took the slip, unfolded it, read it through slowly and then passed it to some of his friends. They arose to congratulate him, and after a moment he said, "There is a little woman down at my house who I think would be glad to hear this news, and I guess I'll go and tell her." And with that informality and strange simplicity he carried the message to his wife.

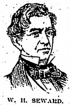
W. M. EVARTS.

Weed Meets His Match.

"I learned this story a few days later, when I went to Springfield," said Mr. Weed while chatting one evening. "After Lincoln was nominated I was so greatly disappointed that I first thought of making a trip to the far west. Then I hesitated. I said: 'I should like to see this man who has been brought up on the prairies of Illinois, and who has beaten our idol, Seward. I should like to fathom him and find out how much the party has got to fear for its success in his candidacy.' So I decided to go to Springfield and spend a few hours with the candidate. I had no doubt at all that after an hour's chat with him I could read him through like a book. I had never met a man before out of whom I was not able to pump the mysteries of his character.

"Well, I went to Springfield and was received very cordially by Mr. Lincoln. I began to talk with him and to ask him questions. I spent two hours with him, and when I came away I said to myself, 'Thurlow Weed, that is the first man you have ever met who was too much for you.' He pumped everything out of me, and I got nothing in return.

"Well, I went away and told my friends that there was one thing they need not have any fears about. This man, if he was bred in a country town, knew enough to keep his own counsels, and they might be sure that he would say or do nothing during the campaign that would imperil the canvass. I knew that if I could not handle him it was not likely that any other politician in our party would be able to do so. His self reliance, his intellectual quickness and his insight into other men's motives were something marvelous, and I was ready to admit that the party had made no mistake in selecting this man whom we thought a green countryman as its candidate.



W. H. SEWARD.

"After his election I went to see him again to talk with him about his cabinet and his measures. He then told me that he expected to ask Mr. Seward to become secretary of state and Mr. Chase secretary of the treasury. But that was all the positive information I could get out of him. I saw that he understood the public men of the country just as well as I did, although most of them he had never seen. He had an understanding of men's character as intuitive as a woman's. He played with me, and that was a new experience, for I had been accustomed to play with others, and I realized that this man was the master of the politicians in his party."

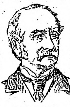
At the Head of the Table.

Mr. Weed used to tell the story of how Mr. Lincoln demonstrated to his cabinet that where he sat was the head of the table. When his cabinet met there was no man of them who had not been more conspicuous than Lincoln up to the time of his nomination. There was Seward, the idol of the Whigs and the eastern Republicans, a very great man. There was Chase, of commanding intellect: there were Cameron and Blair and Bates, all of them justly esteemed great men, and there is no doubt that each of them expected to dominate this man who was their president. Such at least was Mr. Weed's opinion.

"Seward tried it first," said Weed, "and no one else followed his example. He brought into the cabinet with him a paper in which he had set forth a certain policy which he thought Lincoln ought to pursue, and in which he in effect informed Lincoln that he would take it upon himself to see that policy carried out. It was a test moment. Had Lincoln yielded his cabinet would have been his master, but with a queer mannerism—half humorous, half serious—he read the paper through, struck out Mr. Seward's recommendations, thanked him for his consideration, and in that moment and motion this assembly of great men realized that the obscure lawyer was to be president not only in name, but in fact. Never did a ruler so completely and yet so gently master his cabinet or council."

The New York Bankers and Lincoln.

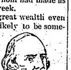
Mr. George S. Coe, one of the great bankers of New York, in speaking of Lincoln not long ago, said that his capacity to suggest without offense his mastery over men and measures was strikingly demonstrated to a representative body of New York bankers early in Lincoln's administration. These bankers had, after a secret meeting in which Secretary Chase had most earnestly and anxiously declared that the need of the federal government was not men, but money—gold to pay the expenses necessary to arm and equip and feed the soldiers—agreed to raise $50,000,000 in gold and lend it to the government, and when they did this Lincoln said that it was equal in its moral effect to the raising of an army of 500,000 men. Then they raised another $50,000,000, and for the third time did the same thing. Lincoln therefore had a very cordial regard for these New York bankers and never tired of speaking in words of praise of these things which they had done.



D. D. FIELD.

Something occurred in congress or else some financial measure was under consideration which did not meet the views of the New York bankers. They wanted a change in the law, and they regarded it as of vital interest that Mr. Lincoln's support should be given to their views. So they named a committee, and there were men upon it who had the power of raising millions, and who had won great fame for achievements that they had made as bankers. They went to Washington. Lincoln received them in his library. He had never earned over $3,000 a year. He was only worth when he took the presidency about $4,000 in cash and his house in Springfield, worth about $4,000 more. He had said a year before that if he could gain a fortune of $20,000 he would be content, for it would be sufficient for his old age, and he was now in the presence of men some of whom had made as much as $20,000 in a week.

In the presence of great wealth even great politicians are likely to be somewhat subdued in manner. Lincoln was as easy with these men as though they had been chums of his in his old law office in Springfield. He swung his long legs over the arms of his chair and then asked them to state their mission. He heard them patiently as they talked learnedly of stocks and bonds and markets and credits. After they were all through and were awaiting his answer, he arose and with some seriousness of manner said:



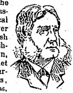
WENDELL PHILLIPS.

"Gentlemen, ever since I have come into this office I have heard a great deal about feenance. Men come here and talk to me by the hour about feenance and about feenancial policy. I hear one side and then I hear the other, just as I have heard you this morning, and now I'll tell you what my conclusion is. I don't understand anything about this matter of feenance, and I don't think anybody else does either. Chase says he does. You'd better go and talk with him. But if you get talking feenance with him or with congress you're going to get all mixed up. This country is rich enough to pay all our bills, and to pay back with interest the money that we borrow, and that is my feenancial creed."

Thus he dismissed the bankers, and while they thought his doctrine crude, yet they admitted that it was in essence sound.

What Wendell Phillips Said.

Wendell Phillips, agitator, imprecator and possessed of the most dazzling and fascinating rhetorical eloquence that ever graced the English tongue, went to Washington to see Lincoln, and coming home met George William Curtis. Said Curtis, "Well, Mr. Phillips, what do you think of Lincoln?" "I'll tell you, Curtis. Lincoln seems to move a little slow, but he always gets there."



G. W. CURTIS.

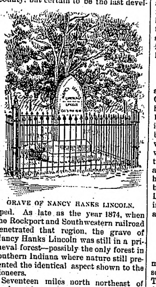
This was an anecdote Curtis was fond of telling, having repeated it to a gentleman only a few weeks before his death.

E. JAY EDWARDS.

THE GRAVE OF LINCOLN'S MOTHER.

The Desolate Spot Where Rest the Remains of Nancy Hanks Lincoln.

It adds but one more to the many saddening facts in the early boyhood of Abraham Lincoln to state that the location selected by his father in Indiana was in many respects almost the poorest he could have found in the new state. Spencer county is, it is true, a region of great natural wealth, and is today inhabited by a very intelligent and prosperous people, but Thomas Lincoln located in a district which was not only the most unhealthy in the county, but certain to be the last developed. As late as the year 1874, when the Rockport and Southwestern railroad penetrated that region, the grave of Nancy Hanks Lincoln was still in a primeval forest—possibly the only forest in southern Indiana where nature still presented the identical aspect shown to the pioneers.



GRAVE OF NANCY HANKS LINCOLN.

Seventeen miles north northeast of Rockport is a way station called Lincoln, in the narrow valley of Little Pigeon creek—a valley distinguished in early days for its fertility and its extraordinary capacity, so to speak, for all kinds of epidemics. The milk sickness, which wrought havoc among the Hankses and Sparrows and caused the death of Abraham Lincoln's mother was but a beginning. Ague was a yearly visitant. Fevers of nearly all kinds followed, and when the railroad company attempted to make a city of Lincoln the typhoid fever defeated the plan.

A few hundred yards southwest of the station the land rises to a timbered ridge. On the summit of that ridge, in a forest where every native tree still stood, visitors were pointed to four magnificent oaks forming a small quadrangle. Exactly in the center of that quadrangle, said the old citizens, Lincoln's mother was buried, but down to 1879 there was not a sign to distinguish it from any other spot in the forest. In that year, according to Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, Mr. P. E. Studebaker, of South Bend, Ind., placed there a monument with this inscription:

NANCY HANKS LINCOLN.
Mother of President Lincoln.
Died Oct. 5, 1818. Aged 35 Years.
Erected by a Friend of Her Martyred Son.
1879.

An iron fence protects the grave from what has befallen others on that hilltop—that of a wallowing place for hogs. Some kind hand has transplanted a few roses upon the grave and carried some pot flowers there, but each has fared badly for want of proper sunshine. And such, according to the latest correspondent to visit the spot, is the present condition of the grave of the great Liberator's mother.

P. F.

Lincoln's Self Control.

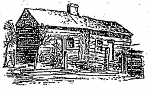
Although Lincoln was universally regarded as one of the most amiable of men and was scarcely ever known to show anger, those acquainted with him in his youthful and obscure years have declared that he had naturally a fiery temper, which he struggled against until he mastered it completely. After having become a prominent figure in the councils of the nation, he was a pattern of self discipline and self control. One of his favorite sayings, which would give color to this belief, was, "The most important victory a man can gain is the victory over himself."

Those intimate with Lincoln knew that he greatly disliked his name Abraham; nevertheless it was very appropriate, for its meaning, in Hebrew, is Father of the Multitude.

HE WAS ALWAYS "ON THE MOVE."

Thomas Lincoln, Father of the Emancipator, Was of a Migratory Disposition.

The country has heard much of the oddities and weaknesses of Thomas Lincoln, father of the Liberator; how he was ever on the move and invariably succeeded in making about as bad a location as circumstances allowed. His life in Kentucky and Indiana has been given in minute detail because his son was still with him then, but very little has been said of his various removals in Illinois.



WHERE LINCOLN'S PARENTS DIED.

His first location was in Macon county, a few miles from the present city of Decatur, "in the timber," as the phrase was, for in those days no one imagined that the prairies would be settled in the lifetime of living man. Indeed several of the early gazetteers of Illinois stated that "those broad grassy plains would remain for ever as common grazing grounds for adjacent farmers." In a few years, however, it was discovered that the prairies were more fertile than the woodland, and Thomas Lincoln was all in a fever to move again, and did.

In 1841 he made a second removal, but to what place is not recorded, as he did not remain long. "He still listened," says Herndon, "to the glowing descriptions of prosperity in adjacent counties." His third and last move was to the newest part of Coles county, then called Goose Nest prairie, near the present hamlet of Farmington and eight miles south of Charleston, the county town. His last plaintive utterance to his famous son was that his little tract of land bore "the usual incumbrance a mortgage for $200."

On the 15th of January, 1851, he died there at the age of seventy-three years and eleven days. From a letter written the following November by Abraham Lincoln to his stepbrother, Johnston, we learn that the writer paid the mortgage and secured "the eastern forty acres for mother." There the president elect saw her early in 1861 for the last time, and there she died April 10, 1869. A handsome marble shaft erected by Robert T. Lincoln marks the burial place of the Liberator's father.

Lincoln as a Versifier.

T. J. McMunn, of San Antonio, Tex., says: "An old friend of mine named Cabaniss recently told me that Abraham Lincoln worked for his father in 1832. At that time a great rise occurred in the Sangamon river, and a steamboat, taking advantage of the high water, came up the stream. My friend was then a child, and the whistling of the boat frightened him. Lincoln, then a tall, angular young man, took him in his arms and carried him aboard the boat. After the departure of the craft Lincoln wrote some rhymes about the incident, one verse of which the Cabaniss family preserved. It runs thus:

"The Illinois Suckers, green and raw Collected on the Sangamaw
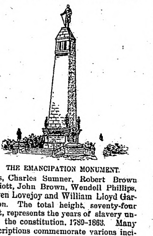
To see a boat come up the stream,
They surely thought it was a dream.

"For this doggerel he invented a melody, and he and others sang it. The song never found its way into print. The elder Cabaniss always told his children that the amiable, kindly Lincoln would develop into a great man."

A Tribute to Lincoln.

In the exposition grounds at Chicago will stand a model in wood, covered with "stuff" to represent stone, of a monument which is to be of granite and stand in Springfield, Ills. It is to be the tribute of the colored people of the United States to their hero-patron, Abraham Lincoln. The base will rise four feet from the ground and be thirty-six feet square, and from the center of this base the monument will rise seventy feet and be surmounted by a life size figure of a colored soldier.

Around the monument are pedestals resting on the base for eight bronze statues, each eight feet high and representing Abraham Lincoln, Frederick Douglass, Charles Sumner, Robert Brown Elliott, John Brown, Wendell Phillips, Owen Lovejoy and William Lloyd Garrison. The total height, seventy-four feet, represents the years of slavery under the constitution, 1789-1863. Many inscriptions commemorate various incidents connected with slavery and emancipation.



THE EMANCIPATION MONUMENT.

The bronze statues will be set upon the monument model at the World's fair and will afterward be transferred to the permanent monument at Springfield. The selection of subjects for the statues has been made by Hon. S. M. Cullom, of Illinois; Hon. Robert Smalls, South Carolina; Hon. William B. Allison, Iowa; Hon. John R. Lynch, Mississippi; Hon. John J. Ingalls, Kansas, and Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.

Governor Fifer and Senator Cullom, of Illinois, are the trustees of funds, and Dr. George W. Bryant, the commissioner general of the association, is now in Boston at 99 Charles street, to whom subscriptions for the monument may be sent.

IVORY AND ITS USES.

WHY CARVED ORNAMENTS IN IVORY ARE VERY EXPENSIVE.

There Are Few Expert Workers in Ivory In This Country—The Price of Elephants' Tusks Has Not Greatly Changed in Recent Years—A Costly Luxury.

When Whitelaw Reid was in search of a workman to decorate apartments at Ophir Farm with rich and beautiful antiques brought over from Europe he found that there was but one man in America who could do such work, and he lay sick. Had Mr. Reid been in search of skilled ivory carvers he would have found them almost as scarce. There are not above three or four ivory carvers of approved skill in New York, and hardly so many in all the rest of the country.

The men who do such work are paid high wages the year round, whether busy or idle. They are Frenchmen, Germans and Italians. Of the three the Italians are perhaps the most skillful, since ivory carving has been an art in a high degree of perfection among the Italians for centuries. The most famous ivory carver living, however, is a Frenchman, Moreau Vauthier. Few of his masterpieces have been seen in America, though two were sold at the famous Morgan art sale of a few years ago, and two more, held at a great price, are now in the possession of a noted American jeweler.

The ivory carvers of this country do little or nothing in the East Indian or Japanese manner, nor do they occupy themselves with figure work. Their chief employment is in producing decorative toilet and stationery articles. The rage for stained and carved ivory is of recent growth in the United States, and the demand for such articles is not large, as they are more costly than the same articles in silver would be. They were produced to tickle the jaded æsthetic palates of the rich and luxurious, and only those who may trifle away what they will indulge themselves to any considerable degree in carved ivory.

In all such articles the cost of the raw material is small in comparison with that of the labor. Billiard balls are costly because they contain large quantities of the finest ivory cut from the best part of the tusk. The labor cost of billiard balls is trifling, as they are turned by machinery and rapidly. Thus it often happens that a single small article, richly stained and carved, will cost five times as much as a billiard ball containing ten times the weight of ivory. The carvers of ivory use much the same tools as the wood carvers, but of lighter and more delicate make. The work is extremely tedious and laborious.

The carving is usually done in low relief, and the subjects are such as are suitable to this treatment—Persian designs in delicate curves, the cactus, with some varieties of palm, and hints caught from those marvelously simple but artistic carvings of the Alaskan Indians. The ivory is stained slightly, so as to bring out the design, and is permitted to absorb moisture, which it readily does, in order to give it that fresh look common in newly manufactured articles of ivory. The art of staining ivory is a secret guarded well by the carvers.

Some notion of the cost of ivory carving may be had from the fact that, while a hand mirror framed in plain ivory may be had for ten or twelve dollars, a mirror in carved ivory may cost $100 or more. The small articles in carved ivory cost from five to twenty-five dollars, and a toilet set in that material may fetch as high as $500. The American climate, with its extremes of heat and cold, is very trying upon ivory, and ivory backed mirrors of European manufacture almost invariably crack across the back after a few months of use upon this side of the Atlantic. The American manufacturers have hit upon the expedient of leaving a space between glass and frame in order to allow for contraction and expansion.

Nearly all the ivory brought to the United States is bought in the great London market, where the price is knocked about by bulls and bears, who corner ivory as they corner wheat or corn. The African rather than the Asiatic ivory is brought to this country, though one of the largest tusks ever seen in this market—that of a sacred East Indian elephant—has just been mounted in oriental style as a trophy of the chase. The tusk measures more than six feet in length and retains the marks it bore when worn by the sacred beast to which it belonged. Thanks to the predatory and murderous industry of Tippu Tib and his black Zanzibaris the supply of ivory has kept pace with the increased demand resulting from its extended use in this country, and the price for the raw material has not permanently advanced.

Few tusks of more than five feet in length come to this country, and many are less than four feet long. Many of the tusks reach here after having been buried in Africa for years to save them from thievish enemies of the savage owners. Every tusk must go through a process of seasoning, long or short, according as the process is natural or artificial, before it is made up into articles of ornament or use. It is difficult to obtain a perfect slab of ivory more than six inches in diameter, as the upper end of the tusk, which is the thickest, is hollow and the material is coarser than that in the solid part of the tusk.

From the latter are made billiard balls and the most beautifully carved articles for the toilet and the writing desk. From the coarser parts are made poker chips, buttons and a hundred small articles. Every part of the tusk is put to use. Even the chips and sawdust are converted into ivory black by burning.—New York Sun.

THE Washburn anti-option bill passed the United States senate last week by a majority of 12. It will meet with more opposition in the house, as its opponents have already organized to defeat it by filibustering tactics.

An appropriation of $100,000 for Minnesota's exhibit at the World's Fair has been passed by the state senate, and will undoubtedly pass the house. This should make Minnesota's exhibit worthy of the state.

SENATOR DAUGHERTY has introduced a bill for the creation of an additional Judge for the eleventh Judicial district. The fourteenth district is larger than the eleventh and in more need of an additional Judge.

THE sending of American war ships to Honolulu reminds one forcibly of the celebrated chase of the Itata. There is no more necessity for sending monitors to Honolulu than to Jerusalem, but what's the use of having a navy if we don't trot 'em out once in a while to let the people see what we have got.

HAWAII exports to this country about 300,000,000 pounds of sugar annually. If that Island was annexed to the United States, she would then receive the bounty of two cents per pound which this country pays on domestic sugar. In other words, it would cost this country about $6,000,000 annually to annex Hawaii. The Hawaiians are "onto their job" all right.

PRESIDENT HARRISON has appointed Judge Jackson to succeed Justice Lamar on the United States supreme court bench. The president was forced to nominate a democrat, because a number of republican senators had given it out that they would oppose the confirmation of any appointment which the president would make. But it is doubtful if the nomination of Judge Jackson will be confirmed, as he is not popular with many of the democratic senators.

A CONTRACT has been let for the building of an electric line between Chicago and St. Louis, to be completed within one year. This will be the first long distance electric railroad in the world, and should it prove as successful as its projectors hope for, it will revolutionize the railway systems of this country, and the principal roads will be using this wonderful power instead of steam—ten years hence.

TURN about is fair play, is it not? For lo these many years has madame complained bitterly because her lord and master would "whoop'er up" despite her protest, but now that dame fashion threatens to insist that madame shall hoop her up a little bit what a howl does go up from the lords of creation, and one brilliant genius has even introduced a bill in the legislature making it a misdemeanor for madame to follow the dictates of fashion. Turn about is fair play. Take your medicine, gentlemen.

THE election contest case of Rhinehart vs Anderson, which has been decided by Judge Ives in favor of the plaintiff, Rhinehart, shows that where there were irregularites in in voting, the vote of that precinct can be thrown out. This is as it should be, and gives a candidate who has been defeated by irregular methods a chance to appeal to the courts and get justice. This decision may have a wholesome effect upon the election officers in the county hereafter, and a stricter enforcement of the law will probably be the result.

SENTOR LIENAU has introduced a bill appropriating $50,000 for a factory at the state experimental station for the manufacture of beet root sugar and for the education of the students along that line. The manufacture of beet sugar has got beyond the experimental stage, and has proved a success wherever tried in the western states. What is needed is the payment of a bounty by the state upon all sugar manufactured in the state. It isn't necessary to appropriate money to experiment with but to encourage the manufacture of sugar.

THE Canadian people are keeping up their annexation agitation. "Continental Union" clubs have been organized throughout the provinces, and the annexation spirit seems to be growing. Prof. Goldwin Smith, one of Canada's foremost writers, and a leader in this movement, is now in Washington seeking information as to how the incoming administration feels toward their scheme. Canada, with a population of 5,000,000 and a debt of $280,000,000 would be benefited more by annexation than the United States and this is why the shrewd Canadians are pushing the scheme.

JUDGE STOWE, before whom one of the Homestead rioters is being tried for the murder of the Pinkerton men, has knocked the foundation from under the defendant's attorney, (Erwin) who ought to show that the bringing of the Pinkertons to Homestead was illegal. During the cross-examination of Capt. Cooper, the judge stopped the attorneys and for the defense, who were seeking to show that the Pinkertons were trespassers at Homestead and said: "I wont allow such questions. These men were going to Homestead on a lawful errand and had a right to go. These rioters had no business there. Even if the Pinkertons had been going there to take that mill by force they were justified in doing so, and no one has a right to dispute it in this court, and you may as well understand that just now. Such ideas as you attempt to advance never have been the law and are not the law, and I hope will never will be the law. It is anarchistic to advance such sentiments, and I will allow no one to advance such ideas here."

SOME interesting figures have been prepared by the state commissioner of statestics regarding the number of marriages and divorces in Minnesota during the past year. There were 12,157 marriages during the year and 576 divorces. The marriages are in excess of those of the previous year by about 1,090, and there were 30 more cases of divorce in the previous year than in 1892. Hennepin county leads in marriage and divorce as in everything else. There were 2,025 marriages and 182 divorces in this county. Ramsey county followed with 1,435 marriages and 84 divorces, and St. Louis county is next in rank. The total naturalization by nationalities in the state was as follows: Scandinavians, 7,806; Germans Poles, Bohemians and Russians, 4,400; Irish, 993; English and Scotch, 1,177; other nationalities, 1,509. The total naturalization was 15,885. The marriages, divorces and naturalizations during the past 10 years in the state are given as follows: Marriages, 108,586; divorces, 5,231; naturalizations; 118,129. Of the daturalizations, the larger totals for 10 years by nationalities are as follows: Scandinavians, 64,325; Germans, Poles, Bohemians and Russians, 29,479; English and Scotch, 10,699; Irish, 5,140.

DECLINE OF THE ALLIANCE.

Speaking of the subject of which "American Farmer" has been writing the Sioux City Journal says:—"The beginning of the decay of industrial and commercial societies is usually coincident with their departure from the purposes for which they are formed. Twenty years ago the grange was in its zenith, a power for good among the farmers of the country, who were being bettered through it in many ways. Then there came a time when it dominated state politics in many places and "granger legislation" was common. Not quite so many years ago the Knights of Labor organization was powerful and in many states became a great influence in state legislation. The influence of designing men within these societies probably had something to do with their downfall.

There is evidence that the decline of the National Farmers' alliance has commenced. It was a sort of consolidation of all the various farmers' organizations, north and south, which in many ways had become agents for great good among the farmers of the country. So long as the alliance kept to its purpose of uplifting the members by education and co-operation, it gained in strength, but about two years ago the politicians got full control of the society. Then it went into politics, Three senators were elected by it and half a dozen members of the house. Then it went into politics as a business, and from being an industrial organization it becomes a party asking for the suffrages of the people.

This year its representation in congress will be reduced, and though it controls more legislatures, it has been able to do nothing more than help its democratic allies into office. National offices of the alliance have been within the past week, so it is said, considering the advisability of dissolving the organization as a national one. There was a big fund on hand when President Polk died, and somebody has been asking questions as to where it all went. As the present people's party represents about all that is left of the alliance after it has been used by the politicians as the battering ram of a few campaigns, Messrs. Loucks, Willetts, Terrill and others no doubt would be content to have the alliance die quietly.

Even in some of the states the real farmers who were in the alliance have become inquisitive. In North Carolina a mass meeting of alliance men is to be held next week for the avowed purpose of compelling the politicians to make an accounting of the large business fund which the alliance had on hand before the campaign. The pending muddle in Kansas, the people's contests in Nebraska and Wyoming and the annihilation of the party of the alliance as a political factor in South Dakota, are disheartening. The showing made in the south last year was not very bright, and all around there is about as much failure in politics as success in farming.

It is unfortunate for the farmers' alliance that the discredited politicians of other parties should have haunted the ante-rooms in such numbers that they have been able to turn from legitimate channels to the advancement of their political ambitions the powerful forces of one of the strongest industrial societies ever formed."

A MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

President Harrison Explains the Subject of Consular Sealing.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—President Harrison has sent to congress his reply to the resolution of Representative Hitt relative to the transportation of imported merchandise from one port to another of the United States on Canadian territory. The resolution asks whether or not the interests of the United States do not require that cars carrying such merchandise while in in Canadian territory should not be in the custody and under the surveillance of an inspector of the United States customs department, the expense thereof to be paid by the carrier transporting the merchandise. The president's reply, after reviewing the question at length, gives his conclusions as follows:

First—That article 29 of the treaty of Washington has been abrogated.

Second—That even if this article were in force there is no law in force to execute it.

Third—That when in force the treaty imposed no obligation upon the United States to use the concessions as to transit made by Canada and no limitation upon the powers of the United States in dealing with merchandise imported for the use of our citizens through Canadian ports, or passing from one place in the United States to another through Canada, upon the arrival of such merchandise at our border.

Fourth—That, therefore, treaty or no treaty, the question of sealing cars containing such merchandise, and the treatment of such sealed cars when they cross our border, is and always has been one to be settled by our laws according to our convenience and our interests as we may see them.

Fifth—That the law authorizing the sealing of cars in Canada containing foreign merchandise imported from a contiguous country does not apply to merchandise imported by our own people from countries not contiguous and carried into Canada for delivery to such owners.

Sixth—That the law did not contemplate the passage of sealed cars to any place, not a port, nor the delivery of such cars to the owner or consignee to be opened by him without the supervision of a revenue officer.

Seventh—That such a practice is inconsistent with the safety of the revenue.

The statutes relating to the transportation of merchandise between the United States and the British possessions should be the subject of revision. The treasury regulations have given to these laws a construction and scope that I do not think was contemplated by congress. A policy adapted to the new conditions growing in part out of the construction of the Canadian Pacific railroad should be declared and the business placed upon a basis more just to our people and to our transportation companies. If we continue the policy of supervising rates and requiring that they shall be reasonable upon the railroads of the United States we cannot in fairness at the same time give these unusual facilities for competition to Canadian roads that are free to pursue the practices as to cut rates and favored rates, that we condemn and punish if practiced by our own railroads.

I transmit herewith the correspondence between the secretary of the treasury and the attorney general upon some phases of this question.

Ex-Secretary Endicott Ill.

BOSTON, Feb. 1.—Ex-Secretary of War Endicott is critically ill at his home in Salem suffering from a complication of diseases and after the consultation during the afternoon his son was telegraphed for. It is stated that symptoms of pneumonia have developed.

A BLOODY RIOT.

One Hundred Killed and Five Hundred Injured at Bogota.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—The Herald's Panama correspondent cables: There has been a serious riot at Bogota, which lasted for two days. It is said that 100 men were killed and 500 were wounded. The riots are in no sense political. Trouble grew out of a publication in La Christina of an article by J. C. Ignacio Guiteries, a professor in a local Jesuit college, alleging widespread ignorance among the laboring classes.

Struck by a Train.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Feb. 4.—A horrible casuality occurred here about 7:40 o'clock a. m. Near the state pump house, at the foot of Emerson avenue, a Central and Hudson passenger train, westbound, ran down six men. Three were killed outright and three injured. One died at the hospital, another is dying and the third is seriously hurt.

For the Big Derby.

CHICAGO, Feb. 5.—Secretary Brewster has announced 184 entries for the $60,000 Derby prize. The names which still stand include all the original entries which have gained prominence.

Road petition from Louisville was laid over.

Commissioner Anderson offered a petition to appropriate $300 from the road and bridge fund for repairing a bridge.

The county attorney was authorized to commence action against T. B. Walker for the amount expended by the county in repairing the damage caused to bridge of East Grand Forks by the location of boomage piers too close to said bridge. A committe was appointed to examine county bridges, consisting of Kirsch, DeMers and Oppegaard.

The sheriff's bill for $672.20, expenses said to have been incurred in the C. L. Cumings case was allowed upon a statement by the county attorney that it was a just bill, correct in every particular.

J. W. Galloway and Frank Kratka were selected by the board as two of the commissioners to appraise the state swamplands in the eastern part of the county.

Application of Thos. Crampe, relating to taxes was referred to Commissioner DeMers. The applications for correction in assessments of personal taxes were granted as prayed in the several petitions.

The following communication from Martin Purcell, of East Grand Forks, was received and read:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF POLK, MINNESOTA.

GENTS:—I wish to call the attention of the board to the manner in which the Justice's of the Peace conducts the criminal cases brought before them for trial in the City of East Grand Forks. We have a special charter to go by and it says in chapter third, section 13, all prosecutions for assaults, batteries and affrays, not indictable, and for a breach of violation of the ordinances of said city shall be commenced in the name of East Grand Forks and the same proceedings shall be had as are required by law in criminal cases tried before Justice of the Peace. Now the Justices of the Peace of the City of East Grand Forks pay no attention to the charter, but try all cases in the name of the State of Minnesota and if found guilty and pays a fine and costs they turn the fine into the city, but if they refuse or are unable to pay fine and costs they send them to county jail and tax the costs to the county, which is all wrong and unlawful. For all criminal cases triable before city justices are to be brought in the name of the city and all costs paid by the city, but all costs that are indictable are to be brought in the name of the state for a hearing and are bound over to appear before the grand jury, the cost has got to be paid by the County. Why the justices commit so many to the county jail for assaults and affrays, is because they receive more pay from the county for trying them than they do the police a favor in giving them a few dollars more than they get from the city for their monthly pay. Now I wish to call your attention to this fact that the police force is paid by the city and are not officers of the state and our charter gives them no power to serve processes either in or out of the city. The charter says: chapter five, sec. 3, "All processes issued by the Justice of Peace of said city shall be directed to the marshal or any constable of said city." The charter gives the marshall the power of a constable to serve process, chapter 3rd, section 8, also chapter 3, section 9, gives the council power to appoint police and prescribes their duties and to fix their compensation; what is very wrong and unlawful here in this city is that the Justices of the Peace allow and put into the hands of the police nearly all processes both criminal and civil. The constable that was elected by the people and possess the lawful power to serve all processes gets but little of it to do because the justices don't do their duty. You certainly can right one wrong and that is not to allow those unlawful bills sent in to the county is bound to respect I notice that at the last meeting of the county board that you allowed the following City of East Grand Forks constables bills: Mark Lampton constable fees $1.25 John Kettleson constable fees $1.25, Thomas Murray constable fees $6.70. F. A. Campbell $6.70, Hugh Quigley constable fees, 2 bills $8.70, George Pratt constable fees $2.25, Andrew Ryan constable fees $13.40 Alex. Robinson constable fees $6.20. All of these but T. Murray are police and their bills are unlawful some of these had what Dwyer called double headers; there were two prisoners to be taken to jail and J. S. Dwyer told one of the police that he would make out two commitments and he would take both at one time and send in two bills for one trip and have a double-header. That is very often done and sometimes three policemen go to Crookston the same day with three prisoners and claim to be constables and sign their name constable to their return Thomas Murray is marshal and is paid $65.00 per month and is deputy sheriff of Polk County. I heard the sheriff ask Murray one day this week why he did not send him more boaders.

Yours,
MARTIN PURCELL.

The county attorney was instructed to investigate. After a comparison of the orders and warrants issued and paid in '92 and funding the same they were destroyed.

The sheriff reported that the receipts of his office for '92 amount to $5573.84, and the expenses $3699.09.

Bond of Deputy County Coroner, John Wyatt, was presented and approved.

The deputy auditor was instructed to call upon all text book agents for an accounting and settlement. The following list of grand and petit jurors were drawn:

EFFECTS OF THE BLIZZARD.

Three Found Frozen to Death Near Topeka, Kan.

TOPEKA, Feb. 4.—The full effects of the recent cold wave in this county are just beginning to be known. James Mitchell, wife and one child were found in their home, a dilapidated frame house seven miles north of this city, frozen to death. Neighbors had passed the house Thursday, and observing no signs of life, assumed that the family had gone from home. Friday a neighbor, noticing that Mitchell's cattle had not been fed, went to the house and found the three bodies frozen stiff, with but a thin quilt over them, all the covering there was in the house.

NATIONAL DAIRYMEN.

The Annual Convention in Session at Dubuque—Donnelly There.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Feb. 7.—The second annual convention of the National Butter and Cheese Manufacturers' association has opened here and continues four days. Over 2,000 delegates are expected, a large number already being present, including ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, Ignatius Donnelly of Minnesota, Colonel Littler of Chicago, and T. M. Deal of Vermont, the largest butter maker in the world. Exhibitors of butter, cheese and machinery will compete for $4,500 in premiums. Thursday evening the visitors will be given a reception at the armory.

KANSAS CITY, Kan., Feb. 7.—Burglars entered the house of Martin Locker Monday night, and after chloroforming Locker and his wife, robbed the house. In making their escape the burglars left the outside door open. When Locker and his wife recovered consciousness in the morning they found that their two babies, twins only 5 days old, had been frozen to death.

Algernon Sartoris Dead.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—A cable dispatch to The World from London says that Algernon Sartoris, who married Nellie Grant, died on Friday at Capri, Italy. He had not lived with his wife for some years.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, Feb. 6, 1892.

Owing to sickness in the family of your correspondent, items from here will be brief this week.

The dance at the Keystone house on Wednesday evening was highly enjoyed by all who attended. Supper was served at the home of Mrs. Mickler.

Harvey Misner and Jim Tracy are among those who are down with the mumps.

T. Weis of Warren transacted business here Saturday.

There is a good opening here for a lumber yard.

E. Taylor & Co.'s force have all been busy this week taking an inventory of their stock.

Comrade L. Cottel took a run over to Grand Forks on business last week. Louie says that East Grand Forks has no charm for him.

Section Boss Houston has been compelled to increase his section force.

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. C. Misner rejoice over the arrival of a brand new daughter.

The annual meeting of the Prairie View Cemetery association was held in the office of the secretary, on Tuesday, February 7th.

We have a new resident in the person of Henry Willis, formerly of Goodhue county, Minn., who will farm section nine, Euclid township, which belongs to the Graves' estate.

H. C. Misner has received a letter from our old townsman, E. J. Haseltine, who is at present at his old home in Wisconsin looking over the family estate, and he says that the Red River valley does not know anything about hard times compared with that part of Wisconsin.

Pete Thill of West Bend, Wisconsin, has rented Mike Engle's farm for the season of 1893, and Mr. Engle will work at the carpenter trade.

The agent for the M. and N. elevator has orders to ship out ten cars of wheat at once; but the railroad company is not very prompt is filling orders for cars.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

McINTOSH, Feb. 4.

The weather continues very severe and many a frozen nose can be seen on those who have been so unfortunate as to be compelled to face the howling blizzard for any distance.

Last Tuesday's blizzard blockaded the roads and stopped progress by team, and the only way the farmer can get to town now is by using his own individual motive power.

It was quite a surprise to see the train on Monday. It certainly looks as if we were to have a daily train again. Who shall we bless for this great accommodation, Providence or Jim Hill?

We understand that the county division bill is going through all right. The next fight will be between McIntosh and Fosston as to who shall have the county seat. We hope there will be no blood shed.

Henry M. Hellieson our rustling lumber merchant, returned from an extended trip to St. Paul, Chicago and Duluth last Thursday. He was on the Northwestern Lumbermen's train that got wrecked near Kent, and escaped with only a lively shaking up.

A broken nose, two fingers nearly bitten off, and demolished window panes, was the result of a "blind pig" row the other night. Thank goodness we have only two months to election.

Mrs. J. P. Johnson is very ill and Mr. Johnson, who has been in St. Paul for the last two weeks, has been sent for. Dr. McEachran who is in attendance, says there is nothing serious and that the patient will recover in a short time.

Knute Lauman was taken sick very suddenly last Saturday night, but Dr. McEachran will soon bring him to his feet again.

S. H. Drew is sick a bed with quinsy. Dr. McEachran has him in charge and we hope the genial cashier will soon be found at his post again.

Andrew Cronquist and family returned from Wisconsin last Thursday, where they have been since Christmas visiting friends and relatives. Andrew looks hale and hearty and says he has become an expert bicyclist on his trip.

Mrs. G. B. Glover who has been sick for only a short time, passed away last Tuesday morning. Mrs. Glover's sudden death was a great shock to her relatives and friends, as her sickness at first was not thought to be of a serious nature, and she partially recovered but took a relapse and finally had to succomb to the dread reaper. She leaves a bereaved husband to mourn her loss, and a baby boy four months old. Her remains were taken to her home at Hallock for burial, where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Yeo reside.

Just as the train pulled in from Fosston last Tuesday evening at a lively speed, and before it had fully stopped, Conductor Norrie jumped to the platform. In so doing his pocket book flew out of his pocket, scattering its contents, including three fives and two one dollar bills to the four winds. They were not found but will probably take root and grow in the spring and yield a a good crop.

In the last issue of the JOURNAL appeared the question, "Who is the publisher of the McIntosch News?" That question is easily answered by those who daily come in contact with the smiling little publisher. When W. G. Hunt, the renowned boodler and lobbyist, was at the zenith of his glory advocating reform, the now publisher was employed by Hunt as head manager and typesetter, and when Hunt went to St. Paul on a fishing trip, and "Paul Pants" appeared on the scene, little Bob was promoted to the editorial chair by his new master. Barber Allen is the assistant publisher.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Jan. 31

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Mr. Chandler called up his Hawaiian resolution and it was debated for a short time without action. The senate then took up the anti-option bill and passed it, 40 to 29.

The house spent the day considering the sundry civil bill. A resolution was introduced that it is the sense of the house that it is time to take steps looking to the annexation of Hawaii.

Wednesday, Feb. 1.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—In the senate, immediately after the routine morning business, the committee on appropriations asserted its right of precedence, and maintained it up to the time of adjournment. The fortification bill was the first of the general bills to come before the senate, and it was passed after a rather interesting, though not novel, discussion on the subject of coast fortifications. The army appropriation bill was then taken up and was passed with but a single amendment—increasing the pay of sergeants of the army. The District of Columbia bill came next in order. All the committee amendments were agreed to except one—the erection of a $500,000 municipal building in Washington city, and the bill went over.

The house spent the day in consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Thursday, Feb. 2.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—The senate spent most of the day in executive session, and ratified the French extradition treaty, after making amendments expunging misdemeanors and offenses of a political character. The Chandler Hawaiian resolution was referred to the committee on foreign relations.

The session of the house was unusually interesting. In the morning the anti-option bill was the center of interest. The opponents of the legislation were on the alert and the instant that Mr. Hatch made his motion for a conference, Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, was addressing the speaker with a point of order, that the senate amendments must first first be considered in committee of the whole. The discussion of Mr. Bynum's point was a brief one, but long enough to show that the fight over the measure would be a sharp and vigorous one. The house also passed the sundry civil bill.

Friday, Feb. 3.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—The friends of the anti-option bill obtained a victory in the house during the day. Although the speaker decided against them and ruled that the house could not at present concur in the senate amendments, and thus throw the bill into conference, when a report would become privileged, the house, notwithstanding the determined fight of the members of the ways and means committee and of the other opponents of the bill, referred it to the committee on agriculture, which is favorable to its passage. The deficiency appropriation bill was passed.

In the senate a discussion on the Sherman silver law repeal bill was unexpectedly precipitated by Mr. Teller. Several of the senators made remarks on the subject and finally notice was given by Mr. Hill, of New York, that he would make a motion Monday to take up the bill and pass it.

Saturday, Feb. 4.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The senate furnished evidence of the case with which legislative business can be transacted in that body. Two hours were set apart for the consideration of house bills on the calendar, and eighteen of them were passed, and after that the house bill to ratify the agreement with the Cherokees for the cession of their interest in the Cherokee outlet lands, and appropriating over $8,500,000 to carry it out, was taken up, discussed and passed in the shape of a substitute.

The house passed the diplomatic and the military academy appropriation bills with little debate. Mr. Hatch reported back the anti-option bill; with senate amendments, and it was referred to the committee of the whole. The house then, in committee of the whole proceeded to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bills, both of which were passed.

Monday, Feb. 6.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—In the senate Mr. Hill called up his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill for the repeal of the Sherman silver coinage law. The motion was voted down, 42 to 23. Afterward the quarantine bill was taken up and passed without a division; also a bill for the payment out of the treasury of local taxes on lands held by Indians in severalty. Finally the automatic coupler bill was taken up and discussed for a time without action.

In the house Mr. Kilgore, of Texas, filibustered against the anti-option bill, though his real opposition was to the bankruptcy bill, which comes up when the anti-option bill is out of the way. No business was transacted.

A Bad Wreck.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Feb. 7.—A wreck has occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, at Williams station. Two persons were killed and three fatally injured. It is reported that the wreck is the most extensive that has ever occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio, and that the tracks will be blocked twenty-four hours at least.

Business Houses Destroyed.

OTTUMWA, Ia., Feb. 7.—The business portion of Afton was destroyed by fire during the night. The loss is $30,000.

High Water Threatens Australian Towns with Total Destruction.

BRISBANE, Feb. 6.—Incessant rain for several days have caused floods throughout Queensland. Part of this city is under water. People are deserting the low-lying country, as many houses are submerged. The towns of Bundaberg, Ipswich and Sundambe are threatened with total demolition. The inhabitants have deserted their houses and those who have not fled to the higher land have taken refuge in trees or on the tops of the highest buildings. A large loss of human life is reported, but nothing definite can be ascertained as to the total number. A mine near Bundambe was flooded and seven miners were drowned. In Ipswich many houses collapsed. Goodna is entirely under water and the inhabitants are more or less without food or shelter. The loss of property is enormous. Cattle have been drowned by the thousands.

THE WEEK'S NEWS.

In the divorce case of Emma Drummond vs. John Drummond, on trial at Denver, the plaintiff, while on the stand, accused her husband of being one of the murderers of Rev. Haddock, at Sioux City, some years ago.

Friday, Feb. 3.

There was a net increase in the public debt of $3,105,800 during January.

Robert J. Beatty is convicted of participation in the Homestead poisonings.

Judge William Lindsay will succeed Mr. Carlisle as senator from Kentucky.

Baron Hirsh and the Rothschilds head a new Panama canal syndicate, and will subscribe 25,000,000 francs.

Mr. Cleveland is said to favor the annexation of both Hawaii and Canada and the absorption by the United States of the entire North American continent.

The Coney Island Athletic club has signed Tom Willians, of Australia, and Billy Smith, of Boston, to fight on April 17 for a purse of $5,000.

Saturday, Feb. 4.

The Harris roller mill at Irondale, a suburb of Minneapolis, was destroyed by fire Friday night. Loss $120,000.

A passenger rate war among the trans-Missouri lines is regarded almost inevitable unless something is speedily done to improve the situation in that territory. Already Colorado rates are badly demoralized.

Chairman Caldwell, of the Western Passenger association, has called a meeting for Tuesday, Feb. 14, to compile the summer tourist rate sheet for the season of 1893 and a separate all-the-year-around rate sheet.

The fact has been made public that Senator Guderian, of Minnesota, has resigned his position as vice president of the Anoka National bank at the request of Senator Washburn, the president. The difficulty arises from the fact that Senator Guderian did not vote for Senator Davis' re-election.

Monday, Feb. 6.

The United States fish commissioners have selected the Davies site for a fish hatchery at Bozeman, Mon. It contains eighty acres and has the necessary water facilities.

A consignment of 100,000 souvenir 50-cent silver coins of the date of 1893 was received at the sub-treasury at Chicago, Monday. There is now a plentiful supply of the coins on hand, the total value being in the neighborhood of $400,000.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Jan. 31.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 31.—The senate got down to work and transacted considerable business.

Senator Kiester's bill providing that religious corporations should dispose of their property after the rules of their denominations, by a vote of 34 to 11 passed.

The bill cutting the transcript fee for stenographic reports from 15 to 10 cents, was also favorably disposed of and then the world's fair appropriation was reached. An amendment providing that the commissioners be paid no compensation was adopted and the bill was then passed by a vote of 32 to 22

The senate then resolved itself into committee of the whole, with Senator Keller in the chair. Senator Sanborn's bill raising the disbursements in civil actions was the first considered. After a short discussion of the measure the committee rose without action, and the senate adjourned to 3 p. m.

The senate reconvened at 3 o'clock p. m., and went into committee of the whole, with Senator Craven in the chair. General Sanborn's bill was again considered. The bill was recommended to pass. Similar action was taken on several other bills.

In the house the contest cases of Simons vs. Walsh and Doran vs. Sullivan were considered. Neither contestant having appeared before the committee both cases were dismissed. This virtually settles all contests before the house

Mr. O'Neill's resolution calling on the warden of the state prison to make a report of the cost of binding twine, and Mr. Rodgers' resolution calling upon the attorney general for an opinion as to the authority of the legislature to classify cities according to their population and legislate for the different classes were passed.

Wednesday, Feb. 1.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 1.—About one hundred members of the house and perhaps a dozen members of the senate left St. Paul at 9:30 a. m. for a visit to the state university. All the different buildings were inspected by the lawmakers, and addresses to students and visitors were made by Governor Nelson, Speaker Lee, Senator McHale, Representative Young and others. After the addresses the members were served with a light lunch, coffee, rolls and doughnuts, in Professor Folwell's room. Following lunch, most of the visitors returned to St. Paul to attend committee meetings in the afternoon. No session was held in either house during the day.

Thursday, Feb. 2.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 2.—Neither house had more than barely enough members present to transact business, a large number being absent visiting various state institutions.

In the senate the committee of the whole recommended Senator Leavitt's income tax bill to pass; also Mr. March's bill providing for payment of taxes in May, and Mr. Allen's bill requiring financial statements of villages to be published. Senator John Day Smith's bills relating to cruely to animals and children were also favorably acted upon.

Senator John Day Smith introduced his free text book bill and also a measure requiring that the seals of notaries public shall contain their names and residences.

In the house a number of petitions favoring the passage of certain bills were handed in.

The bill of Mr. Horton, relating to pool selling and book making, was reported by Mr. Ives from the sub-committee of the judiciary committee in accordance with the resolution of Tuesday. It was given a second reading and placed on general orders.

Friday, Feb. 3.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 3.—A large number of bills were introduced in the house at the morning session, making about 350 new measures now before that body. None of the new bills were of general importance, though one, prohibiting the wearing of hoop skirts by ladies in this state, caused considerable merriment. Several committee reports were read and some minor matters disposed of. The senate world's fair bill was then taken up and referred to the committee on appropriations. The house then took a recess to 3 p. m.

A new joint committee was created in the senate by a resolution of Senator Sanborn. It calls for a committee of five senators and nine represenatives to take into consideration all matters relating to the Itasca state park. The senate then went into committee of the whole, Senator Lineau in the chair.

Senator Canestorp's bill relating to the incorporation of villages, and Senator Divis' bill relating to limitations of actions, were recommended to pass. Senator Wood's bill, making the threshing bill a lien upon the grain threshed, created a lengthy debate, and was finally laid over.

The capitol commission made its report at the afternoon session of the senate. The majority report was signed by Senators Dean, La Due, Ayers and Keller. Senator McMillan, of Minneapolis, made a minority report.

Saturday, Feb. 4.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 4.—The senate and house adopted a concurrent resolution, declaring the Moccasin, or Wild Lady Slipper, to be the state flower. Senator Donnelly introduced a resolution asking the government to take control of telegraph lines. The following bills were passed:

S. F. 86, by Senator John Day Smith—Amending the penal code relating to cruelty to children.

S. F. 84, by Senator John Day Smith—Amending the penal code relating to cruelty to animals.

S. F. 115, by the Judiciary Committee—Providing for a revision of the statutes of the state.

The house devoted the greater part of the morning to discussing the appointment of a stenographer for the judiciary committee. The result was that a stenographer was appointed at a salary of $5 per day. Several bills were introduced, among them being one by Mr. Wilson, of Hennepin, repealing the tax on mortgages on Minnesota lands. Mr. Horton introduced a bill to provide for a new capitol site. Mr. Jacobson introduced a railroad bill which will, if passed, compel railroad companies to furnish ample facilities for transferring freight and passengers at all points where two lines intersect. The bill is based largely upon the Iowa state law.

Monday, Feb. 6.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 6.—Barely a quorum was present in the house. The judiciary committee favorably recommended Mr. Ives' bill granting water power and other companies rights of eminent domain, with an amendment requiring such companies when they desire to enter upon streets with wires or pipes, to first obtain permission from the local authorities and then pay adequate compensation to property owners for damages. Adopted.

A resolution calling for a joint committee to investigate the reports that whipping and other cruelties are practiced at the St. Cloud reformatory was passed, and Fuller and Skinner were named as house members.

At the afternoon session Mr. Wyman's bill providing for incorporation of clearing houses, was in committee of the whole, recommended to pass.

Mr. Cairn's bill to abolish days of grace was recommended to pass.

H. F. No. 40, Mr. O'Neill's bill repuiring insurance companies to pay loss by fire whether notes issued in payment for the policies had been paid or not, was taken up. Mr. Wacek moved to amend by making the note a lein upon the land or property of the insured. It was recommended to pass.

The senate held no morning session but met at 3 p. m. Immediately after convening Senator Leavitt for the Democrats and Senator Donnelly for the Populists arose on a question of privilege to deny that any deal had been fixen up between Democratic and Alliance members of the senate to oppose Republican measures.

House resolution for investigating St. Cloud reformatory concurred in.

Senator Craig's bill regulating the selection of swamp lands was the only bill discussed in committee of the whole. It was recommended to pass.

INTERVIEWED FOSTER.

Hawaiian Commissioners Call Upon the Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The first interview between Secretary Foster and the Hawaiian annexation commissioners was held in the diplomatic parlor of the state department between 10 and 11 a. m. and lasted half an hour. There were present Secretary Foster and Solicitor Partridge, representing the United States, and Messrs. Thurston, Wilder, Castle, Marsden and Carter, the Hawaiian commissioners. Mr. Kinney, of Salt Lake city, who is present with them as unofficial adviser, and Dr. Mott Smith, the Hawaiian minister, the latter of whom made the introductions.

Presented Their Credentials.

Mr. Thurston, on behalf of his associates presented their credentials from President Dole of the provisional government and supplemented them with a brief statement of the events on the island which were the cause of their visit.

Secretary Foster responded in a few words of welcome, stating that the reason for the errand was well known to the people of the United States.

Arranged Another Interview.

After the exchange of more social greetings, the interview closed with an engagement to meet again at 3 o'clock p. m. The Hawaiian commissioners returned at once to their hotel, where they discussed the question of making a statement to the people of the United States upon the subject of their mission to this country. Mr. Thurston was asked whether the reception by Secretary Foster had been satisfactory and he replied that it had been quite so. Of the details, however, he could not speak, as he had been requested by Secretary Foster, pending negotians, to make no statements regarding the proceedings thereof. The members of the commission united with Mr. Thurston in at the manner of their reception. Mr. Castle said he anticipated very plersant relations between him and the commissioners during their stay. They have been cordially received by the representatives of the United States government, he said, and this beginning, he believed, augured a satisfactory completion of their mission.

After the interview Secretary Foster said he had nothing more to communicate and owing to the press of other business he was unable to see newspaper men.

KILLED BY INDIANS

FOUR RANCHMEN FOUND DEAD NEAR PINE RIDGE.

The Murderers Chased by Indian Police and Shot in Attempting to Escape—Trouble Due to Threats of the Whites to Report Depredations to the Agent.

HOT SPRINGS, S. D., Feb. 5.—Four men named George Hadaway, Bennet, Rodney Royce and Ed Cochrane, herders belonging to the Stingers & Humphrey outfit, were found dead in their cabin near the mouth of White Clay creek Saturday, after having been murdered by the Indians. They caught the Indians the day before killing a steer belonging to the herd that is being held on the agency for delivery at Pine Ridge. They threatened to report the depredators to the agent and this so exasperated the Indians that they made threats at the time which it seems they carried into execution a few hours later. This particular locality on the agency is inhabited by a desperate gang of Indians, being the remnants of the Cheyenne-Sioux, the Brule-Sioux and what is left of Big Foot's band, as well as a portion of the Indians that at one time trained with Sitting Bull. Great excitement prevails at the agency. Troops have been ordered out from Fort Meade. It is hardly probable that any general uprising will occur, and the people surrounding the agency are in no way alarmed.

KILLED FOUR REDS.

The Murderers Shot by Indian Police in Attempting to Escape.

RAPID CITY, S. D., Feb. 6.—Late information goes to show that the murders at the Humphrey ranch were the work of a band of Indian cattle thieves and not the outcome of any rebellion or discontent among the redskins. Messages by telephone from Fort Meade state that the corps of Indian scouts did not leave White River and that no troops will be sent to the agency. Everything is quiet once more. Charles Ford, a cowboy employed on one of the White River cattle ranches, brought the news of the murder to Buffalo Gap. He found the cattlemen murdered and terribly mutilated. Ford was unarmed and did not dare to remain in the vicinity long, but at once mounted and rode to Buffalo Gap.

The murdered men were well known in this region. Their names were E. N. Calkins, foreman of the Humphrey ranch; Reminery Royce, cook, and two men named Hathaway and Bennett. It is now supposed that the Indians killed Calkins and his associates in revenge for their reporting to Agent Brown the theft of a steer from their herd early in the week. Sergeant Joe Bush and his men found the Indians who had killed the cowboys on White river in the vicinity of the beef camp, and, as they would not surrender all "took good aims." Their names were White Face Horse, Two Strikes and two of his sons.

EVERYTHING QUIET.

Recent Trouble at Pine Ridge Agency Has Good Effect.

CHADRON, Neb., Feb. 7.—Later reports of the killing of four cowboys at the beef camp at White Clay creek confirm previous accounts, the leader of the Indians, however, being Two Sticks instead of Two Strikes. There are about 6,200 Indians on Pine Ridge reservation and among these there were only about thirty who were inclined to be discontented, and the ones killed were the worst. The decisive action and the respect which the great body of Indians have for Acting Agent Brown are all that is needed to keep the relations between the Indians and whites pleasant and satisfactory.

STRUCK BY A SNOW PLOW.

One Man Killed and Two Fatally Injured On the Northern Pacific.

PERHAM, Minn., Feb. 5.—The Northern Pacific snow plow struck three men one mile east of this village, killing one instantly. The men were walking on the track and a blizzard was raging. They did not hear the snow plow, neither did the men running the snow plow see the men on the track. Michael Lapazaewski, a Polander, was killed instantly; Robert Burget, the Perham blacksmith, has since died, and Jacob Kamiski, a brewer, is not expected to live.

CHAPTER XXI.

And how fared the renegades?

The girl Lizzie had been cut loose from the tree to which she was bound within thirty feet of them so carefully that Harkins had her a quarter of a mile away before she was missed. A rush and a search was made, and no one questioned that she had got off alone. They consoled themselves with the thought that the wild beasts would have her life before morning, and when Bob strolled down the valley it was with the expectation of finding some evidence of her death.

Well it was for the girl and the wagonmen that Taylor had been kept in ignoronce of her rescue and arrival. Had the renegades known she was in camp they would have shed blood to recapture her. Having no suspicion that she had been seen or heard of, they had no particular animosity against the gold hunters. When Taylor, burning for revenge, wanted to head a raid to steal the horses or attack the camp, Bob met him with the reply:

"They drove you out, and I reckon they did right, but we don't propose to burn our fingers to help you git back at 'em. We cum yere fur that gold, and the fust hard work we do will be to look for it. If we don't trouble that gang they won't trouble us."

Taylor had to be satisfied with that. His standing among them was not pleasant. His excuses and explanations did not go down. He was looked upon as a traitor who had received his just deserts, and he very soon realized that he was being endured for the sake of what he might know about the cave of gold. This knowledge imbittered him, and the hour he rode by the camp hidden in the wagon he gritted his teeth and whispered to himself:

"These outlaws want me to help find the gold, but what will happen then? They won't stickle to shoot me down like a dog. They have no notion of dividing with me. They own the team and will have all to say."

And then he took an oath that if he saw the first sign of treachery in his new found friends every man of them should die by his hand. It was no idle oath. He had a terrible weapon in store for an emergency.

The outlaw party reached the canyon below the peak without incident and the wagon was pulled well out of sight of any one passing up and down the valley, and the camp was pitched with a view to defense. They were men who knew the perils of the Indian country and were both brave and cautious. On the morning after their arrival Bob and Taylor set off up the canyon on an exploring expedition, and within an hour they had discovered the cave. Indeed, Taylor scarcely hesitated in walking directly to the ledge and pulling himself up.

The opening to the cave was large enough to admit the body of an ox. To the left of it rested a large stone which had been cut to fit the opening, but which had never been placed in position. Saunders had said to the right of Custer's peak. He had been mistaken. Here was the cave to the left.

The men hesitated to enter the opening, although provided with torches to dispel something of the inky darkness. In spite of their wicked hearts, a feeling of awe and reverence held them spellbound for a time. By and by Bob shook it off sufficiently to say:

"This is the place. Thar can't be no doubt of it, for it's the location we both got from different men. I'm now a-wondering what's inside."

Taylor thought this a fitting opportunity to decide a matter which had worried him not a little, and he said:

"In case the gold is here do we five share and share alike?"

"Sartinly," was Bob's prompt reply.

"You go first and let's see if we hev cum on a wild goose chase."

Taylor knocked his torch against the rocks to make it burn up more brightly, and holding it ahead of him passed into the opening, slowly followed by Bob. They found themselves in a rock lined room about twelve by sixteen feet in width and length, while the incline was from six to eight feet in height. Nature had made the cave, but man had enlarged and improved it.

For a moment the men looked about them in wonder, and fearful that a grizzly or puma might be there to receive them. The place was untenanted, and Taylor moved to the right, thrust his torch into the darkness and hoarsely exclaimed:

"We've hit it—we've hit it! Here is the gold!"

Yes, the gold was there, and silver as well. It was in crude lumps and pigs, each a heavy weight for a man. And there were crosses and spearheads and anklets and bracelets, all rudely fashioned from the precious metals. Bob did not trust himself to say a word until he had lifted half a dozen of the pigs and cut away at some of the smaller articles with his knife. Then he said:

"Thar's no room fur doubt! It's treasure!"

"And it is share and share alike, remember!" cautioned Taylor.

"Of—of course," stammered Bob.

Avarice, doubt, selfishness, thoughts of murder were creeping in before the discovery was ten minutes old.

"The fool—to expect us to divide with him!" growled Bob to himself.

"Let 'em lookout! I may take all!" hissed Taylor as he held up a lump of gold.

Who had placed that treasure there! Men of the race who peopled the west before Columbus landed! The ores had been reduced and metal turned out in crude form, but the wealth was there. When assayed at the Denver mint later on its purity was a source of wonder. Why should the treasure have been left? may be asked. Who can tell when and why the Atzecs went? The ruins of their cities are found all over the west, but the race disappeared off the face of the earth before the Pilgrim fathers touched these shores.

"Bring along a chunk to show to the boys," said Bob, and each selected a specimen and made haste down the canyon.

The discovery was hailed with delight by the three outlaws left on guard, and plans were immediately made and discussed for loading up the stuff and getting out of the valley. In the making of these plans Taylor seemed to be entirely ignored, and when he put in his boast of finding the cave Bob took occasion to remark:

"We didn't need yer help in the least, 'cause we had the bearings all O. K., but it was white in you to offer yer services, an we hain't the men to forget it."

"But I'm to have my fifth of course!" hotly exclaimed Taylor.

The men looked at each other without replying, but presently he was ordered to stand guard at the wagon while they went up together to bring down the first load of treasure.

"They think they have caught a fool!" hissed Taylor as he looked after them, "but they are mistaken. They are playing with a tiger!"

CHAPTER XXII.

"Phew! But we have struck a cave of the dead!" exclaimed Joe, who was nearest the opening as the stone fell out.

A rank, musty odor issued from the cave and drove the three men down the canyon a distance of a hundred feet and kept them sneezing and coughing for a quarter of an hour. During this time the captain prepared a couple of torches, and by and by they advanced to find the odor no longer perceptible. The captain pushed his torch into the dark opening for a look at the interior of the cave, and after a moment he drew back and said:

"We have got a find here, but there will be some disagreeable work about it. The cave is heaped with bodies of the dead."

The others looked in to find that his words were true. It was a chamber sixteen or eighteen feet square and ten or twelve feet high, and it was solidly packed with a grayish mass. That mass was the shriveled and mummified bodies of the lost race—dead men, women and children who had been laid away for perhaps two or three centuries.

"Well, we have had our labor for our pains," said Harkins as he stepped back.

"And we don't want to discover any more caves," added Joe with a tinge of bitterness.

"If they followed the rule in burying these dead we shall find a fortune in here," said the captain as he braced his torch against a rock. "Let's see what I can discover."

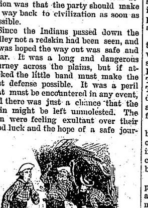
He entered the opening, thrust his hand into the mass of dust, worked it about for a moment, and then backed out holding in his fingers an anklet weighing at least four ounces. He rubbed the metal briskly on his sleeve, and lo! the shine of gold caught every eye!

"Worth at least seventy-five dollars," said the captain as he held it up, "and there ought to be bushels of them in there. Take it with you to camp and give 'em the news, and send up two of the men with shovels. Everything in there has got to be thrown out."

So will it be a century hence. The dust of those who live today will be treated as earthly clay in the search for wealth.

At the end of the third day there was a council of the wagonmen. The cave had yielded an amount beyond the wildest guess. It had been cleared of the last shovel of dust, and every ornament and relic had been carried to the camp. Each member of the party would have thousands of dollars, and the council was called to determine what next step should be taken. The unanimous decision was that the party should make its way back to civilization as soon as possible.

Since the Indians passed down the valley not a redskin had been seen, and it was hoped the way out was safe and clear. It was a long and dangerous journey across the plains, but if attacked the little band must make the best defense possible. It was a peril that must be encountered in any event, and there was just a chance that the train might be left unmolested. The men were feeling exultant over their good luck and the hope of a safe journey when the lookout at the mouth of the canyon, whose services had never for a moment been dispensed with, sent an alarm into camp that something was wrong.



"Worth at least seventy-five dollars."

In five minutes every man was at the barricade or wall. Opposite the mouth of the canyon, across the narrow valley, was a fine spring. A single Indian had come galloping up to dismount, but five minutes later a band of at least forty arrived and prepared to camp. The ponies were unsaddled, two or three fires kindled, and it was evident the redskins had gone into camp for the night. The captain, Joe and two or three other plainsmen drew aside for consultation; but it was a brief one.

"It's just one chance in a hundred that they may overlook us," said the captain. "The horses must be led as far up the canyon as we can get them, the fire put out and no man must close his eyes tonight."

The horses were at once led away, the fire smothered, and a quarter of an hour after the Indians arrived the canyon was plunged in midnight darkness and seemed to contain no living thing. The white covers had been removed from the wagons and carried up the rift, and one standing twenty feet away could not distinguish the vehicles. Joe and Harkins were ordered to remain with the wagons as protection to the girls, while the others took places along the embankment, and thus the night came on.

The Indians were on the warpath, but they seemed to have not the slightest suspicion of the presence of the train. They could plainly be heard singing, laughing and talking, and a few of them acted as if they were hilarious with whisky.

"All we've got to do is to keep quiet," whispered one of the men to the captain.

"I don't know. Those Indians are too much off their guard. They are acting a part. I think they have some plan in their heads. If some of them are not crawling this way before midnight I shall be greatly mistaken."

At ten o'clock the campfires of the Indians had burned low and all was quiet on that side of the valley. The men in the mouth of the canyon crouched behind rocks and logs, and the darkness was so dense that the keenest pair of eyes could not see a yard distant. One looking over the barrier into the valley could see a hundred feet quite distinctly, as the night was starlight and the trees cast no shadow there.

Eleven o'clock found everything quiet.

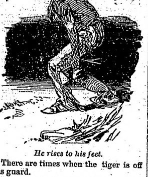
A quarter of an hour later, as the captain raised his head for a keen look around him, it seemed to him that the darkness of earth was blackened at a spot not over fifty feet away. A spot of black paint or an inkstand stands out in relief. A human figure dressed in black will stand out in relief against the gloom of midnight.

Was he mistaken? Did the object move? Was there an object to begin with? He touched the man nearest him on the shoulder and whispered his suspicions. After a steady look the man returned the whisper with:

"It's an infernal redskin creeping up to make sure that we are still here! It's a part of the same band we saw four days ago, and they suspect we are hidden away in some of the canyons!

"Pass the word to every man to lie low for his life and make no move until he gets the word! That fellow will come right in among us."

CHAPTER XXIII.



He rises to his feet.

There are times when the tiger is off his guard.

There is never an hour when the Indian of the plains is free from suspicion. In his waking hours each rock or tree or hillock may conceal an enemy. When he sleeps it is to waken at the croak of a frog or the chirp of a cricket, suspicious that the sounds were made by enemies closing in upon him.

The Indian is a hypocrite and a dissembler. If he suspects that an enemy is hidden in a strong position he will pass it carelessly by to return by stealth and wait and watch.

Three or four days had passed since the Indian band disappeared down the valley, and it had seemingly gone away satisfied that the train had escaped. But the warriors were not satisfied. They were mystified, but not satisfied. They had returned to play hypocrite and dissembler. They had gone into camp as part of the plan. They had waited for night—as another part of it.

White men would have advanced in a body toward the mouth of the canyon, or at least sent skirmishers forward to investigate. The Indian is a human cat. He creeps upon his prey—he wins by cunning and stealth.

"Tell Joe to come down here!" whispered the captain to the man at his side after watching the seeming figure a few minutes longer.

The man quietly disappeared, and Joe was at the captain's elbow.

"Do you see anything on the ground in line with my finger and perhaps two hundred feet away?" asked the captain.

"I do," replied Joe after a minute. "An Indian is creeping along to turn the end of the barricade and come into the canyon!"

"Sure?"

"I'll stake my life on it!"

Word was passed for every man to fall back to the wagon, and after a brief consultation between the captain and Joe one took position to the right and the other to the left of the entrance, but fifty feet back. If the Indian scout penetrated thus far he must pass between them, and his retreat would be cut off.

Now came a silence so profound that it was positively painful. The grimness of midnight in a city is broken by footsteps—the barking of dogs—the whistle of a locomotive. On the open plains the chirp of crickets never ceases while darkness lasts, and that very sound has kept lost men and women from going crazy under the great mental strain. The sound connected them with civilization and safety.

But in the grim and gloomy canyon there was no sound. The horses, which had been led to the extreme end, peered about them and shivered with fear. The men lying down about the wagon felt a weight upon them. If there were crickets in the grass they were silent.

If man wants to find a greater punishment for criminals than the dark cells of state prisons, let him turn to the canyon. No prisoner chained to a rock in the gloom and silence and darkness would keep his mind a week. The very silence would torture him until he would cry out to heaven for mercy, and the sound of his own voice would terrify him to insanity.

The captain and Joe had not been deceived. It was an Indian creeping toward the mouth of the canyon.

Creep! Creep! Creep!

So a tiger creeps up to within striking distance of a man. So a cat creeps to within striking distance of a bird. The sharpest ear could detect no sound. The shadows of evening could not have crept more noiselessly.

Now the human cat has reached the end of the barricade. Now he turns into the mouth of the canyon. Now he advances up the center. It is so dark in the rift that he cannot see his hand when held at arm's length. Instinct guides him. A rock lies in his path. He knows this before he sees it. He creeps up and carefully passes his hand over it. If the white men came in there with their wagons they might have moved the stone.

No, they did not. He creeps to another and another. They have not been disturbed. He sniffs at the air. If there was the least fire he would discover it. He lies with his ear to the ground. The stamp of a horse half a mile away would have been detected.

Creep! Creep! Creep!

Now he is within sixty feet of the wagons, now it is fifty, now forty. The slightest cough—a sleeper's change of position, a woman's sighing as she dreamed—would reach his ear. He heard nothing. Not a stone has been disturbed—not a wheel print can he find as he passes. For ten long minutes the red man listens with ears strained to catch the slightest sound.

Silence—nothing but silence.

Now he is satisfied. He rises to his feet and walks back to the barricade, turns to the left and holds straight for the camp on the opposite side without a pause. He is satisfied at last. He finds every warrior awake and alert for an alarm. In a few words he makes his report to the chief, and in ten minutes more the band is flitting down the valley so quietly that their departure is not suspected.

Morning comes and the men in the canyon are filled with astonishment and satisfaction. They could not know what the scout would report, and not an eye had closed in sleep during the night.

"Now for breakfast and then we will be off," said the captain after satisfying himself that the enemy had departed.

An hour later every wagon was ready to move and the train passed down the valley a couple of miles, crossed over into the smaller valley in which Taylor had encamped the day he was driven out, and I leave them for a time, as they push ahead to find a route through the foothills to the plains.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

You will remember the condition I was in five years ago, when I was afflicted with a combination of diseases, and thought there was NO HELP FOR ME. I tried all kinds of medicines, and scores of eminent physicians. My nerves were prostrated, producing dizziness, heart trouble and all the ills that make life miserable. I commenced to take DR. MILES' NERVINE and in three months I WAS PERFECTLY CURED. In my travels each year, when I see the thousands of physical wrecks, suffering from nervous prostration, taking prescriptions from local physicians who have no knowledge of their case, and whose death is certain, I feel like going to them and saying, "GET DR. MILES' NERVINE AND BE CURED." In my profession, where there are so many sufferers from overwork, mental prostration and nervous exhaustion, brought on by the character of the business engaged in, I would recommend "MILES' NERVINE" as a sure cure for all suffering from these causes. Colorless, Emaciated, Helpless

A Complete Cure by HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

This is from Mr. D. M. Jordan, a retired farmer, and one of the most respected citizens of Otsego Co., N. Y.

"Fourteen years ago I had an attack of the gravel, and have since been troubled with my Liver and Kidneys gradually growing worse. Three years ago I got down so low that I could scarcely walk. I looked more like a corpse than a living being. I had no appetite and for five weeks I ate nothing but gruel. I was badly emaciated and had no more color than a marble statue. Hood's Sarsaparilla was recommended and I thought I would try it. Before I had finished the first bottle I noticed that I felt better, suffered less, the inflammation of the bladder had subsided, the color began to return to my face, and I began to feel hungry. After I had taken three bottles I could eat anything without hurting me. Why, I got so hungry that I had to eat 5 times a day. I have now fully recovered, thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I feel well and am well. All who know me marvel to see me so well." D. M. JORDAN.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

AN IDEAL IDLENESS.

A SUMMER DAY IN MOSS GROWN WOODS BY A BABBLING BROOK.

Thoughts Suggested by an Afternoon in Midsummer Spent in the Shade of Growing Trees on a Couch of Nature's Down. Tireless Nature Never Rests.

It is a warm day in midsummer, and a fisherman is following along a trout brook. The stream runs through the forest—through hardwood groves, which, owing to their scant underbrush, look almost like English parks; through mossy evergreen glades, where every sound and color is subdued; through rocky ravines, down which the water hurries with fretful plaints against the bowlders in its path, till at last it finds an outlet in a mountain lake.

Today it is evident that all the wood life is prepared to be lazy—even the trout that are wont to rush so eagerly at worm or fly. Now the fisherman begins to feel the influence of this all pervading inertia, and finally he lays down his pole and stretches himself out on the brook's bank. Close to his side is a sound of rippling water, cool and soothing, while the spreading top of a maple keeps off the sun.

The bank here is covered with thick moss—a pleasant couch waiting for some one to come and use it. In the economy of the woods nothing is permitted to exist for itself only; the saplings have their own life, but must also furnish leaves and twigs to the deer, and bark to the nibbling hares. No plant or animal is entirely selfish, and so this humble moss, since it can do little else, is ready to serve as a resting place for the weary.

There is an old saying that goes, "Best ease is free ease"—or the ease bought with too much labor of preparation is hardly worth having. And this thought, though it may not be very profound, suggests one great delight of the woods, everything is free—is natural. No one but tireless nature has labored. No eyes have ached, no back has become bent, in the making of this couch of moss; no hands have toiled to rear the grateful shade of the maple. The refreshing splash and ripple of the brook is freely, unconsciously given.

The voluptuaries of the east were close students of the art of idleness. Lounging on their cushions, they listened to soft music and watched the movements of dancing slaves. Other slaves waved cooling fans, and, if their masters were exposed to the sun, held silken canopies above them. The eastern prince thought that the pleasures of idleness could be no further perfected.

But the dancers must often have grown weary; the slaves holding the canopies fainted in the sun; the fan bearers and the musicians doubtless wondered at the unjust fate which condemned them to labor in order that others might enjoy. No Indian rajah or Persian lord ever reclined upon an easier couch than this one on which the fisherman stretches himself. The brook makes the most delightful of music. Sunbeams dancing on leaf and moss and ripples are as pleasant to watch as the movement of weary slaves.

Nor do the sights and sounds of the woods lack variety. The music of the water is mingled with the twitter of forest birds—thrushes and wood sparrows; the songful enthusiasm of their annual youth is past, but the midsummer notes are full of happiness, and tell of nests well stocked with little ones. Squirrels chirp and chatter. The dead leaves strewing the ground are of every shade of brown and red and yellow, and the slender shafts of sunlight, which dart down through the breeze stirred foliage overhead, never fall twice upon colors that are exactly similar.

The trout fisherman, half dreamy, half observant, and wholly happy, has lain there till the long, warm summer afternoon is drawing to a close. The shy little wood creatures that love the dusk come out of their hiding places and run near him, quite fearless of his motionless figure. Delicate, mouselike creatures are here, the flying squirrels, in soft gray draperies. A mink trots over the wet bowlders in the brook's bed, and, conscious of its own importance, eyes the man suspiciously.

Darkness is coming on, and it is time for the trout fisherman to go home. He leaves the mossy bank regretfully, half persuaded that idleness, and not work, is man's chief blessing.—Francis S. Palmer in Christian Union.

A Bride of Two Years.

England can furnish instances of child marriages, not perhaps to any great extent, but as young as any to be found in eastern countries, where such marriages are almost of daily occurrence. The youngest English bride on record is, beyond all doubt, a daughter of Sir William Brereton, who in the Sixteenth century was united in bonds of holy matrimony, when only two years of age, to a bridegroom who was only her senior by one year. In this case the children were carried into the church, and their elders spoke for them. Subsequently, when the pair reach years of maturity, they ratified the strange tie. In this instance the object was to carry out a desire to unite property.—All the Year Round.

For Towing a Few Hundred Miles.

In April, 1888, the engines of the steamship California, from Hamburg for New York, broke down when the vessel was about fifty-six miles southeast of Nantucket shoals and 300 miles east of this city. She was towed to this port by the freighter Chateau Margaux, bound from New York to Bordeaux. The latter was awarded $15,000 salvage.—New York Evening Sun.

Indians and Japanese.

The Indians of the interior have nothing in common with those of the western coast. They lack the small feet, almond eyes, coarse, heavy black hair, short stature and timidity that mark the coast Indian as coming from Japan.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

THE LIQUOR HABIT CURED!

HAVE YOU A FRIEND, near or remote, who has fallen a victim to the tyrannical appetite for liquor or morphine. Are you interested in having him released from the bondage—a bondage worse than death? What would you not give in time or money to enable him to break the galling chains of appetite and give him power to stand upon his feet in the dignity of his true manhood? Can this be done, you ask. Yes, induce him to take the Silver Ash Treatment at Moorhead, Minn., and the diseased condition will be cured, the appetite for drink will be destroyed and he will be a man again. We know it will cure him. The institute is located on Front Street, over Mackall's drug store; H. D. Scott is manager and Dr. D. C. 'Round Home.

Wheat—1 Hard 57.
1 Northern 55.

Comrade A. H. Cleveland and wife returned from a visit to Michigan last week.

George Carpenter is suffering with the grip, or a bad cold, or something of that kind.

I. I. Hillestad was one of Fosston's prominent merchants in the city on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Roberts are rejoicing over the arrival of a little boy at their home, born Feb. 1st.

Minor Rood came in from Mentor on Saturday last and spent a few days in the full enjoyment of city life.

M. B. McClellan, Bishop's genial traveling man, was in the city on Friday and made the JOURNAL a pleasant call.

Geo. McLean has accepted a situation as book-keeper in a job printing office in St. Paul, and has entered upon the discharge of his new duties.

The immense snow-fall augurs well for an abundant wheat crop next season. This sign is one of the infallible ones that never yet has been known to fail.

O. M. Omlie, of Grafton, was a passenger in the Northern Pacific train on Thursday on his way to Iowa, and stopped over visiting friends in the city until Friday evening. Mr. O. is a Crookston old-timer.

The Great Northern trains were very much mixed up by the storm of last week. Wednesday morning's train did not get in until evening and Friday's train was not much better. The trains from the west were very much more paralyzed.

The Great Northern company has put on daily trains, and now we can go to Thief River Falls and return every day if we wish, or we can go to Fosston and return every day if we prefer that. This move may truly be said to "fill a longfelt want."

Gardner Stevens, an old-time Crookston boy, was in the city a short time on Saturday, enroute for his home in Minneapolis. He has been out east with the Butler surveying party who have been running lines for the Great Northern railroad company.

It is indeed a cold day when Hawes, the milkman, gets left—but Tuesday week—the blizzard day, was too much for him. He couldn't make the riffle, for the first time since he has driven Childs & Co. milk route. But then he was not the only man who got left that day, in fact they were all off color and none showed up until next day.

On Friday the front door of the post-office got out of rig and Frank Creamer with a few others stood around in the cold waiting for it to be opened. After waiting in vain for ten minutes or so, Frank looked at the door in a vindictive tone of voice, and said to it: "Well, stay shut if you want to; but you just wait till the 4th of March and I'll bet you will open wide enough." With which remark Frank adjourned to find a warm corner somewhere.

The blizzard of last week reminded the oldest inhabitant of old times. Dan McDonald says it was not a patchin' to what was here in the spring of '75. "Why," said he," I came up from Glyndon that spring and the snow was drifted even full between the hills on the north and the hills on the south of Crookston. That would make this city buried in snow from 20 to 30 feet above the highest building. That was the time that Glyndon was from 12 to 15 days without a train."

Talking of the present price of hogs to a JOURNAL man Ole Omlie said: "I have never seen the day yet in this valley when hogs did not pay a a fair living profit. Why, I remember years ago when I was a boy at home my father used to sell lots of hogs at one and one-half cents per pound on foot. I never saw pork as low as that here. There is a way to feed hogs to make pork at a loss even at the present prices and there's a way to do it at a profit at one-half the present price—but it takes intelligence and care to do it. And the longer I live the more I realize that it requires, the highest kind of intelligence as well as pluck and muscle to make a financial success of farming."

Henry Peterson:—I have just returned from a three weeks trip to Milwaukee, Chicago and other cities. Talk about cold weather! You fellows don't know anything about it up here. May be you wont believe it but what I said about the weather, when I was on the streets of Milwaukee froze up so quick and solid that my companion did not hear it and it will take till next Fourth of July to thaw my words out and then somebody, whoever happens to be where I was when I spoke will hear my opinion of Milwaukee weather. I tell you I am glad to get back to Crookston where such things can't happen. Talk about dull times! We are not in it with those fellows. Times are so dull there that they use 'em to pound beefsteak with when they are lucky enough to get beefstead to pound. You fellows ought to go east once if you are not satisged with life in the Red River Valley!"

The farmer in Polk county who has steadily diversified his products is not doing so very much kicking, because, while his wheat crop last year did not make him rich—was raised in fact at a loss, he does not have to depend on wheat for a money crop. He is selling pork at a big profit; he is selling mutton at a big profit; he is selling beef at a fair profit and he is selling butter and eggs at a big profit. He is the man who, when hogs were low, when cattle were a drug in the market and butter could not be made at a profit, quietly planned for this day—and he is now all right. And that man has also been making big money on his potato crop—for he has had them in abundance to sell, he has not had an over-crop of wheat but he has had barley to fatten his hogs and plenty of oats to feed and to keep. The only difference between him and some of his neighbors is that he has used his brains in his business and he is making a success of it and demonstrating that the right kind of farming pays as well as any other kind of business.

By an advertisement that appears in Farm, Field and Stockman, it appears that one M. M. Brown has contracted with the Great Northern railroad company for 40,000 acres of land lying along the Sand Hill river, between Edna and the Red River in Polk County. He proposes the organization of a stock company to handle these lands and the first step to be taken is the drainage of this vast tract by opening the closed channel of the Sand Hill river and the making of lateral ditches. If this scheme is carried out it will demonstrate the feasibility of drainage that has been so longed talked of in the Valley, and will soon show by a practical test whether it will pay to do the same with the other water courses that are at present closed in like manner. The advertisement paints the scheme in glowing colors and some of its statements therein contained makes the old settlers in this Valley smile audibly. The JOURNAL however would like to see the plan successfully carried out, as it would benefit hundreds of acres besides the 40,000 contempleted. We hope the plan will be carried out.

A hale old man, Mr. Jas. Wilson, of Allens Springs, Ill., who is over 60 years of age, says: "I have in my time tried a great many medicines, some of excellent quality; but never before did I find any that would so completely do all that is claimed for it as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. It is truly a wonderful medicine. For sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

Will Encourage Stone Throwing.

Transparent glass bricks have on occasion been let into the walls of buildings to afford light at places where a window would interfere with the architectural plan. It is now proposed to cast glass, not necessarily transparent, into large blocks for buildings. This material is practically indestructible, perfectly nonabsorbent, and therefore dampproof in a manner which few bricks are, and in this way coarse glass of this kind could be made nearly as cheap as concrete, stone or baked clay.—Boston Globe.

TO SUCCEED LAMAR

THE PRESIDENT APPOINTS AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.

Howell E. Jackson Named—He Is a Democrat, and Hails from Tennessee—Some Question About His Confirmation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—Howell E. Jackson, of Tennessee, has been nominated by the president to be associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, vice L. Q. C. Lamar, deceased.

The appointment of Judge Jackson was an agreeable surprise to the Democrats here who had expected President Harrison to name a Republican to succeed the late Justice Lamar. Nevertheless, the appointment is generally commended and the senate will promptly confirm it, Judge Jackson having formerly been a member of that body, and, accordingly, entitled to the senatorial courtesy which is always observed in such cases.

WILL HE BE CONFIRMED?

Considerable Objection to Judge Jackson Among Senators.

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—The comment upon the appointment by President Harrison of Judge Jackson to succeed the late Associate Justice Lamar upon the supreme bench, made by Mr. J. S. Clarkson, was the subject of considerable discussion among politicians during the day. The fact that Mr. Clarkson has requested Senator Cullom to protest against the confirmation of Judge Jackson's nomination adds interest to the affair. Senator Cullom was seen during the afternoon by a reporter and asked what action, if any, he had determined to take. He said that he had been so busy with other matters that he had been unable to consider the subject and had nothing to say as to his intention with the regard to the course of the nomination. He said Mr. Clarkson's message to him he considered to be personal in its nature and he did not expect to make public either it or his reply thereto, which had not yet been sent.

Defends the President.

It is not considered probable by many of the senators that Judge Jackson's nomination will be rejected, notwithstanding that there has arisen considerable objection to him among some members of the senate. One of the president's friends said, that before making the nomination the president was assured that the confirmation of a Republican would be extremely improbable, and that being the case he chose to promote a Democrat who had demonstrated by his decisions on the bench that he was a protectionist and a nationalist with a big "N." There had been, he said, more conviction for violations of the federal election laws in Judge Jackson's court than any other in the United States.

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—Edward M. Just, a millionaire real estate owner of this city, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. No cause for the deed is known.

Believes in Wheat.

A Milbank, South Dakota farmer, writing to the Minneapolis Evening Journal under date of Jan. 23rd has strong faith in the future of wheat and gives the following very plausible reasons for the faith that is within him. He says:

A good deal has been written lately on the future of wheat, wheat supply, over production, etc. In 1880, 12 years ago, we had 37,986,000 acres, and 498,549,000 bushels of wheat. In 1892 we have 38,500,000 acres and 500,000,000 commercial bushels, but 514,000 acres and but 1,551,000 bushels more than in 1880, and our population increased 13,000,000, which would require 50,000,000 bushels more for consumption. Now, suppose the average yield per acre of 1890 and 1892 had been the same as the preceding 10 years, 12 bushels instead of 14 bushels, or 24 bushels for the two years instead of 28, with an average of 39,000,000 acres, we should have had 156,000,000 bushels less than we have, and instead of having 35,000,000 to export in the last two years we should have had but 294,000,000. Any one can see the low price of the present crop is caused by piling 500,000,000 on top of 612,000,000 bushels; but the crop of 612,000,000 bushels was a godsend to the northwest, for it added $800 to every wheat farm in the two Dakota's and Minnesota; and now let me predict the next two years will show an acreage of not over 38,000,000 acres, and say 12 bu average, the crop will be 456,000,000 bu or 912,000,000 bu for two years, and take out 370,000,000 bu a year or 740,000,000 bu for two years, that will give us 172,000,000 bu for export or 86,000,000 each year instead of 175,000,000 each, as for the last two. Now, mark again. You will see wheat $1.20 in Minneapolis inside of two years. To me, and I have grown wheat for 35 years the outlook is good for wheat. Dairying is good. Hogs are high. The winter is hard on wheat; wheat is low. European countries are buying liberally. Farmers should have some hogs, cattle, etc., to sell, but I think they will make a serious mistake if they let up on wheat.

The Review of Reviews for February appeals with uncommon force to men of action and men of affairs in the large and small cities of the United States. It is full of timely discussion upon such questions as the municipal ownership of gas and electric lighting works, the problems of city transit and administration, the gifts of millionaires for public purposes in their respective home cities, and such practical questions as the inheritance tax. The beauty of the treatment of these questions by the Review of Reviews lies in its freedom from mere theory and dissertation and its reliance upon plenty of solid and timely facts. One can always go to the Review of Reviews without disappointment. The feature of the February number that will perhaps attract most attention of all is Mr. W. T. Stead's great character sketch of the late Jay Gould, an English journalist dealing with as distinctive an American character as our new Western civilization has produced.

Dangers of the Season.

The sudden changes in weather in the latter part of the winter and early spring are a source of colds and coughs. This season is a particularly dangerous one for persons with weak lungs or a delicate constitution. A slight cold is likely to become a serious one, and the cough that follows is the one great cause of the many deaths from consumption in the early spring. Never neglect a cold or cough. Keep a reliable remedy on hand and check the first cough, that may lead to consumption. As such a remedy the medicine called Kemp's Balsam is strongly recommended. For every form of throat and lung disorder including the la grippe cough, croup and consumption in the first stages, it probably has no equal anywhere. Get a bottle today.

Light.

The grandest sentence in any book in the world is this, in Holy writ: "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light." Natural Science can tell you in detail how absolutely indispensable light is to the continuance of any form of life on our globe. It is not the purpose of this paragraph, however, to discourse upon the benefits of natural light, but to present some curious fact connected with it, and the numerous artificial means of illumination invented by the ingenuity of man. The ancients thought that objects were made visible by something projected from the eye, and it was not until about 350 years before the Christian Era that men began to ask—Why can we not see in darkness? It then dawned upon somebody that light falling upon an object was what made it visible, and that the eye was only a machine for receiving the rays of light, and transmitting to the brain the impressions they give as to the size, shape and color of external things. The first artificial light was probably a burning brand—then a reed saturated in oil, then the tallow dip, the candle, the oil lamp, the kerosene lamp, the gas, and last and greatest, the electric light. Intellectual light is another kind—the light needed to guide our actions, and that is furnished by the experience of ourselves or others. If you want light on the subject of travel, everybody's experience is clear as the sun that the Burlington Route is the best for all travelers. For information tickets, maps, etc., address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

D. F. McDonald, labor in First Ward	2 25
D. F. McDonald, labor in Second Ward	1 50
D. F. McDonald, labor in Fourth Ward	17 65

The finance committee reported that owing to the storm they had not been able to get together and audit a large portion of the bills and asked for further time in which to report; same was granted.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Anderson:—Resolved, that the proper officers be authorized to borrow of the sinking fund commissioners the amount of $969.21 from the sinking fund and special sinking fund, and to issue a city due bill to said commissioners for the same. Aldermen voting in the affirmative:—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Morrisey, Monroe, Cromb. Alderman voting in the negative, none. Resolution declared carried.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Monroe:—Resolved, that the proper officers be requested to transfer the amount now to the credit of the park fund, temporarily to the credit of the general fund. Aldermen voting in the affirmative:—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Morrisey, Monroe, Cromb, Aldermen voting in the negative, none. Declared carried.

The following resolution was passed. Resolved, That the proper officers be instructed to replace the amount transferred from the park fund under the foregoing resolution back from the general fund when the real estate taxes are paid in July. Aldermen voting in the affirmative:—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Morrisey, Monroe, Cromb. Negative none. Carried.

The liquor application of T. G. Thompson was read to the council.

The communication for the Great Northern railroad company accompanied by a contract relating to the sewer was read.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Jerome:—Resolved, That the agreement with the Great Northern railway company relating to the sewer under its tracks at the west end of Third street be accepted and the proper officers be instructed to execute the same in behalf of the city. Carried.

The clerk was instructed to insert the contract in the minutes of the meeting.

THIS AGREEMENT, made this 11th day of January, A. D. 1893, by O. K. Raw, and between the Great Northern Railroad company, party of the first part and the City of Crookston, party of the second part.

WITNESSETH:—That for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to it in hand paid by the City of Crookston, and the further considerations herein expressed, the party of the first part hereby licenses and permits the party of the second part to establish, construct and maintain a sewer under its road bed and tracks in its yard and depot grounds in said City of Crookston, Polk County, Minnesota; said sewer to be opposite the west end of Third street in said city, and to be made according to plans and dimensions approved by the Chief Engineer of the party of the first part.

And in consideration of this license and permission the party of the second part hereby agrees to establish, construct and maintain said sewer at its own cost and expense, and to do the work thereof in such a manner as not to interfere with the operation of the railway of the party of the first part, or with the support and maintenance of the road bed and tracks of said railway, and in case said sewer shall at any time become broken or out of repair so as to interfere with the maintenance and support of said road bed and tracts, the party of the second part will use due diligence in repairing the same.

And it is further agreed that the sewer shall be so constructed that any surface water that may accumulate on the east side of said road bed or banks in the vicinity of said sewer can be drained into said sewer.

And it is further provided that this contract shall become of full force and effect after its acceptance by the City Council of the said City of Crookston, and executed by its mayor, comptroller and clerk.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have caused these presents to be duly executed as of the day and year first above written.

THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD CO.

The matter of piling on the river bank near the Jerome bridge was left in the hands of the city engineer.

The city attorney reported relating to the case of Mrs. Cox.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Monroe.

Whereas, the city has for some time been supporting a Mrs. Cox and whereas, it has come to the knowledge of the council that she holds in her own right in equity certain real estate in Polk county which she is willing to transfer to the city of Crookston in payment for such support. Now, therefore be it resolved that the president of the council and city attorney are hereby authorized to act as the agent of the city in securing title to said real estate, for the benefit of the city. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Monroe, That the poor commissioner be and is hereby instructed to furnish to the council at its next regular meeting a list of all persons now receiving assistance from the city or who have received assistance from the city within the last twelve months together with the amounts paid to each with the residence and description of such parties previous to their obtaining assistance, and with all such other particulars as it is in his power to give. Carried.

Alderman Cromb offered the following resolution seconded by Alderman Anderson. Resolved, That the city purchasing agent be instructed to procure a car load of oak lumber for crossings, provided it can be furnished on the cars at Crookston for $28.00 a thousand. Carried.

The matter of the bill of John R. McKinnon which had been laid over for some time relating to the dumping of earth on the Jerome bridge then came up.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Monroe, that the bill of John R. McKinnon for dumping earth at the Jerome bridge amounting to $18.00 be allowed. Aldermen voting in the affirmative Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Monroe, Cromb. Alderman Morrisey not voting. Negatives, none. Declared carried.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

Early Hotels.

Our attention has been called to an error which crept into our write up of the Box hotel whereby we were made to say that Wm. Stuart built it "early in the seventies and for several years run it as a saloon." This is not quite in accordance with the facts and how it happened to appear in print that way we dinna ken. Mr. Stuart commenced his hotel life in this city early in the seventies by putting up a tent hotel which, soon proving inadequate he built a frame hotel hotel nearer to the depot by several blocks than was the tent hotel. Of course he had a bar in the new hotel—in those days it was not thought practical to keep hotel without one. About May 3rd, 1878 Wm. Box rented the hotel taking possession with his family the following week and Mr. Stuart built a large saloon building on the corner of the next block south (the building now occupied by Moeckel & Hoch as a restaurant.) Mr. Box soon found that his custom was greater than the hotel could accommodate and in April 1879 commenced the building of a large addition in the rear of the old hotel and running out to within 14 feet or so of Main street. We find in the JOURNAL of May 10th, '78 a notice of the arrival of the family of Mr. Box and the further information that they brought one of the first pianos to the city. We remember the hotel in the seventies when it was called the Stuart house that many a time there were so many guests "Billy" had to make up all the "shake downs" the house could muster then allow the balance to hang up on pegs around or sleep on the floor, the counter, or a chair as they preferred. Mr. Box did a flourishing business for several years but was at last forced to give up hotel life on account of sickness in his family. After he gave up the house the next occupant built the saloon annex facing on Main street. The next hotel to be built in Crookston after the Stuart house, was built by Robert Houston, on the corner of Main and Robert streets and is still in existance, known as the Sherman House. It was run by Mr. Houston in 1878 and called the Crookston house. In the fall it was rented by W. H. Jennings and Walter Higgins, and we believe that it was Mr. Jennings who named it the Sherman house. Later on he bought out Higgins' interest and run the hotel himself for several years making extensive additions. Then the Commercial began to loom up and the early hotels were forced to take second place, but no hotels in our city ever held a more important place in our history, around which more old time memories cluster than did the old Box hotel which is now practically a ruin.

STATE PORTFOLIO.

OFFERED TO AND ACCEPTED BY JUDGE GRESHAM.

The Fact Will, It Is Said, Be Made Public Soon by Cleveland Himself. Judge Gresham Preparing to Vacate His Seat and Remove to Washington—Considerations Which Induced Mr. Cleveland to Select the Indiana Jurist.

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—A special to The Herald from New York says:

Judge Walter Q. Gresham, of Chicago, is to be secretary of state in the Cleveland administration. This fact has become known here during the day to a few persons. The offer of the post has been made to Judge Gresham and he has accepted. Mr. Cleveland himself will make the fact known in a day or two. This selection will be sure to create some surprise when it becomes known.

Gresham to Leave the Bench.

The rumor that Gresham was offered the place was circulated here some time ago, and was received with incredulity by many Democrats. They did not deem it possible that Mr. Clevelend would go outside the ranks of his party for a secretary of state and did not think that Judge Gresham would accept even if the tender was made him. But the unexpected has happened and Judge Gresham will in two weeks resign his seat on the bench and prepare to remove to Washington to take up his duties as secretary of state. Thus a man who four years ago was a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination is to become premier under the incoming Democratic administration.

Gresham Not Talking.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—The Herald has the following: Judge Gresham refuses to discuss the dispatch from New York relative to his acceptance of a cabinet portfolio: This action on the part of the eminent jurist, when taken in conjunction with the questions put to him by The Herald reporter, is equivalent to an acknowlegment that he has accepted the premiership. It will be readily understood that Judge Gresham could not talk on the subject until Mr. Cleveland had announced his intentions.

Gresham's Appointment Cannot Be Questioned.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—It is reported in this city on authority that cannot be questioned that Walter Q. Gresham has accepted the portfolio of state in Mr. Cleveland's cabinet. It will be remembered that Don M. Dickinson made a flying trip to Chicago a week ago and reported results to Mr. Cleveland. It is now said that Mr. Dickinson ascertained Judge Gresham's views on some of the most important questions which will come before the next administration and expressed Mr. Cleveland's desire that Gresham should be his premier. After Mr. Dickinson's return a formal tender of the portfolio of state was made by letter and Judge Gresham, after careful consideration, accepted. It is practically settled that John G. Carlisle will be secretary of the treasury and Daniel Lamont secretary of war. It is also reported that Hoke Smith, the editor of the Atlanta Journal and the original Cleveland man in Georgia, will be secretary of agriculture. W.S. Bissell, of Buffalo, formerly law partner of Mr. Cleveland, is now slated for postmaster general instead of attorney general. Hilary A. Herbert, chairman of the naval committee of the house, is mentioned as possible secretary of the navy and there is talk of Congressman W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, for secretary of the interior.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, Feb. 14, 1892.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrington of Grand Forks, are visiting with friends here.

Mr. Partridge of the Fergus wagon company, was in town Monday.

The Euclid Clyde association held a meeting Monday evening.

We are informed that Robert Gaston, one of the foremen on the Keystone farm, will soon return from Canada accompanied by his bride. Here is ho, Bob.

N. J. Johnson, who represents the United States Chemical Co., of Chicago, was in the city on Wednesday.

Tom Brown left town one night last week with Dr. Chapin in the sleigh with him for a drive of five miles, and according to all accounts, experienced a pretty rough trip. But Tom says it was well worth the trouble, as when he left Euclid it was plain Tom Brown and upon his return it was Tom Brown and Son. Says the son is a good one and weighs eight pounds.

Mrs. Henry Biever returned from quite an extended visit in the southern part of the state Wednesday morning.

Our Fair.

Grand Forks Herald:—Polk county, Minn., will hold a fair. Polk county is larger than Rhode Island and ought to get up a fine exhibit.

And this is what the Fisher Bulletin has to say of our fair:—"The Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association, elected its officers this week, and a strong effort will be made to hold a fair this summer, which will not only attract the attention of thousands of our farmers, but at the same time be of great benefit to Polk county. To this end, J. V. E Wyatt, secretary of the association, whose office is in Crookston, invites correspondence from our farmers, expressing their views as to the best month in which to hold the proposed fair, and such other suggestions as may be of interest to farmers. A county fair, properly managed is not only a source of instruction and pleasure, but it serves to make new acquaintances and present to the outside world the wonderful resources of Polk county."

Mr. Albert Favorite, of Arkansas City, Kan., wishes to give our readers the benefit of his experience with colds. He says: "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly recovered from it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I would never get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen years ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. When I had got through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or a cold since. I have recommended it to others, and all speak well of it." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

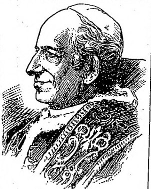
TO THE HOLY CITIES.

PILGRIMAGES TO ROME, JERUSALEM AND ELSEWHERE.

The Pilgrims Now on Their Journey Are Indeed Favored—Contrasts With the Olden Time—The Crusades—Protestant Pilgrims—Steel and Steam Devotion's Allies

The year of jubilee has come again, and already Catholics from all parts of the world are turning toward Rome or other places consecrated by their faith. No longer in peculiar dress and marked with a cross, no longer afoot and bearing a small bag to receive the contributions of the faithful, for in these days steel and steam are the allies of faith, and the pilgrims leaving New York harbor early this February expect to enjoy Palm Sunday in Rome and Easter in Jerusalem, visit many places of interest between times and be in New York again for the May festivals.



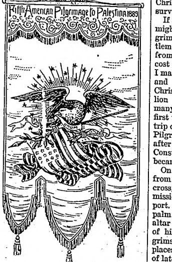
POPE LEO XIII.

As might have been expected, jubilee years have greatly multiplied. The first was proclaimed by Pope Boniface VIII in 1300, and the blessing was granted only to such as had made a pilgrimage to the shrine of the apostles at Rome. Once in a century was the time at first, but Popes Clement V, Urban VIII and Sixtus IV reduced the period successively to 50, 35 and 25 years. Now a jubilee is ordered even more frequently—that is, for any important event—and that of 1893 is proclaimed by Pope Leo XIII in honor of the 50th anniversary of his consecration as a bishop. And it is but justice to add that many Protestants will rejoice with the hundreds of millions of Catholics that in this era of doubt and unsettlement so wise a pontiff sits in the chair of St. Peter.

As the pilgrim no longer goes afoot and in a peculiar garb, so he no longer returns from Jerusalem with a palm in his hand. As the pilgrim no longer walks, so the crusader no longer fights, and the palmer, or returned pilgrim, is no longer a sole survivor out of many who started, for, though the Turk is still nominal ruler of Jerusalem, England rules the Turk, the Jaffa railroad is completed, and tickets are sold and baggage checked from London to Gethsemane. So it is rather matter of surprise that the first organized pilgrimage from the United States to the Holy Land was in February, 1889.

On the 21st of that month the steamer Wieland left the Hoboken dock with 101 Catholics bound for Jerusalem, and at least 15 times as many were there to see them start. In the pilgrim band were 35 priests, including 2 bishops, and 15 ladies, all under the direction of Father Charles Vissani, Franciscan, who organized the band. Just previous to their departure the pilgrims went in solemn procession to St. Patrick's cathedral, the noted and beautiful edifice on Fifth avenue, New York, where high mass was celebrated by the Right Rev. Bishop Wigger of Newark, and Archbishop Corrigan delivered an address to the pilgrims.

They carried with them a silken banner thought by many to be the finest ever manufactured in the United States, and religious and patriotic enthusiasm rose to the highest pitch when it was unfurled, for one side was devoted to the nation and the other to the faith. This banner was, or rather is, 8 feet high and 5 feet wide. The obverse side has a hand painted representation of the resurrection. The figure is shown on white damask silk surrounded by vines, with the passion flower intwined. The baldequin above bears as an inscription the 10th verse of the 11th chapter of Isaiah: "And his sepulcher shall be glorious." On the reverse side is a figure of an American eagle soaring aloft with the stars and stripes—in one set of talons bearing the emblems of war; in the other, the olive branch of peace. From his beak streams the motto, "E Pluribus Unum." These are only the principal figures. The golden fringe, tassels and general tracery are of the finest. It was laid as America's memento in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher at the tomb of the Saviour, where it is now held among the most cherished treasures.



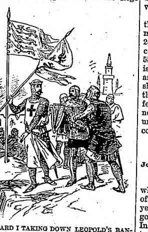
Fifth American Pilgrimage to Palestina 1889
E PLURIBUS UNUM
BANNER OF AMERICAN PILGRIMS.

These pilgrims took part in the magnificent ceremonies of the last week in Lent in Jerusalem, and 18 of them were selected for the annual ceremony of feet washing by the Latin patriarch at Jerusalem. On Good Friday they traversed the usual route of Calvary and held a prominent place in the ceremonies of Easter. They visited all the holy places, made the tour of the Holy Land and still reached home early in the season. It really dazzles the imagination to contrast their experience with that of the pilgrims of only a thousand years ago, and still more of those warriors who tried in their blind, brave way to improve the situation.

In all history there is no episode more wonderful and thrilling than that series of movements collectively known as the crusades. "All Europe rose as by one impulse and precipitated itself upon Asia," is the lively expression of one historian. "Robber kings and bandit barons," says another, "crowded to do battle for the tomb of the Prince of Peace, and defenseless captives were massacred by tens of thousands in honor of him who forbade his followers to shed human blood."

It is scarcely an exaggeration. At intervals for 175 years successive streams of knights and yeomen, kings, noblemen and peasants, even of women and children and singing priests, poured into Asia Minor, and of all these millions not 1 in 20 ever saw home again. Of the first throng some 200,000 perished in Hungary, Bulgaria and the Greek provinces by famine and the hostility of the natives. Of the first 300,000 who crossed into Asia, aided by the Greeks, who were anxious to be rid of them, not one lived to tell the tale. The Turks made a pyramid of their bones.

Yet the undaunted Christians pressed on, with regularly organized armies, after their first losses, and in the last year of the 11th century captured Jerusalem, which they held 87 years. Then came such "gentle pilgrims" as King Philip of France, King Richard I of England, Leopold of Austria and their kind, for it is to be remembered that all the crusaders were ranked as pilgrims and entitled to honors and indulgences as such. King Richard joined in prayer with his allies at the holy places, but he cursed Philip for refusing to work on the siege engines, and when Leopold hoisted the banner of Austria on the walls of Acre Richard threw it in the ditch and placed that of St. George in its stead. He would not get married in Lent or inaugurate a movement on Easter, but a few days later he had 5,000 Mohammedan captives massacred and wrote of it as "a service acceptable to heaven."



RICHARD I TAKING DOWN LEOPOLD'S BANNER.

All these were pilgrims and millions more like them. It is estimated that 6,000,000 Christians volunteered for the holy war, and that at least half of these went on till death stopped most of them and a truce the remainder. The net result was a treaty by Edward I of England of the eighth and last crusade which gave Christians the same rights at the holy sepulcher which they had enjoyed before the movements began. The last act in the bloody drama was the capture of Acre by assault, led by Sultan Kelaun, May 18, 1291. Sixty thousand Christians were massacred, and the few survivors sold into slavery.

If it were not so serious a subject, one might commend to the easy going pilgrims of this year the story of the gentleman who, being asked the best route from Washington to Richmond and the cost of the trip, replied, "The only time I made it I was three years on the way, and it cost me a leg." It cost the Christians of 1096 to 1291 about a million legs to get to Jerusalem and as many more trying to hold it, but for the first thousand years of Christianity the trip could be made in comparative peace. Pilgrimage thither began very early, and after the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, went thither it became the grand passion.

On setting out the pilgrim received from his priest a peculiar gown and cross, from his bishop a letter of commission and from his sovereign a passport. In the Holy Land he gathered a palm branch, which was laid upon the altar when he reached home as a proof of his journey, and so returning pilgrims were called palmers. Many other places are now points of pilgrimage, and of late years many companies of Protestants have gone from various parts of Europe to Palestine and a few from the United States. The journey is now, however, little more than a pleasure excursion.

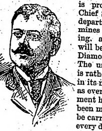
Mineral Specimens.

Mr. Arturo F. Wendt is engaged in mining in Chili, and is preparing a fine collection of mineral specimens which will be exhibited at the World's fair.

DIAMONDS ON EXHIBITION.

The Gems Will Be Mined and Cut at the World's Fair.

There will be no more interesting exhibit at the World's fair than one which is promised by Chief Skiff of the department of mines and mining, and which will be known as Diamond court. The undertaking is rather colossal in its nature, but as every arrangement has already been made it will be carried out in every detail. Ten thousand carats' weight of South African diamonds will be washed out of South African dirt by Kaffirs, who will appear in the dress worn by them in their native land.



CHIEF SKIFF.

Five large sailing ships will be required to transport the diamantiferous earth taken from the celebrated Kimberley mines to the United States. When this soil arrives in Chicago, it will be stored in the ore yards and thence carted as needed to Diamond court. Washing machines similar in every respect to those in use at the Cape will be erected in the space allotted to the diamond exhibit, and the eyes of Kaffirs and visitors alike will doubtless sparkle as the dull looking little pebbles, which have been called "concentrated value," fall from the dull blue earth.

Nearly all of the diamonds taken out of this dirt will be cut right on the spot. A large jewelry firm will erect a diamond cutting plant, perfect in every respect, and their best workmen will be employed, the company simply changing its base of operations temporarily to Chicago. The Jewish diamond merchants of Amsterdam will also have an important exhibit of the art of gem polishing.

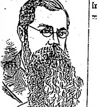
Since diamonds were discovered in Cape Colony, South Africa, in 1867, nine tons of the precious stones, representing when cut a money value of $500,000,000, have been taken from these mines. The business is now practically monopolized by a large company, which regulates the output by the demand, thus preventing an overstocking of the market and incidentally maintaining the high prices which have prevailed for several years.

It may interest the uninitiated to know that of the diamonds taken from the best mines only 8 per cent are of first water, 25 per cent are of second quality, 20 per cent of third quality, and the remaining 55 per cent is used for slitting and polishing stones of better quality as well as for incrusting cheap rings of the showy kind. Some of them also find their way into glass cutters, while not a few go into the cluster rings, the cheapness of which so often surprises persons unfamiliar with the true value of the commonest diamonds.

WISCONSIN'S NEW SENATOR.

John L. Mitchell, Democrat, Who Will Succeed Senator Sawyer, Republican.

John Lendrum Mitchell of Milwaukee, who has been elected by the Democrats of Wisconsin to succeed Philetus Sawyer in the United States senate, is as good a business man as he is a politician. In fact, he is said to be a millionaire. Mr. Mitchell's career has been one long series of triumphs. He is the son of Alexander Mitchell, who was at one time a well known railroad man. John Lendrum Mitchell was born in Milwaukee, Oct. 19, 1843. He received a good groundwork education at home and then went abroad, completing his studies in England, Switzerland and Germany. When the civil war broke out, shortly after his return from Europe, Mr. Mitchell joined the Union army as a second lieutenant in the Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Volunteer infantry. He served with distinction and after the war devoted his attention to mercantile pursuits, in which he was eminently successful. He was a Democratic member of the Wisconsin state senate in 1872, 1873, 1875 and 1876. In 1885 he was president of the public school board of the city of Milwaukee.



JOHN L. MITCHELL.

Mr. Mitchell's debut in national politics was made in the Fifty-second congress, to which he was elected as a Democrat by a plurality of 7,000 over his Republican opponent, R. C. Spencer. In the general election last November he was re-elected, and his elevation to the senate will therefore necessitate a special election in the Fourth congressional district, which he represented.

Mr. Mitchell is a man of fine personal appearance. He is very popular with the Union veterans, owing to his policy while a member of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to which position he was appointed by President Cleveland. It is thought by many that this fact militated strongly in his favor during the late senatorial contest.

Mr. Mitchell is a connoisseur of fine paintings and aristocratic horseflesh. He has a large amount of money judiciously invested in each of his fads. He takes great interest in agricultural matters, in which he is a good deal of an expert, having been president of the state society for many years. Mr. Mitchell is also president of the Milwaukee Gaslight company and the Wisconsin Fire and Marine company's bank and is largely interested in other important enterprises in his native city.

A Notable Christian Art Exhibition.

HORRIBLE HOLOCAUST.

Forty-four Lives Lost in an Insane Asylum Fire.

DOVER, N. H., Feb. 10.—The county insane asylum, three miles from here, burned during the evening and forty-four lives were lost. When the watchman made his visit into the asylum at 11 o'clock he found fire coming out of a cell occupied by a woman, in the basement, and gave the alarm. William Driscoll, the keeper, with his family, lived in the building, and he at once broke the locks off the fifty-four cells and tried to get the inmates out, then he got his wife and two children, neither of whom were dressed. Of the forty-eight inmates

Only Four Escaped.

They are William Twombly, Ross Sanderson, William Davey and Frand Donshon. The latter walked two miles in the blinding snow storm with only his shirt on, to William Horne's house, where he was taken care of.

ON THE ROCKS.

Another Terrible Shipwreck Off the Coast of Gallicia.

MADRID, Feb. 10.—A dispatch from Corunna states that the Anchor line steamer Trinacria, which was reported Wednesday as having been lost on Cape Villano, one of the northwesterly points of the province of Galicia, has completely broken up. Her crew numbered thirty-seven all told. Seven were saved, and nearly all of them had sustained more or less serious injuries. There were a number of passengers on the steamer, mostly members of the Mission of Gibralter and soldiers belonging to the garrison at that place.

The Beach Is Strewn with Bodies

washed from the steamer. Large quantities of cargo are also coming ashore. A tremendously heavy sea is running, which renders it impossible for small boats to approach the place where the Trinacria went down. The weeck, or what remains of it, is lying on a rock only a short distance from the shore.

A QUARRY DISASTER.

Seven Men Are Killed and a Large Number Injured.

RUTLAND, Vt., Feb. 1.—One of the worst disasters in the history of marble-quarrying occurred at West Rutland during the afternoon in a quarry operated by the Vermont Marble company, with which Senator Proctor is connected. A great mass of stone fell into the quarry and seven men were instantly killed and a number of others injured. The victims were crushed so that some could not be recognized. The victims were at work channeling and taking away refuse. The killed are: William Lucas, Frank Sulig, Edward Powers, Alexander Blumquest and three unrecognized men.

MANY WORKMEN KILLED.

A Slide Occurs in the Wall of a Mine at Villa Grove, Colo.

DENVER, Colo., Feb. 1.—A Republican special from Villa Grove, Colo., says: A slide occurred in the wall rock in one of the tunnels at the Orient mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company. Six men were killed and six injured.

Stricken Down with Heart Disease.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty, as well as a pleasure, to publish, unsolicited, to the world the benefit received from DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE REMEDIES. I was stricken down with Heart Disease and its complications, a rapid pulse varying from 90 to 140 beats per minute, a choking or burning sensation in the wind pipe, oppression in the chest, much pain in the region of the heart and below lower rib, pain in the arms, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, weakness and general debility. The arteries in my neck would throb violently, the throbbing of my heart could be heard across a large room and would shake my whole body. I was so nervous that I could not hold my hand steady. I have been under the treatment of eminent physicians, and have taken gallons of Patent Medicine without the least benefit. A friend recommended your remedies. She was cured by Dr. Miles' remedies. I have taken three bottles of your New Heart Cure and two bottles Nervine. My pulse is normal, I have no more violent throbbing of the heart, I AM A WELL MAN. I sincerely recommend every one with symptoms of Heart Disease to take Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies and be cured.

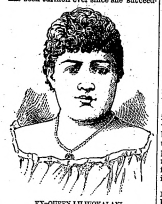
HAWAII MAY BE OURS

SOMETHING ABOUT THE ISLANDS THAT ARE SEEKING ANNEXATION.

Blessed by a Remarkably Equable Climate and Marvelously Fertile Soil—Decadence of the Native Race—Romantic History of the Little Monarchy.

The revolution in Hawaii was a perfect thing of its kind. It followed the precedents as closely as if some supreme power had arranged all the details. First there were threats and prophecies and premonitions of trouble, which came at regular intervals for years, exaggerated by one party and minimized by the other, till the outside world got tired and indifferent. At length the organs of public opinion began to declare that there was really nothing in it. Then the revolution came all at once and was successful before we heard it had begun.

The late queen, Liliuokalani, lacked the one supreme virtue of a female monarch—that of allowing men to govern. It appears also that she lacked the other great womanly quality, tact. So there has been turmoil ever since she succeeded David Kalakaua, who died Jan. 20, 1891. He became king in 1874, and soon after American influence became dominant in the islands. In 1876 a reciprocity treaty was arranged which gave the Hawaiians great advantages in the United States, and the exports of favored articles rose from 13,000 tons in 1876 to 130,000 tons in 1890.

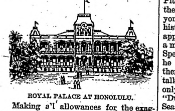


EX-QUEEN LILIUOKALANI.

In 1887 the reciprocity treaty was greatly enlarged, and Kalakaua thereupon ceded Pearl harbor, near Honolulu, to the United States for a naval station. Hawaiian sugar being thereafter admitted free of duty, American promoters rapidly spread over the islands, and as the average production there is at least 4,000 pounds per acre the islands took on a new life. The figures are startling. In 1890 the value of imports was nearly $7,000,000, while the exports for the same period were valued at $13,282,000, making a total foreign commerce of over $20,000,000, or $200 for each inhabitant—a larger per capita than that of any other country on earth. More than 92 per cent of this trade was done with the United States and 73 per cent of the carrying trade done by American ships, notably those of the Oceanic Steamship line, which sail from San Francisco.

Suddenly, as the Hawaiians claim, the United States changed its policy on sugar, admitting that of all countries free of duty and thus completely destroying the greatest advantage Hawaii had gained by reciprocity. Secretary Blaine frankly admitted the justice of Hawaiian complaints and suggested absolute free trade between the countries and an extension to Hawaii of the bounties paid to American producers of sugar. At this crisis Liliuokalani came to the throne and at once attempted a reactionary policy and a reversal of the movement toward affiliation with the United States. American residents, already heavy losers by the changes in sugar, grew discontented, and so on the first favorable opportunity the revolution came.

The islands are now offered to us as a free gift, but on such an occasion it is allowable to look a gift horse in the mouth and consider if they are worth the risk. Any cyclopedia gives the main facts about them, so it is only necessary to say here that Hawaii consists of 15 islands (only eight inhabited), lying about 2,100 miles southwest of San Francisco in latitude 18 to 22 degrees north and longitude 154 to 160 degrees west. The area of the habitable islands is a little less perhaps than 7,000 square miles, of which probably one-half is cultivable and doubtless as fertile as any equal area in the world. Indeed it is estimated that there are at least 1,500,000 acres of sugar lands capable of a certain crop of 4,000 pounds per acre every year, while the reports speak of 5,500 pounds as not uncommon.



ROYAL PALACE AT HONOLULU.

Making all allowances for the exaggeration of sanguine projectors, it may still be believed that the islands could produce 2,000,000 tons of sugar yearly. The climate is the most equable in the world—how equable may be judged from the fact that the native language has no word for "weather." For 12 years the mercury on the plains and in the port towns has never once risen above 90 degrees or sunk below 45 degrees. On the montains one may easily find it much colder, and there are ranges rising to a height of 13,000 feet and containing those wonderful volcanoes of which every schoolboy has read.

And in this wonderful region where, according to experts, the greatest fertility and the highest average of salubrity are found on the same soil (contrary to the usual rule) there are but 80,000 people. By the census of 1890 34,436 were natives, 15,301 Chinese, 12,360 Japanese, 8,602 Portuguese, 1,928 Americans and 1,344 British. The exports consist mainly of sugar, rice, bananas and hides. Honolulu, the capital, on the island of Oahu, is lighted by electricity, and nearly every leading family in the town has its telephone. In 1890 295 vessels visited the islands. The naval and military forces of the islands consist of the household guards, fixed at 65 men.

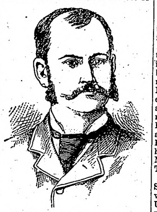
When Captain James Cook was in the islands (he was killed there Feb. 14, 1779), he reported the total population at 400,000, but this was certainly an error. It was probably about 200,000. It is the fashion to say that the natives have perished from intemperance and immorality, but this also is probably an error, for they were more immoral when discovered than now. Besides, this easy way of disposing of the problem of the decay of uncivilized races is no longer tenable. Like many other primitive races, the Hawaiians have died of a too rapid civilization.

Such is the nature of man that there must be a slow internal or organic change to correspond with the changes of condition; otherwise the too rapid inflow of impressions on unprepared nerve centers breaks them down. We killed 100,000 Indians with rash experiments before we found that out and would have killed 10 times as many negroes if they had not been too tough. At any rate the Hawaiians have died off very fast. The worst trouble on the islands is leprosy. The greatest drawback of the general situation is, or rather was, the earthquakes, but of late years they have been rare. The islands, by the way, are all of volcanic origin.

The history of the islands is a romance in itself. At the time of Captain Cook's visit each island had its own chief, but by 1800 or thereabouts Kamehameha had united them under his somewhat despotic rule. His successor of the same name abolished idolatry, and in 1820 the first American missionaries reached the island.

The subsequent monarchs have been Kamehameha II, III and IV, Lot, William Lunalilo, David Kalakaua and Queen Liliuokalani, who married an American known there as Dominis. He died soon after Liliuokalani became queen. In less than a generation after the missionaries landed all Hawaii became nominally Christian, and the government rapidly progressed to a very limited monarchy, with foreigners in many of the principal offices.

The natives, commonly called Kanakas, are a branch of the Malayan race, greatly modified by climate and isolation. Captain Cook named the group the Sandwich Islands in honor of Lord Sandwich, then lord of the admiralty, but native names have prevailed both for the group and all localities, the language being singularly musical, copious and flexible. The missionaries in 1822 reduced it to writing on the principles of Leibnitz, which were then in high favor and are now employed in the Volapuk. Thus a is pronounced ah, u, oo, ai like i long, au as ow, e as a in fate, i as ee, and other letters as in English. So the principal names in this article are pronounced Hah-wi-ee, Kal-a-kow-ah, Lee-lee-oo-o-ka-lah-nee, Ka-may-a-may-a, etc. Some 300 books have been published in the Kanaka tongue.



COMMISSIONER LORRIN A. THURSTON.

Lorrin A. Thurston, chairman of the committee sent by the revolutionists to Washington, was premier to the first revolutionary cabinet of Hawaii in 1888 and is the leading lawyer in Honolulu. He was born in Hawaii, his parents being American missionaries. He has been connected with the government in some capacity for years.

Single Speech Men.

Once in awhile some hitherto unknown bard touches the harp with the fingers of a master and thereafter is secure of fame if not of fortune. English history tells of the oratory of Fox, of Chatham, of Pitt, of Gladstone and of Disraeli, but they were so diffuse that shining out beyond their efforts remains the memory—historic, of course—of the magnificent appeal made in the house of commons by a man who is called to this day "Single Speech Hamilton." The hour had come; he knew what to say; he said it, and thereafter he was silent. Proctor Knott talked much while in congress, but he only made one speech—that was about "Duluth, the Zenith City of the Unsalted Seas." The address is still famous and a classic in American oratory.

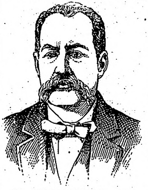
Decadence of the Black Dress Coat.

Tailors dislike the black dress coat which has so long held sway at evening entertainments. One of these garments lasts too long to suit the man who makes it, and every now and then the knights of the shears and goose get together for the purpose of driving their old and invulnerable enemy from the field. In London several swells have been induced to appear at evening entertainments in suits of dark gray, and one venturesome New York tailor is endeavoring to get some of the jeunesse doree of his city to follow suit. It is not intended to confine the fashion to one color, but simply to require that evening costumes for men shall be of cloth which contains no pattern.

PLUMB'S UNEXPIRED TERM.

The First Tangible Result of the Kansas Legislative Muddle.

Preston B. Plumb, United States senator from Kansas, died Dec. 20, 1891. Twelve days later the governor of the state appointed Bishop W. Perkins to the vacancy in compliance with the provision of the constitution, section 3, article 1, which says, "If vacancies" (in the United States senate) "happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."



HON. JOHN MARTIN.

Perkins' term, of course, expires as soon as the legislature chooses a successor to fill out Plumb's term. Plumb would have served until March 3, 1895, had he lived. When the Kansas legislature met recently, as all newspaper readers know, there was a dual organization of the house, the senate being undisputed. Neither Populists nor Republicans were able to get the necessary quorum to vote for some time at the joint sessions of house and senate which were held for the purpose of electing a United States senator. Finally the Populists indorsed the candidacy of the Democratic nominee, Judge John Martin of Topeka, and on the following day he was declared elected by the Populist lieutenant governor in his capacity as presiding officer of the joint session.

The Republicans dispute the legality of the election mainly on the ground that Judge Martin did not receive the votes of a majority of the members of both houses. The Populists and Democrats take the position that this was not necessary; that the votes which Judge Martin got from members whose right to sit was unquestioned, added to those which were cast against him, constituted a quorum of the legislature, which made it a legal body. Judge Martin, having received a majority of this majority, has been, they aver, elected according to law. These are the contentions of the two sides, and from whatever viewpoint it is regarded it presents a very interesting puzzle to the layman.

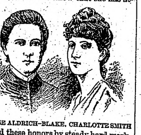
Judge John Martin's parents were natives of South Carolina who were living in Wilson county, Tenn., when the embryonic statesman first appeared on the mundane scene, the exact date being Nov. 12, 1833. Young Martin early evinced a liking for the law and as soon as his education was completed commenced the study of the profession in Lebanon, Tenn. When Rush Elmore as United States district judge went to Kansas in 1855, Mr. Martin accompanied him and has resided there ever since. Most of this time his home has been in Topeka, where he still lives.

When the territorial legislature met in Shawnee county in 1857, Mr. Martin was elected clerk. He became assistant United States attorney the following year and reporter of the supreme court in 1860. In 1872 he was elected to the legislature and in 1883 took his seat as judge of the district court of Shawnee county.

Judge Martin has always been an ardent Democrat and has been honored by his party in various ways. He ran for governor in 1876 and for congress in 1886 and 1888, but failed of election on each occasion. Judge Martin is a lawyer of acknowledged ability. His family consists of a wife and one daughter.

Young Women Achieve High Honors.

Two English young ladies have recently taken honors which add new and brilliant proofs to the oft repeated saying that woman is now coming to the front. One who has taken higher honors in medicine than any other woman so far is Miss Louise Aldrich-Blake, eldest daughter of the Rev. F. J. Aldrich-Blake of Welsh Bicknor, Herefordshire. She is a remarkably well educated young woman, and has been in the first division in every one of her examinations since the beginning of her career. It is instructive to know that she has attained these honors by steady hard work, accompanied with a gain in general physical condition, and that she can walk, ride, row and fish as well as most of her male competitors.



LOUISE ALDRICH-BLAKE. CHARLOTTE SMITH

The other lady is Miss Charlotte A. Smith, who has just been elected to the associateship of the British Institute of Public Health, King's college, London, and is the first woman on record to whom that honor has been accorded. The daughter of a distinguished Scotch clergyman, she was educated by private tuition and at University college, London. She also gained honor in physiology at Edinburgh university.

Polk County Journal.

BY COOKE & HAMMOND.

Devoted to the Welfare of Polk County.

OFFICIAL PAPER, CITY OF CROOKSTON.

P. H. Kelley's cigarette bill went up in smoke last week. This was looked upon as a high joke but such jokes are expensive to the average tax-payer and should not be indulged in.

THE pool bill was laid to rest in the House last week. This is as it should be. There is need enough for measures of greater importance without wasting so much time with tom-foolery.

THERE is no probability of the Sherman silver act being repealed by the present congress, and Cleveland is said to be in favor of calling an extra session to take action on this question and the tariff.

SENATOR DONNELLY admits that this is the most promising legislature he has attended for years, with reference to legislation in the interest of the people. This frankness on the part of the Sage is refreshing.

THE Panama trial has resulted in several prominent Frenchmen receiving severe punishment, which includes M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, who was sentenced to imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs.

THE French courts have pronounced South Dakota divorces no good. The case in question was that of Madam de Steurs who obtained a divorce in South Dakota, and after returning to France claimed to custody of her child. This decision will put a damper on the Sioux Falls industry—at least so far as foreigners are concerned.

LEAVITT'S income bill was killed in the senate last week and will no doubt be allowed to rest. The JOURNAL would like to see something of the kind pass and become a law, or to see some means adopted for a more equitable equalization of taxes than now prevails. We have no doubt that sooner or later something akin to this will obtain.

THE bill introduced by Senator Leavitt, making it an offense for a lawyer to take a personal injury case for a percentage of the judgment which might be recovered, is clearly in the interest of corporations, as about the only way a poor man has of recovering damages from a corporation is for some attorney to take the case for a percentage of the judgment which he may recover. Senator Donnelly opposed the measure and it was referred to the committee on drainage—where it will probably be downed.

SENATOR LOMMEN is certainly introducing plenty of bills. Among his latest is one "to appropriate $2,000 for a bridge across the Red Lake river;" another one is "to reimburse settlers in defending suits brought against them by railroad companies;" and a third one is a joint memorial to Congress relating to the opening of the Red Lake Indian reservation, and the improvement of Red Lake river." These bills are all good enough, but it's not the number of bills which a legislator introduces, but the amount of legislation which he gets enacted for the benefit of the people, that makes a good record to stand on. The passage of the drainage appropriation would make our delegation popular at home.

PETITIONS should be circulated throughout Wilkin, Norman, Polk, Marshall and Kittson counties, asking the legislature to pass the bill appropriating $100,000 for the purpose of opening the closed waterways in the aforesaid counties. It is a matter of vital importance to these northern counties to have this bill passed, and if the people will bestir themselves there is every reason to believe that the appropriation can be secured. The opening of these waterways would not only reclaim thousands of acres of waste land, but would enhance the value of hundreds of farms which can now be cultivated only during dry seasons. A delegate from each county interested should be sent to St. Paul to urge upon the legislature the importance of passing this measure.

AMONG the bills introduced in the senate to regulate the wheat traffic those introduced by Senator C. R. Davis seem the best calculated to fill the bill of any now before the legislature. These bills are in line with the recommendation of Governor Nelson, in his message and provide for no discrimination between shippers by affording any and all who desire it an opportunity to build and operate grain-houses of any description. Senator Brown's bill is faulty in that it abolishes the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, which at the present time would be injudicious. Although the committee has recommended the bill providing for terminal warehouses, built by the state the probability is that it will not pass but the legislature seems to be determined to pass some kind of an act upon the question and it looks as though the Davis bills might be the ones that will pass. We can see no reason why they are not all right and ought to pass.

THE FOSSTON SHORT LINE.

Speaking of the prospects for building the Great Northern line from Crookston to Duluth the coming summer the Duluth News Tribune says:

The telegraph brings the news that official announcement was made yesterday that the Great Northern would this year build its line from Fosston direct to this city. This is good news, but only the official announcement is new. On Jan. 1st, in an article on the Great Northern system, this paper stated that such would be done, and upon information that was the most reliable. This work means a great deal for the head of the lake, and everybody here has cause to rejoice. Undoubtedly the fact that the Duluth & Winnipeg has passed into the control of a syndicate which is financially strong has hastened the official announcement of the determination of Mr. Hill to make this very necessary connection.

There is a still greater reason why this connecting line should be built. It will reduce the haul on a very large portion of the wheat crop handled by the Great Northern and of the transcontinental business 120 miles or more, and more than ever put the Great Northern in a position to meet about any competition that may come up. Still another reason may be given why the building of this cut-off is hastened, and that is the recent decision of the interstate commerce commission, on the wheat rates from points west of Duluth and Minneapolis. Whatever the roads may do in regard to the changes that the commission favored, with this new line in operation, the Great Northern will be in a position to force acquiescence in its action.

From a great part of the wheat territory of the Northwest Duluth will be in a position to demand a differential, if her grain merchants and millers care to do so. Our people will also see, in all probability, first-class passenger service inaugurated between this city and the West, a consummation we have longed for.

A likely result of the building of this short line from the Red River Valley to Duluth by the Great Northern is the construction of a new and straight line by the Northern Pacific. It may not come this year, but it will come soon. The present line of the Northern Pacific deflects way out of an air line route between this city and Fargo and Grand Forks, and to complete with its strong rival that road must build a line to the head of the lake something like that which nature intended should be built.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES.

So much has been said upon the subject of mortgage foreclosures, as an evidence that the farmer of Polk county is in the last stages of financial ruin thereby, that the third biennial report of Labor Commissioners L. G. Powers, now before us becomes a study of more than ordinary interest and one of peculiar interest, for it shows, in spite of the fact that there were, in Polk county in 1891, a total of 245 mortgage foreclosure sales these sales occur simultaneously with a growing prosperity of the farming section as a whole, and how this is so and why the report fully demonstrates and the commissioner says: "The mortgage foreclosures on farm property have, in the past ten years, decreased relatively 35 per cent., and the general condition of the farmer as a whole has, to that same extent been improved since the year 1880." He says: "The foreclosures in Polk couny are largely massed in a few townships containing the poorer lands of the county." "These comparisons show that in many respects the burden of mortgage indebtedness rests more heavily upon the owners of speculative property than upon that devoted to any legitimate business, and that the farmer in suffering relatively the least of any calling. Legitimate business suffers in Minnesota but very little from the burden of mortgage indebtedness."

These statements are all clearly demonstrated by facts and figures gained by actual observation and upon reliable authority, and conclusively prove to the intelligent reader the truth of his statements. The year of 1891 is said to have been very exceptional in the number of mortgages foreclosed and the report says: "The evidence collected by this bureau all leads to the conclusion that the large excess of mortgage sales in 1891 was due mainly to the agitation concerning the legal rate of interest and the usury laws by the legislature. The money loaned in that section is mainly obtained from the eastern states. The investors became scared by the agitation and would not give the customary amount of accommodation to those defaulting on interest and other payments. The foreclosures in Polk county were nearly fifty per cent. greater than in the proceeding year, and more than three times as great as in 1892. This fifty per cent. measures the effect for evil of this interest and usury agitation upon the average farmer in debt in Polk county in the year of 1891." He goes on to show that while 1891 was a dark one for farmers in Polk county it was not the worst one in the state, and says: There is not an agricultural county in Minnesota that is not in a more prosperous condition than Mower county averaged from 1867 to 1887 and no county in 1891 presented as bad an exhibit as Mower from 1880 to 1884."

In his summary of causes for the extraordinary number of foreclosures he finds that intemperance is ascribed in nine cases; poor management in ten while in a great many cases it is very evident that the parties considered the loan a sale of the land and either left the country immediately after making the loan or worked the land until the time for redemption expired and then left and only in twenty cases is loss of crop given as the direct cause. To show that loans made in the valley, if properly done is money well invested, the commissioner states that one loan agency has negotiated 1500 loans and never made a single foreclosure. The conclusions that he draws is that the condition of our farmers is gradually improving from year to year and that the Red River Valley soil is pretty good property to tie to. The JOURNAL regrets its inability to lay before its readers in Polk county the entire subject matter of this report but this is impracticable. However anyone can procure the report for himself by requesting it of L. G. Powers, labor commissioner of the state, and they will find it not only interesting but highly instructive reading.

COMMUNICATIONS.

CROOKSTON, Minn., Feb. 14th, 1892.

EDITORS JOURNAL: If you will allow me I will say a few words through your valuable columns in regard to the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association of Polk county holding a fair the present year. I have considerable dealing with the farmers of Polk county and have spoken to a number of our first-class farmers in regard to the Association holding a fair, and they invariably say that the Association was owned by Crookstonites and that the farmer wasn't in it; but if they would have a fair they would put their shoulder to it and help to turn the wheel clear over. The farmers of Polk county have a number of valuable horses that have cost $1500 to $3000 and they say the Association should hold a fair and pay liberal premiums so that they could receive reasonable compensation for the trouble they have been at in purchasing a high grade of horses. There is in Polk county such as the Clydesdale, the Percherons, and others of the best breeding families of the draft horses.

In cattle there are a number of full blooded Jerseys, Holstiens, Ayrshires, Polled Angus and others. I also find in my travels some fine flocks of sheep and some of the farmers are sending for fine sheep such as the Cotswolds at a large expense, and hogs I could name a number but I fear they are too numerous to mention. In my opinion we could have as fine a showing of draft horses and blooded cattle and farm produce as in any county in the state. As regards the best time of year for holding the fair, the most that I have talked with think they would have the most time in July and that their stock would be in better condition at that time than any other time of the season. It is true that they could not show the grade of grain and some produce but could I think have enough to make a success of the fair by having fair and impartial judges which they will have as the association have the best of men for their directors with H. Thompson as president.

AN OASERVER.

EUCLID, Feb. 6th, 1893.

EDITORS JOURNAL:—Your position as journalists gives you great advantage over an isolated farmer in such a discussion as ours, but if you misquote and misconstrue my letters, I shall have no show at all. You have recourse to libraries, exchanges etc., to cite "facts and data" that I have not, I can only speak in self-evident, general terms. Your readers can see at a glance the difference between the opening of my letter to the JOURNAL of last week, and the opening of your reply. There are plenty of evidences, in fact the air is full of them, that the common people would be benefited by organizing, consolidating and voting en masse for legislative reformation, such as the people's party contemplates. Therefore why should they not embrace the opportunity? They cannot help but see the gulf that is yawning to swallow up their liberties unless their political interests are better looked after than they have been for the last quarter of a century. Half of the people have been trusting to the republican party, and the other half to the democratic party for legislative reform. They have been mightily disappointed and will be as long as they trust them. We all know the condition of the masses in Europe. We know the recent ordeal in France and other countries. We can see the tendencies in this country are to bring about the same degrading conditions for us and our posterity.

The people can do nothing singly. They must organize and have capable and sympathetic leaders. Your "method" is to destroy their leaders and thus keep the "rank and file" scattered. That may be good generalship in you for the interest of the old parties, but the stratagem will soon be discovered and will re-act. You quote what Mrs. Lease, and Mrs. Diggs, say about the election of John Martin, in Kansas, to the United States senate, and you seem to catch at it, like a drowning man at a straw, hoping to prove by it that the people have lost their only hope, except in the old parties. But Mrs. Lease and others have changed their minds. They now think that "the very best possible results was accomplished and that no injury will result to the people's party either in Kansas or in the country at large." General Weaver says, "Martin is a man of splendid character and first-class abilities. He has for years been openly in accord with the doctrines of the people's party. He is really a populist, in fact, and a democrat only in name." George F. Washburn, chairman of the eastern division of the National committee of the people's party says, "The effect" of Martin's election "will be beneficial in creating such a strong sentiment in the people's party against fusion as to prevent a repitition of its occurrence." Senator Peffer and Senator Kyle say "it was the best that could have been done." But mistakes most naturally will occur, and be overcome, I do not expect victory for the people without some blunders, but they are too wise to sit down and cry everytime they stub their toe. The people's party is not a year old yet. They have made great strides for so short a time. I know that the people are a little slow to catch on, but they are learning the lesson of organization from the combines, trusts and monopolies, and they will eventually beat them at their own game. You ask again "what has Donnelly done for the farmers?" He has fought for years the two old parties in the legislature for the rights of farmers against corporations, monopolies, rings and briberies and that too almost single handed and alone. What has he accomplished? He has waked the common people up, set them to thinking, and set them to acting, organizing, growing. It will result in the greatest good to the farming class that could have been brought about. But I suppose you want to know where he has put any immediate dollars into the pockets of the farmers? If a rich man owes you five dollars, and offers you two, thinking it will cost you ten to get the other three, would you accept the two dollars? Oh shame, I never have "held Donnelly or any other man up as a paragon of perfection," and it is "unworthy" of you to insinuate that I have told you as much in one of my former letters after just such an insinuation. I hope you will not make the insinuation again, Donnelly may want, and be certainly deserves, his just share of honor for the great good he has done toward lifting up the masses toward a higher appreciation of their rights and dignities. I think it would be more worthy of you to give him a rest. We all know that the people as a whole are being contaminated by the exhibition of the power and luxuries of great wealth, which Christ says is barring souls from Heaven, and why the pulpit and press, and all good people do not denounce it more, is I fear because of contamination. There is more need for congress to quarantine against exorbitant greed than against cholera or any other contagious disease, but many otherwise good and influential people are unwilling because they are themselves contaminated, therefore every proposed remedy is "impractical." It is being urged against the passage of the Graduated Income Tax Law by the rich, that it is "impractical." But if a law was made to exempt all property, (church property and all) from protection that did not pay its just proportion for protection, I reason the tax could be easily collected. But it seems to them to be all right for a poor man to pay a tax on all he owes.

You say I ought to give "facts and data to prove that the people's party is right," I acknowledge that I ought. But I confess that I am unable to do the subject justice. And to illustrate my reason for closing the argument with this letter, I will relate a little story.

A farmer who lived in one of the eastern states, where (as the Irishman said) they have so much land that they have to stack it, and where they raise the nicest pumpkins. He was well known by everybody in town as the most inveterate swearer. He would make the atmosphere blue with the most terrible oaths upon every trifling occasion. One day he yoked his oxen and took a large wagon load of pumpkins to the market, which was located in the centre of a village situated upon a hill. But just as he arrived at the top, the tail-board of his wagon came loose and his pumpkins rolled out and he looked around just in time to see them all rolling to the bottom of the hill. The bystanders expected an unusual dose of profanity, but the farmer said not a word, and some of the most venturesome asked him why he did not swear? "Because" said he "I cannot do the subject justice."

AMERICAN FARMER.

If we grant for the sake of argument that the air is full of arguments, why the common people would be benefitted by writing and voting for legislature reformation we are confronted in the outset by the fact that that is the very thing that the people's party has not done, nor, so far as we are able to discover ever attempted to, and further, in the very nature of things, from the utter dissimilarity of the various individuals and needs composing it they never can. It is made up principally of farmers and laboring men. The things the farmers need the laboring men are indifferent about and some things that the laboring men need the farmer cannot entertain if he expects to make his business a success. But suppose we grant your premises correct, how have you gone about it to accomplish them? Do you mean to say that "the common people" have drafted your platform and directed the policy of your party so far? That is one point in which we take direct issue for we know that those who did that are played out old party hacks—the very men you are kicking so vigorously about—barnacles on the old parties who have been kicked out of the old parties and who organized the people's party in order to get a job. We do not deny the right of the people to rule in anyway they see fit, for, as we have continually said we believe in the majority rule. We recognize fully the fact that great evils have crept in and, we suppose this is inevitable with any form of human government, and will be as long as man is finite, but you betray one prevailing weakness, and admit what we have said before in this discussion when you say that people have been trusting to the old parties all their lives to do these things for them. That's it. There has been too much trusting to others the important things that it is our business to do for ourselves and that no other can do and you seem to still intimate that your leaders in the new party must do them for you. You will be bitterly disappointed as long as you continue in that rut and you will founder upon the very rock that you now so bitterly condemn. You must attend to your primaries and run your own business in whatever party you belong or schemers will wreck your hopes even as you now say they have done. Humanity cannot prevent the existence of these schemers but can control them. If the republican party has become corrupt the good men within it are as much to blame as the schemers because the good men should control it and if by their indifference and trust in leaders they fail to do it neither can they accomplish the good they seek in any party. True, singly they can accomplish nothing, but there is no necessity for losing all the time necessary to organize anew when all they have to do is to wake up and control the organizations that already exist—but we note that you say that you also must have capable and sympathetic leaders. (Still trusting all to leaders!) Well, if that be true, and our "method is to destroy your leaders then it is also true that the JOUNAL seeks your good for such "leaders" of yours as we have been criticising are everything but true to your best interests even though some of them do pretend a vast amount of overflowing sympathy. You complain that the JOURNAL misquotes you and yet you continually misinterpret our position. For instance you say that we are acting solely in the interest of old parties. That is where you are totally wrong and wilfully wrong for you know, or ought to, having read the JOURNAL for so long that we seek only to subserve the best interests of the people as a whole and that the only difference between us lies in the simple fact that we do not agree upon the proper methods for accomplishing that, unless, perhaps, you wish only to subserve the interests of a class without regard to the balance of mankind. We should differ their very materially. As to that Kansas affair you well know that your party had to put its principles in its pockets to elect a democrat and there is no chance for further argument on that point. Those leaders that you say you must have admit it and it would be in poor taste for you, after you have created them and endowed them with so many virtues, to pretend to deny it. In fact, while trying to gloss Martin over you admit it was a mistake and yet in the same breath try to prove it a brilliant victory. It is just such mistakes as will continue to occur under your present leadership for it is deliberately planned on their part and all they are after in the game, and after you have fooled away a great deal of time following your ignis fatuus you will some day awake to this fact. As regards Donnelly you seem to have got the cart before the horse. It was the common people that waked him up, after he had vainly sought office in the old parties, and suggested the idea that here was at last a chance for him and he has assiduously worked the mine ever since—but always insisted that he must have some office so that he could work better. Because he was not nominated, as he wanted to be two years ago, he put his sleuth hound on Owen's track and dogged him to death. Last fall he was nominated and was very pleasant all through the campaign but tried to betray your party into an alliance with democrats. After such object lessons we should think light would begin to dawn upon your inward consciousness. As to giving Donnelly a rest, he has been given a rest by every party in existance, but like the Paddy's flea he wont stay rested. Down him, and take your finger up just a little and lo, yonder he is basking serenely in the smiles of some other party—still hunting for office. We did not know that we accused you (personally,) of considering him a paragon, but now you speak of it, it does look as though your party was somewhat more stuck on him than anything he ever did for you would warrant. We are glad to know that you as an individual do not so regard him, but we fear that you have made too much of a personal application of what we have said about your party leaders when it was not so intended. You have made plain to us one fact, and that is that you as an individual are not in hearty sympathy with what your party leaders are attempting to carry out for you seem honest in your letters.

Fisher Bulletin:—Newspaper editing is a "queer" amusement. If you give a man a "puff," he never sees it; but let one line against him appear, and he sees it before the paper is off the press, and while he would not have time to stop on the street to "thank you" he has time to run all over town to denounce the editor who seeks to print all the news.

Northwest Magazine:—A gentleman from Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, stopped off at Crookston, on his way down to St. Paul. He found wheat selling for eight cents more a bushel in the Minnesota town than in his own place, and pursuing his inquiries he discovered that good coal oil could be bought for fifteen cents a gallon, while he was obliged to pay forty-five or fifty for a poor article at home. No wonder there is discontent in Canada over the present condition of affairs. The movement for Canadian independence, which to most of its advocates means the necessary first step towards union with the States, is growing every day.

This is Meant for You.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly meant to include you.

A PROTECTORATE.

THE AMERICAN FLAG WAVES OVER HONOLULU.

At the Request of the Provisional Government Minister Stevens Declares the Hawaiian Islands Under the Protection of Uncle Sam Pending Further Negotiations.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 10.—The most important news brought by the steamer Australia which arrived from Honolulu is that Minister Stevens had established a protectorate over the islands. The act was acknowledged at 9 in the morning of the 1st inst., when the stars and stripes were raised over Alinolani hall and Minister Stevens issued the following proclamation:

To the Hawaiian People:

At the request of the provisional government of the Hawaiian islands, I hereby, in the name of the United States of America, assume protection of the Hawaiian islands for the protection of life and property and public buildings on Hawaiian soil as far as may be necessary for the purpose specified, but not interfering with the administration of public affairs by the provisional government. This action is taken pending and subject to negotiations at Washington. JOHN L. STEVENS,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States.

United States Legation, Feb. 1, 1893.

Approved and executed by C. C. Wilts, captain United States navy, commanding the United States steamship Boston.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

The Hawaiian Advertiser Gives Details of the Event.

The Advertiser says, regarding the Stevens proclamation that the action was pricipally due to the incessant agitation on the part of certain whites, who have always been the curse of the country, coupled with English and native newspaper efforts to discredit and block the new government. These agencies spread through the town a feeling of uneasiness and distrust.

The provisional government concluded that some positive step was necessary and it would be wisest to call on the United States for direct assistance.

The Advertiser, continuing, says: At 8:30 a. m., on the first, the Boston's battallion was landed under Lieutenant Commander Swinburn, and sent up to the government building where detachments from the volunteer companies provisional government were drawn up. Lieutenant Rush read Mr. Stevens' proclamation and on the stroke of nine the star spangled banner fluttered up on the staff on the tower.

The flag was saluted by troops and marines, and the heavier guns of the Boston, and Hawaii was under Uncle Sam's wing for the time being at least.

Recognized by the British Consul.

In a communication to the executive council of the provisional government dated Jan. 19, British Minister Wodehouse recognized the provisional government, pending instructions from the home office. The provisional government's volunteer army is increasing visibly. Legislative hall and other rooms in the government building have been converted into barracks for the men. James B. Castle has been appointed secretary of the executive and advisory councils of the new regime.

Repealed the Lottery Act.

The government has repealed the lottery act and it is reported that the holders of the franchise will bring a suit for damages, claiming that a franchise for twenty-five years is a vested right which cannot be withdrawn. A law has been passed forbidding importation of arms and ammunition by any one except the government.

The eldest daughter of United States Minister Stevens was drowned at Kukaiau recently.

TO ANNEX HAWAII.

The New York Herald Says Harrison Will Do It.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—The Herald's Washington correspondent says: Annexation of Hawaii has been decided on. I am told that President Harrison has fully made up his mind as to the proper course to pursue. In fact, I am told he had already given the annexation commissioners assurances entirely satisfactory to them of the course to be adopted by the present administration.

The president has no intention of leaving this matter for the next administration to settle. His message to congress, now under preparation, is about completed, and by Wednesday will be before the house and senate.

I am informed that President Harrison is devoting much consideration to this message, intending to make it the strongest state paper of his term, and a fitting close to the administration he has given the country.

THE INDIAN MURDERERS.

Two of the Pine Ridge Reds Brought to Deadwood for Trial.

DEADWOOD, S. D., Feb. 11.—Marshal Frye and deputies arrived from Rushville during the morning having in charge Fights With and Too Too, the surviving Indians implicated in the recent trouble on White river, the latter being a son of Two Sticks. Accompanying them were six Indian police, including Captain Thunder Bear and Lieutenant Joe Bush.

Too Too made a desperate effort to strangle himself with a handkerchief at the agancy, but was discovered in time to save his life.

The Indians told a reporter that they killed the cowboys because the Messiah ordered them to. They are confined in the county jail, pending the action of the grand jury.

Woman Suffrage in Kansas.

TOPEKA, Feb. 10.—The senate has passed the resolution to submit the equal suffrage amendment to the constitution to a vote of the people by a vote of 82 to 5.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Feb. 7

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The senate in executive session confirmed the extradition treaty with Russia and then took up the automatic car coupler bill and discussed it without action.

The house discussed without final disposition the legislative appropriation bill.

Wednesday, Feb. 8.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The morning hour in the senate was spent for the most part in the consideration and passage of bills on the calendar. At 1 o'clock the senators proceeded to the hall of the house of representatives and there took part in the ceremony of counting the votes of presidential electors. Afterwards the railroad automatic car coupler bill was taden up and debated until the hour of adjournment without any definite action being taken.

The event in the house during the day was, of course, the counting of the electoral votes and this passed off without any incident of importance. Grover Cleveland was declared to be the national selection of the people for the office of president and Adlai E. Stevenson for vice president. The legislative bill consumed the remainder of the day, but no result was reached.

Thursday, Feb. 9.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—It was silver day in the house and the friends of silver were very numerous in the fight. By a majority of 9 they sustained the demand for the previous question on the resolutian setting apart two days for the consideration of the bill repealing the Sherman act. Had not the previous question been ordered a cloture amendment would have been sprung upon the house and the struggle would have been continued, but when it was ordered the advocates of the repeal bill gracefully passed under the yoke and allowed the resolution to be recommitted without making any strong objection. This action in the opinion of members sounds the death knell of any silver legislation in the present congress. The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, which finally passed.

The senate spent the entire day discussing the automatic car coupler bill.

Friday, Feb. 10.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The house spent the day in discussing the pension appropriation bill. Speeches were made by Messrs. Mutchler, Grotu, Tarsney, McKinney and O'Neil. The bill carries an appropriation of $166,000,000.

The senate considered the car coupler bill, but did not reach a vote in the measure.

Saturday, Feb. 11.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The bill to promote the safety of employes and travelers upon railreads by compelling railway companies to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and their locomotives with driving wheel brakes, was finally disposed of in the senate. The substitute for the house bill in last session was agreed to and the bill was passed—yeas 39, nays 10. It now goes back to the house.

The house discussed the pensions appropriation bill without result. Republicans filibustered against an attempt by the Democrats to limit the debate and came out victorious. Eulogies were delivered in memory of the late Edward F. McDonald, of New Jersey, and adjourned.

Monday, Feb. 13.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The bill intended to secure the construction of the Nicaragua ship canal occupied the afternoon in the senate. It provides that 3 per cent. bonds of the company to the amount of $100,000,000 shall be guaranteed, principal and interest, by the government of the United States. These bonds to be issued according as money is actually paid out by the company in the construction of the canal. The government is then to own the capital steck of the company with the exception of 12,000,000 shares. The importance of this guarantee by the government was demonstrated in a speech by Mr. Fry, of Maine, who undertook to show that the work with the guarantee could be fully completed at a cost of $100,000,000 and the fixed charges would be only $5,000,000 a year outside of a sinking fund, whereas, without the guarantee, the cost would be not less than $200,000,000 and its fixed charges $14,000,000 a year. Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, discussed the diplomatic features of the measure.

The house spent the day in discussing District of Columbia measures.

AUTHORITIES ALARMED.

The Delaware River at Trenton Higher Than Ever Before.

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 13.—The authorities are alarmed over the condition of the river. No water for drinking purposes has been obtainable for four days, the pump house at the reservoir being disabled by the ice. All the bridges across the Delaware between Trenton and Lambertville are now in danger, as the ice is pressed against the abutments and is gradually undermining them. The flour mills of the city all came to a standstill during the day owing to the inundation of their lower floors and altogether there are now 6,000 handsout of employment. The Delaware is higher than ever before in its history, and the submerging of the business streets in the heart of the city is probable. An effort will be made to dislodge sufficient ice by the use of dynamite to break the gorge.

BLAINE'S WILL.

His Entire Estate Bequeathed to His Wife.

AUGUSTA, Me., Feb. 13.—The will of James G. Blaine was presented for probate Monday. It was executed in Washington, Jan. 7, twenty days before his death. He bequeaths to his son James and his daughters Margaret and Harriet each the sum of $50 and to his three grandchildren each the sum of $25, the residue of the estate going to his wife, Harriet S. Blaine.

Balloting Without Result.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Feb. 13.—Interest in the selection of a United States senator about died out during the day. Forty legislators were absent. In the sixty-first and sixty-second ballots there was no result.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Feb. 7.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 7.—Senator McMillan offered a concurrent resolution designed to cut the session short on March 22 by a sine die adjournment, and providing that no bills shall be introduced after March 1, except upon request of the governor. Committee on rules.

Senator Hompe opened out on the bill relating to disbursements in civil actions. It was defeated 18 to 26.

The inheritance tax bill was then taken up and passed without debate, only eight votes being cast in the negative.

A number of bills of minor importance also passed.

Almost the entire time of the house was occupied in the introduction of bills. Among the most important was one by Mr. Hinrichs, providing that the death penalty shall be inflicted in the state prison at Stillwater, and that a special room be fitted up within the prison walls for that purpose. The bill also provides for the repeal of the John Day Smith law.

H. F. 12, to tax railroad lands, Markham. Passed, with but one negative vote, that of Mr. Elliott, of Hennepin. Several other bills were passed, but none of importance.

Wednesday, Feb. 8.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 8.—In the house a joint resolution was passed recommending the election of United States senators by the people. Most of the morning session was taken up in discussion of the substitute for Jacobson's elevator site bill.

At the afternoon session of the house Representative Horton's pool room bill was taken up. The bill was introduced simply to close the pool rooms of St. Paul and Minneapolis and contained this clause: "Provided that this act shall not apply to the actual enclosure of any fair or race track association incorporated under the laws of this state during the actual time of the meetings of said associations." In committee of the whole the house struck out this saving clause and unanimously recommended the bill to pass as amended.

There were only two bills on the senate calendar. The first was Senator Davis' bill relating to limitations of actions. It created a long debate and was finally defeated. The other measure, Senator Craig's bill to compel the selection of swamp lands by railroads, was passed without a dissenting vote.

Thursday, Feb. 9.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 9.—The opening business of the house was a protest from citizens of Brown county against the passage of the bill for a new capitol and urging the building of state elevators at Duluth, with a capacity of 20,000,000 bushels.

Majority and minority reports were handed in from the judiciary committee on the bill increasing liability for death by accident from $5,000 to $12,500, the majority favoring it.

At the afternoon session of the house the anti-pool room bill, unanimously recommended to pass at Wednesday's session in committee of the whole, after striking out the proviso permitting pool selling at race tracks, was taken up. The horsemen on the floor raised the cry that such a measure would kill every race and fair association in the state, and the measure was defeated by a vote of 45 to 39.

In the senate the first business was the calling up of Senator Donnelly's resolution for county elevators erected by the issuance of county bonds. It was unanimously adopted. It directs the committee on grain and warehouses to make an examination of the scheme.

After the passage of the "local improvement bill" the senate went into committee of the whole, with Senator Nelson in the chair. The free silver memorial was at the head of general orders, and the senate again proceeded to discuss the subject. Several amendments were offered, and several speeches made on the resolution. The amendments were all voted down and the original resolution was adopted 30 to 14.

Friday, Feb. 10.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 10.—There were introduced in both houses during the day a bill drawn by the Grain Growers' association, which combines all the principal points in all the bills of this kind previously introduced in both houses. It provides as follows:

The bill creates a board of seven citizens to be known as the grain board, to be appointed by the governor and removed for cause. Their terms of office are to be six years each at compensation of $5 per day each. They are to hold four meetings each year. This board is to select sites at Duluth for elevators to hold 20,000,000 bushels of wheat, and at St. Paul near the Mississippi river for elevators to hold 5,000,000 bushels of wheat. The title to the sites are to be acquired only by condemnation proceedings. The bill provides that the elevators shall be erected after competitive bids for plans and for construction according to the plans that have been duly advertised for. Work is to be given to lowest bidder. The elevators are to be so constructed that wheat lots may be kept separate, even if not larger than car lots. Warehouses holding 1,000,000 bushels of wheat shall be erected at Duluth and St. Paul within six months after the first contracts are let. The bill appropriates $150,000 in 1893 and $100,000 semi-annually from the grain fund derived from the gross earnings of railroad companies until a sufficient amount has been set apart to complete all the elevators.

The senate discussed Leavitt's income tax bill and the bill to make insurance valid whether premium notes were paid or not.

The house passed a bill prohibiting the smoking of cigarettes in this state.

Saturday, Feb. 11.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 11—The senate has defeated Leavitt's income tax bill. The measure was recommended to pass in committee of the whole, and as soon as the committee arose Senator Leavitt moved to adopt the report; Mr. Tawney moved to indefinitely postpone. The vote on Mr. Tawney's motion was 22 to 22, so it was lost. The vote on Mr. Leavitt's motion was 22 ayes to 23 noes, so the motion was lost. A motion to reconsider was lost by the same vote.

Senator Sanborn's free silver memorial was the only measure on the calendar, and was defeated by a vote of 20 to 23.

In the house Hiler Horton moved to reconsider the vote by which his bill to prohibit pool selling was defeated. Mr. Dunn moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Mr. Dunn's motion was carried by a vote of 48 to 21. F. M. Wilson's bill to increase the salary of the clerk of the supreme court was also defeated when taken up.

Mr. Moore introduced a bill making it bribery for a legislator to accept or a railroad to offer passes.

A resolution was also offered for printing 10,000 copies of the reports of the grain investigation committee two years ago.

Several bills from the calendar were passed, including the one prohibiting employers interfering with the rights of citizenship of their employes.

Monday, Feb. 13.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 13.—Short afternoon sessions were held by both the senate and the house Monday.

In the senate, after a large number of resolutions were handed in, the following bills were recommended to pass: S. F. 23, Senator Wood, making the threshing a first lien on the grain; S. F. 135, Senator Craven, repealing chapter 43, Laws of 1887, relating to cartways; S. F. 161, Senator Keller, to prevent the sale of adulterated coffee, unless the package containing the same be marked "Coffee Substitute." The senate then adjourned.

The house held a very brief session, and after the opening routine and reports of committees, adopted a patriotic resolution introduced by Hon. P. H. Kelly, of St. Paul, as a humble tribute to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. The house then adjourned in honor of the martyr president's natal day.

Governor Nelson has appointed Conde Hamlin assistant judge advocate general in Minnesota, with the rank of lieutenant colonel on his staff.

That Timber.

Speaking of the St. Paul Globe's the recent attack upon Gov. Nelson, Mississippi Valley Lumberman says: A writer in the Globe seeks to make polical capital out of the fact that the timber on the Indian reservations in Minnesota is about to be put on the market. The charge is made by the correspondent, writing from Washington, that Gov. Nelson is in league with Messrs. Walker and Pillsbury to secure the timber for much less than it is really worth, and rob the Indians of their wealth as represented in this timber. So far as Gov. Nelson is concerned, be it said, he secured the passage of the bill providing that the timber be sold in response to a very clamorous demand in the northern part of the state that the timber be thrown upon the market. In the legislation he was opposed by Mr. Walker who believed that the interests of the lumbermen could best be subserved by holding the timber as a forest reserve and until the demand for lumber could not be met from other sources of supply. Every possible safeguard was thrown about the method for the disposal of the timber. The plan finally provided for in the bill has not met with the approval of the lumbermen, because it named a minimum price greater than that which at that time had been paid for timber, and provided further that the land should be sold in forty acre tracts. The opposition of Mr. Walker and other lumbermen to the passage of the bill was so persistent that Mr. Nelson, then representative in congress, with characteristic pugnacity got into the bill pretty much everything that they did not want. As governor of Minnesota, Mr. Nelson now will have no more to do with the sale of the lands than any private citizen of Minnesota. The matter is entirely in the hands of the secretary of the interior. Unfortunately the work of appraisal and the sale will not be completed before the change of administration, and much of the work which has been done is likely to be undone. It can be safely promised, however, that no timber has ever been put upon the market which will be sold in so absolutely fair a manner as will the timber on these Minnesota reservations. The wards of the government, the Indians, are likely to profit by the sale as no other tribes, similarly possessed, have profited. The stuff from the Washington correspondent of the Globe is the worst lot of partisan rot that has appeared in print in many a day. The purpose of the publication seems to have been chiefly to besmerch the reputations of Governor Nelson and Senators Washburn and Davis and Messrs. Walker and Pillsbury, and defend one Wm. Bull, who was appointed and appraiser presumably discharged by Secretary Noble for cause. The correspondent says Mr. Bull was an expert timber estimator and a resident of Washington. Expert timber appraisers do not find Washington a profitable field for their operations and can uniformly command good positions in the timbered states. It is safe to assert that Mr. Bull sought the position for illegitimate purposes and that fact having been clearly disclosed, or his utter incompetency established, that he was promptly discharged. Meantime the Globe should bear in mind that if any scandal attaches to the sale of this Indian reservation timber, it would be credited to the incoming administration, for which it is the sponser. But The Lumberman believes that the timber will be sold in a manner entirely above criticism, and entirely in accord with the most carefully guarded law ever put on statute books. It is a pity that all the other timber lands recently thrown upon the market were not disposed of in as fair a manner as is proposed for the disposition of these lands.

The School of Agriculture.

ST. ANTHONY PARK, Feb. 13, 1893.

ED. JOURNAL:—The state school of agriculture is situated about half way between St. Paul and Minneapolis, and about one mile from the nearest station, St. Anthony Park. The street cars between the two cities pass near the school, which is very conveniently and centrally located on the most beautiful and commanding site to be found in this vicinity. The comforts and conveniences of the school can hardly be overrated. The rooms in which the boys live are light, cheerful and homelike; they are heated by steam and are well furnished.

The cost to each student for board, washing, heating and lighting has not exceeded twelve dollars per month.

All the buildings on the place are substantial, attractive and well adapted to the purposes for which they were designed. Pendergast hall, a four story brick structure erected in 1890, is undoubtedly the finest building on the place. In the basement are the bath rooms, engine room and gymnasium; on the first floor are two recitation rooms and the assembly room; the other three floors are divided into thirty dormitories, accommodating eighty boys. The Home building is three stories high, containing kitchen, dining room, an excellent library, pleasant parlor and about a dozen dormitories. The farm house is a very fine building and some of the boys live there, since all the rooms intended for them are filled to overflowing. The dairy hall is a new structure; in it are located the offices of the different members of the experiment station corps The dairy rooms in which butter and cheese making are taught, are on the first floor. In the basement there is a large recitation room and an engine room. The labratory is a two-story building used for station work and for the benefit of the boys in physics and chemistry. In the veterinary hospital the best methods of treating animal diseases are taught objectively. In one wing of the large barn the boys receive instruction in manual training and geometrical drawing.

When this school opened it had but seventeen students. It now has one hundred and forty enrolled, which fact alone shows that the school is prospering. Its object is to give the student a good practical education, one that will fit them for the farm and which will be helpful to them as useful members of the communities in which they live and as good citizens of the state.

Hoping to see many new students from our county here next fall, I am

Yours respectfully,

A. M. CAMPION.

THE GOLDEN CAVES.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Three days after discovering the cave of gold the outlaw band was ready to break camp and head for civilization. The contents of the cave had been weighed and estimated, and the sum in dollars and cents was beyond their wildest expectations. The precious metal was stored in the bottom of the wagon and every one felt exultant and good natured.

Every man but Taylor. He could not fail to notice that he was regarded as an interloper. From the hour of finding the cave the renegades made every effort to render his position so disagreeable that he would take his departure, but he refused to go. He was a determined and persistent man, and had they known him better they would have held him in fear instead of contempt. He had smothered his anger and affected not to hear the remarks flung out for his benefit, and he had worked as hard as any one in bringing down and storing away the gold.

On the evening before they were to leave Taylor determined to settle matters one way or the other, and he took opportunity to ask:

"Has it been decided yet which route we are to take?"

"Certainly," replied Bob.

"Which is it?"

"Look yere, stranger," exclaimed Bob, as he fired up, "has any of this crowd axed fur your advice?"

"I haven't pretended to advise. As one of the party, and as having a fifth interest in the treasure, I am naturally interested in knowing which route we are to travel by."

"Whar did you git an interest in this gold?" demanded Bob.

"As one of the discoverers."

"Humph! Look yere, stranger, you want to go slow! You forced yourself into this crowd, and it's for us to say whether you stay or go. We don't want to turn a man out here to lose his ha'r, but if he talks too sassy he'll hev to go. When we get out o' this we may feel like remembering you fur the little you've done, and we may not. We make no promises. Understand, however, that you have no claims on the treasure—not the slightest."

Taylor ground his teeth in rage. He had staked all and was likely to lose all. The thought maddened him, and had he not been a cool and calculating villain he would have forced a climax then and there, which must have cost him his life. He maintained silence for a few minutes, and then said:

"Well, boys, I meant no harm, and I hope no one has any hard feelings. You'd have found the cave without me, of course, and you own the team. I'm satisfied you will do the fair thing by me when we get through, and so let's say no more about it."

"That's sensible," replied Bob, and the matter was dropped.

Taylor wandered away from the camp a short distance, apparently to gather firewood, but really to give vent to his feelings by communing with himself.

"The fools!" he hissed when a safe distance away. "Not one of them will ever leave the plains except that some one carries his dead body away! They don't know me. They think I'm a cur to be kicked or petted at pleasure, but they are trifling with a demon. They think to beat me out of my share, but I'll take all—every ounce!"

And as soon as he had left the fire the outlaws drew closer together and Bob said:

"We'd better shoot him tonight as he sleeps. He's bound to trouble us."

"No—wait," replied one of the others. "We've got a long pull before us, with plenty of redskins in the way. He's plucky and a good shot. When we don't need him any longer somebody's rifle can go off by accident and we'll leave his bones for the wolves to pick."

It was settled that way, and when Taylor returned each of the men had a word for him, as if to show they held no grudge.

The night passed without alarm, and at the first sign of day all were up and making ready for a start. When a hasty breakfast had been eaten and the team hitched up Taylor learned for the first time that the outlaws were going to attempt to push through to Fort Sully. They had canvassed the matter and concluded that this route would be safest. The inpour of gold seekers was more from the west, and the Indians would naturally gather on that frontier. And by following the Cheyenne river they would be sure of wood, water and grass the entire journey.

Once started, the outlaws were for pushing ahead at a rapid pace, and by noon they had cleared the foothills and were on the open plains. During the day each one of the four made a special effort to be pleasant to Taylor, but he was not to be hoodwinked by their hypocrisy. They had showed their hand in camp, and he was satisfied that he was to be counted out. He felt, too, that they were hatching some plan to get rid of him before the journey was ended, and his chuckle was fiendish as his fingers lovingly caressed the bottle of poison he carried in his pocket.

There was murder in every heart, but God's sun shone clear and bright over all as the party pressed forward to make the first day's distance as long as possible. Not an Indian was seen during the day, and the outlaws were in good spirits when night closed down and they went into camp on the banks of a rivulet carrying its waters toward the Cheyenne.

When it came time to post sentries Taylor volunteered to take the first watch. He wanted to be by himself, that he might think and plan, but his offer was brusquely refused and one of the outlaws posted. This was proof that they distrusted him, but he took no notice of the slight. When wrapped in his blanket he gritted his teeth with rage and whispered to himself:

"One insult more or less does not count. I'll stand by to mock them when they writhe and thirst and scream out in their agony, and before they are dead they shall see me drive off with the treasure."

There was no alarm during the night, and before sundown the next day the party reached the forks of the Cheyenne, where the soldiers were in camp. Before entering the camp Bob cautioned each man to preserve the strictest secresy regarding their adventures and the contents of the wagon, and camp was made about a quarter of a mile from the tents of the soldiers.

The outlaws kept a sharp outlook on Taylor for awhile, as if fearful that he meant to betray them, but their suspicions did him injustice. He had other plans, and they were plans to be carried out after the encampment had been left behind.

The outlaw leader was the only one who went into camp and reported, and when he returned he brought something with him which made Taylor's heart beat with delight. It was a two gallon jug of whisky which he had purchased from a gold seeker's outfit stopping on the other side of the encampment for the night.

"That perfects my plans!" he chuckled as Bob came in with the jug, "and they are doomed men!"

Each outlaw was told to help himself, but Taylor was not invited. This was another slight, deliberately intended, and was a further proof that the quartet considered him an interloper. It was a long distance yet to Fort Sully, with danger menacing every mile of it, and but for this fact Taylor would have been driven out of camp. Five rifles were better than four in a brush with the redskins.

The outlaw party moved on to the east at an early hour next morning, and as the traveling was good and nothing occurred to interrupt their progress a full thirty miles was covered before sundown came and they went into camp on the bank of the river.

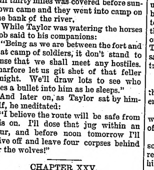
While Taylor was watering the horses Bob said to his companions:

"Being as we are between the fort and that camp of soldiers, it don't stand to sense that we shall meet any hostiles. Tharfore let us git shet of that feller tonight. We'll draw lots to see who fires a bullet into him as he sleeps."

And later on, as Taylor sat by himself, he meditated:

"I believe the route will be safe from this on. I'll dose that jug within an hour, and before noon tomorrow I'll drive off and leave four corpses behind for the wolves!"

CHAPTER XXV.



He did it quickly and deftly.

It was long past dark when supper had been eaten. That the outlaws meditated some evil was clear to Taylor from their demeanor. He had been repeatedly snubbed and insulted during the day, but now that they had arranged their plan to kill him they greeted him with a hearty good will.

"They mean murder!" he said to himself as he looked from one to another, and it occurred to him that they must have planned to kill him while he slept. He, however, returned joke for joke and laugh for laugh, and to have seen the five sitting about the campfire one would have thought them the truest friends.

"I don't calkerlate we shall even see an Injun on this trip," said the outlaw leader, as he finally knocked the ashes from his pipe, "but in course we can't be sure of it. We must tharfore post a sentry, as usual. Say, Taylor, I hope ye ar' feelin good natured?"

"Oh, yes."

"Didn't know but I riled ye back thar at the old camp. I wasn't feelin well when ye jumped on me about the gold. We sheer and sheer alike, in course. You get a fifth."

"But as you have the team, and as you are four to one in case we are attacked, I shall be satisfied with less than that," replied Taylor.

"Well, you jest sot your own figgers and it will be all right," continued Bob. "Now, then, let's get to sleep."

Taylor went to the wagon after his blankets. He had planned just what to do, and he did it quickly and deftly. Had the men been watching him he would not have been detected. He removed the cork from the jug, emptied the poison from his bottle therein, gave the jug a few shakes, and returned to the fire humming a jolly air and evidently in good spirits. The outlaw selected to stand the first watch took his station under the cottonwoods a hundred feet away, the blazing brands were scattered and in fifteen minutes the four men wrapped in their blankets appeared to be buried in slumber. Three of them perhaps were, but Taylor was never so wide awake in his life. His life never before depended on it. He noticed that the three outlaws lay down close together, leaving him alone and several feet away, and he figured it out:

"They have arranged to kill me, and it will be when the sentry is changed. When he comes in to wake the other man up he is to do the deed. I must be wide awake and prepared for him."

And now came night and solitude on the plain. Men who have not experienced it can have but a faint understanding of its weirdness—its awful solemnity—the fear that creeps into the heart of the wakeful listener and unnerves him.

Chee-wee! Chee-wee! Chee-wee!

It is only the voice of the tree toad, but it makes every nerve tingle and the breath come shorter. The notes broke in on a silence as profound as the grave; they cease and the silence which returns is appalling.

Step! Step! Step!

It is only the footfalls of a timid rabbit yards away, but they reach the strained ears with terrible distinctness and make the perspiration start from every pore.

Rustle! Rustle! Rustle!

The listener almost cries out as he starts up. It is a harmless snake making his way through the dry grass, but the sound might have signaled an Indian creeping into camp to do bloody work.

He-wich! He-wich! He-wich!

It is only the note of a queer, wee bird which flits at night over those vast solitudes, but it has made hundreds of brave men shiver with alarm.

An hour has gone by in the camp on the Big Cheyenne. The sentinel does not close his eyes, but feeling quite secure from danger he leans against a tree and gives himself up to his thoughts. Taylor has a thousand wild thoughts—a score of plans—a longing to have time hurry up and bring the worst.

A wolf comes skulking over the earth to sniff and smell and growl and wonder, but the sentinel neither sees nor hears.

The wee night bird ceases its notes and alights on a branch over the sentinel's head and looks down upon him with curious eyes.

A rattlesnake which has been in hiding under a brush heap on the bank of the stream now comes forth and races swiftly past the rear end of the wagon to another hiding place.

The awful solitude affects the horses as much as the men. They have laid themselves down to sleep, but they are uneasy and wakeful. Their ears work back and forth. Their eyes are strained to pierce the gloom, and nothing keeps them down but the fear of breaking in on the solitude if they should get up. They softly scent the air. One would say they had a feeling that some awful tragedy was at hand.

Two hours passed away.

"Time must be most up," whispered the outlaw sentinel as he finally straightened up and looked about him.

"The trial must be close at hand!" whispered Taylor as he noted the action of the sentinel.

Ten minutes later the outlaw walked softly back to the sleepers. When he reached the bodies of his friends he laid his rifle on the ground, drew his knife and had made two steps toward Taylor when the latter suddenly sat up, yawned, looked about him in a sleepy way and then discovered the sentinel and said:

"Oh, it's you, eh? I dreamed that one of the horses was walking over me. Everything quiet?"

"Yes!" stammered the would be murderer, who expected to strike his victim as he slept.

"Well, I think I'll turn out and have a smoke," said Taylor, and suiting the action to the words he flung off his blanket, arose and began to fill his pipe.

In retreating from him the outlaw kicked against Bob, who sprang up in alarm with a curse, and in a minute the two others were awake. The one who was to relieve the sentinel made ready to go out, but before he left, the outlaw leader said:

"Some one deserves a clubbing for turning us out in the middle of the night. One of you bring out that jug of whisky."

All knew that Taylor was to be killed as he slept. All saw that he was alive and unharmed, and that some blunder had occurred. But there was no opportunity for explanations. One of the men quickly brought the jug and a cup, and beginning with the leader each poured down a stiff drink.

Taylor had his pipe alight, and not one of the quartet addressed him nor offered him any of the liquor.

"Now, keep yer eyes open," said Bob to the sentinel, "and we'll turn in agin and go to sleep."

CHAPTER XXVI.

The ocean has its thrilling mysteries and awful tragedies, and the plains and prairies have theirs as well.

One of the outlaws walked off in the darkness to stand sentry for the next two hours, and the other four men laid down to sleep again, each taking his place as before. In two minutes the camp was as silent as the grave, and the specter of murder which came out of the gloom and hovered over the recumbent forms was seen by no mortal eye.

At the end of five minutes a wolf's long drawn, faraway howl was heard, and a shiver passed over the listening sentinel as the lonesome sounds reached his ears. There was a warning in that howl—a menace, a wail—which whispered of tragedy.

Taylor heard it as well, and he grew pale and held his breath. He had braced himself to carry out a part, but he was fearful that his nerve might give way before the end was reached.

Ten minutes passed—twelve—fifteen—twenty.

It was time the powerful poison should begin to act.

Taylor was watching and listening. One of the men moved and groaned.

"Say! Are any of you awake?" called Taylor as he sat up. "I've got terrible pains, and I can't keep still any longer."

"So have I," replied one of the men as he sat up.

Three minutes later the others were aroused, groaning and cursing, and the sentinel came staggering in to gasp out: "Do something for me or I'm a dead man!"

From the way he acted one would have thought Taylor the worst off of all. He groaned, gasped, writhed, twisted, but he had company. The outlaws rolled about on the earth like wounded dogs, and, curiously enough, none of them suspected the cause of their illness. The jug was brought and each drank again, hoping the fiery whisky would ease the pains of what they believed to be colic. It was only after one of the men had fallen in spasms, foaming at the mouth and tearing at the earth with his fingers, that Bob suddenly shouted:

"By heavens, men! but I believe we have all been poisoned."

"How—who by?" shrieked one of his companions.

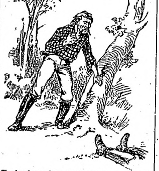
"By—by this infernal cur, if anybody, and I'll have his life!"

Bob pointed at Taylor, who was apparently in convulsions, and then stooped for one of the rifles. As he did so he fell forward upon the earth with a terrible curse, and Taylor sprang up and ran away into the darkness. He did not dare go far, and yet it was horrible for him to linger within hearing.

Strong men who die by poison die hard. It is an awful end. The crouching, hiding, trembling murderer heard them rise and stagger and fall; they raved and wept; they prayed and cursed; in their awful agonies they attacked each other and struggled in death. The night bird was driven away by the cries and shrieks, and the wolf who sat listening and wondering was finally forced to flight by the wails and curses.

* * * * * *

The Big Cheyenne, winding its way through prairie and plain, has seen the sun rise on many scenes of horror, but on none worse than that portrayed in the camp of the outlaws. Four men lay dead and stiff beside the little heap of ashes and blackened brands marking the site of the campfire. Some lay on their backs, their open eyes gazing into the blue vaults of heaven; others were face down, their limbs drawn up and their fingers dug into the soil.



Taylor leaned against a tree for support.

And as the first beam of the golden sun touched the dead, Taylor crept down to gaze upon his work. He came trembling and afraid. His face was ghastly pale, his teeth clicked together and his limbs could hardly support him as he walked. His own brother could not have identified him, so great was the facial change. He did not want to approach—he dreaded the sight which would meet his gaze, but some mysterious power forced him along.

"Revenge is mine and I will repay, saith the Lord."

The fate which the outlaws meted out to the poor gold seekers had recoiled on their own heads, but there was yet another to be punished. Taylor leaned against a tree for support and surveyed the bodies lying before him. He had planned this. There was the wagon—there was the gold—there the horses. He had but to drag the corpses to the bank of the stream and roll them in, and then harness up and move off. The Big Cheyenne would not yield up the corpses for days, and if found who could tell how they died or discover their identity? The route was clear of Indians, and he could tell a plausible story to account for his possession of so much treasure. He had invented a story and gone over it in detail fifty times.

Come! All are dead! Dispose of the corpses. The treasure is yours.

But the man clung to the tree in a dazed sort of a way. A look of terror crept into his eyes, never to leave them again, and he moaned in distress as he looked over the camp. The horses whinnied for water and a change to new feeding ground, but he heeded them not.

The sun climbed higher and higher, but he did not move. A full hour had passed when he suddenly broke forth in a mocking laugh, and this seemed to give him physical strength. He threw up his hands, shouted meaningless words, and turned and fled as if pursued by demons. Half a mile away he hid beneath the bushes, but not for long. Terror roused him up, and he faced the sun and dashed away over the earth as men fly for their lives.

* * * * * *

Night has come again on the great expanse. A dozen miles to the east of the spot where the dead still lie in their stiffness the figure of a man rises from the earth as the dews of heaven fall. It is hard to tell whether it is the face of a man or some wild beast. The eyes are sunken, the lips drawn, the cheeks like those of one who has hungered for a week. He peers this way and that—he skulks and crouches—he indulges in strange and mysterious gestures.

"All dead! All dead! The gold is mine—ha! ha! ha!"

"Revenge is mine and I will repay, saith the Lord."

It is Taylor, and he is a raving lunatic—a madman whose very soul is being shriveled by the awful fire within. Let us leave him to God, himself and the darkness. When the sun comes up again its rays will not soften the pallor of another dead face. There are gaunt, fierce wolves here—great wild eyed beasts who are following at his heels and urging each other to make the first attack.

IN THE PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Grandfather looks from the paneled wall
At grandmother hanging across the hall
In the ripened glow of her stately grace,
And a frown comes over her shadowed face
As he says: "The world has grown askew,
My dear, since we were young—we two.

"Nothing that was is the same today;
Old time fancies are cast away;
All our scruples are laughed to scorn;
All our customs are quite outworn;
Each is seeking for something new—
We were content with the old—we two."

Into the shade of the grim old room
Steal two forms through the twilight's gloom.
Grandfather's eyes are sharp to see,
And a deep voice utters tenderly
"For aye will I love, and love but you,
And we'll follow love to the end—we two."

Grandfather's face has lost its frown,
And his eyes grown softer gaze gently down
On the pair who naught of his watching know,
And grandmother smiles and whispers low,
"One thing goes on as it used to do
In the days when we were young—we two."

Evidence in Two Murder Cases.

In a case of murder by strangulation the woman who perpetrated the crime had been a nurse in an infirmary and accustomed to lay out dead bodies. After the murder she carried out unthinkingly her professional practice by smoothing the clothes under the body of her victim, placing the legs at full length, the arms out straight by the side and the hands open. The doctor who was called in at once declared such a condition of the body was inexplicable on the supposition of suicide, considering the amount of violence that must have attended the strangulation.

In another case the criminal had attempted to make the death appear like the act of suicide by placing the lower end of the rope near the hand of the deceased, but he selected the left hand, whereas the deceased was right handed, and he did not leave enough rope for either hand to grasp in order to produce the very violent constriction of the neck which had been caused by the two coils on the rope. A surgeon pointed out these things. Both criminals confessed their crimes before execution.—Toronto Mail.

Whittier and Fields.

How the death of Fields affected Whittier may be seen from the following extract of a letter written by the poet to Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and published in The Century:

I miss Fields, it seems to me, more and more—a light too early quenched, a loss irreparable. I cannot tell thee how his death shocked me. Ah, me, if I had only known what was to be! He was my friend of nearly forty years; never a shadow rested for a moment on the sunshine of that friendship. It is a terrible loss. With him it must be well. He loved much, pitied much, but never hated. He was Christlike in kindness and sympathy, and in doing good. How strange that I outlive him! But my turn will soon come. God grant I may meet it with something of his simple trust and cheerfulness.

Western Repartee.

A man from the west was doing a bit of society in the effete east, and he was cornered by a New York woman.

"You western people are so original," she twittered.

"Yes, we say things sometimes," he replied.

"You are very good at repartee, I understand?"

"Come again, please," he said, putting his hand up over his ear.

"You are good at repartee; getting in on your adversary, as it were," she explained.

"Well, yes, we ain't slow," he admitted, "when our guns is in good working condition."—Detroit Free Press.

Another Snake Story.

A resident of St. Clairsville, Pa., vouches for the following snake story: "William Brown, a friend of his, found an artificial egg floating in the river, and it being a good imitation of a hen's egg he cut his initials on it and used it for a nest egg. Last June his mother went to the nest and found a blacksnake in possession. In a few days the egg was missing. One day last week Lou Augustine killed a large blacksnake, and noticing a lump on it stepped on it and out came the artificial egg with 'W' cut on it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

On the Subject of Dress.

"I have not much time to think of dress," said Mrs. Bentham Edwards in an interview, "and I was greatly amused by the remark of a former old landlady, who, anxious that I should look my best at some social gathering, remarked austerely to me, 'Really, madam, you do not dress according to your talents!' Upon which I replied, 'My good woman, if all folks dressed according to their talents, two-thirds, I fear, would go but scantily clothed.'"

Superstition of Two Men.

The late Lord Clifden was firmly persuaded that no luck would ever befall him on the race course unless he wore a particular necktie, and Mr. Frank Popham, the owner of Wild Dayrell, would run back at full speed to avoid meeting a hearse.—London Tit-Bits.

Cowley, who died in 1667, made a remark applicable to new as well as old England about his surprise "to see ladies wear such high shoes that they cannot walk in without one to lead them."

Books on love and the relation of the sexes, whether from the standpoint of a man or a woman, are generally excessively stupid and exasperating.

Simple diet is best, for many dishes bring many diseases, and rich sauces are worse than even heaping several meats upon each other.—Pliny.

There are said to be more ex-Union soldiers in Caldwell county, Mo., than in any other county in that state in proportion to population.

The word "cash" comes from the Chinese. It is the name of a small brass coin the Chinese use, with a square hole in the middle.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 26th, 1893.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one hundred and ninety-one and 25-100 dollars ($191.25) interest now due upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Frank St Martin and Delina his wife, mortgagors, to The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of October, 1888, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the fifth day of November, 1888, at 8:45 o'clock a. m., in book 40 of mortgages, on page 370.

And whereas the said The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of one thousand two hundred and twelve and 25-100 ($1,212.25) dollars, with interest on eleven hundred and seventy-five (1175) dollars thereof at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 19th day of January, 1893, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north half (n½) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and the north half (n½) of the southeast quarter (se¼) of section thirty-three (33), of town one hundred and fifty-one (151) of range forty-three (43), in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the twenty-fifth day of March, 1893 at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of one thousand two hundred and twelve and 25-100 dollars, and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine and twenty hundredths dollars, ($589.20) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Mary E. Smith, an unmarried woman, to George T. Ladd, bearing date the tenth day of August A. D., 1885, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 10th day of August A. D. 1885, at 3:20 o'clock p. m., in book W of mortgages, on pages 277, 278 and 279 therein, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of section twelve in township 151, of range 47, containing 160 acres more or less in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 11th day of March A. D. 1893, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

[First publication Jan. 26th, 1893.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of forty-three and thirty-seven hundredths dollars ($43.37) interest now due upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by George Richards (single) mortgagor to The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut mortgagee, bearing date the first day of November 1889 and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the fourteenth day of November 1889 at 9:20 o'clock a. m., in book 48 of mortgages, on page 91.

And whereas the said The Loan and Guarantee Company of Connecticut, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgagee due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and fifty-two and forty-seven hundredths dollars ($652.47) with interest on six hundred and forty-two ($642) dollars thereof at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 19th day of January 1893, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said mortgagee, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼) of section twenty-four (24) of town one hundred and fifty (150) of range forty-two (42,) in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk county at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the twenty-fifth (25th) day of March, 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of six hundred and fifty-two and forty-seven hundredths dollars ($652.47) and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE

North American Review

YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

'Round Home.

Wheat—1 Hard 57.
1 Northern 55.

Mrs. Bert Duntley has been quite seriously sick this week.

F. G. Duffy, of the East Grand Forks Courier was doing business in the city Tuesday.

L. D. Marshall came up from Minneapolis this week looking after business matters.

Take a ticket for the minstrels on the evening of the 22nd and encourage home industry.

Will Peterson was hustling for trade in Fisher and outlying provinces last week. It is a cold day when Will gets left.

Sunday was one of those clear, bright, warm days that come to us occasionally during the winter months laden with bright promises of glad summer time by and by.

Tuesday morning dawned bright and beautiful and everybody found plenty of business shoveling snow for a few hours. But the wheather was quite moderate so it was not so bad.

The Presbyterian society announces a supper for Tuesday evening of next week—the supper is to be prepared and served entirely by gentlemen. Among those who are in it we note the names of Hugh Thompson, A. D. Stephens and others. The idea of those fellows slinging hash and wrestling with pots and kettles!

The social events that occur in the G. A. R. hall on the Friday evenings that the Post is not in session are not without their attractive features. On last Friday evening the ladies of the Relief Corps appeared with refreshments to cheer the hearts of the loyal old boys. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed by all.

About twenty Odd Fellows went to Warren on Friday last to attend the funeral of H. J. Bennewitz. The business houses in Warren closed during the ceremonies and it looked like everybody was at the funeral. Mr. B. was a man universally popular and the funeral procession is said to have been the largest ever seen in Marshall county.

We can now rejoice at the sure prospect of warm weather soon.

Max Ericsson came up from St. Paul this week on a business trip.

J. E. Harris, who broke his leg in a runaway scrape awhile ago is able to be out again.

Geo. R. Roberts was in the city on Wednesday of last week and gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call.

Locken & Holmboe expect to remove their goods in the opera house block to their store on Robert street.

A. Sture is moving his store goods into the store in the McKinnon block formerly occupied by Williams & Roberts.

The heaviest snow-storm of the season set in on Monday afternoon preceeded by warm thawy weather during the forenoon.

A committee appointed by the board of county commissioners to examine the county bridges, completed its arduous labors last week.

Twenty-three horses and colts, six cows, and several sets of harness, belonging to Harry Wyand, were sold at auction last Monday, bringing fair prices.

The heavy snow-storm of Monday was followed by a high wind all night which piled "the beautiful" promiscuously and delayed all trains somewhat.

A. Chabot gave a pleasant dancing party at his beautiful residence on Broadway, Monday evening. A goodly number of young people enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent until an early morning hour.

A valentine, addressed to the name of the handsomest young lady in Crookston was put into the postoffice on Monday without a stamp. The young lady got it all right but had to put up for postage—which was hardly a fair deal.

News of the death of H. J. Bennewitz reached the city on Thursday. Mr. B. was one of the first settlers of Warren where he was engaged in the harness-making business and had many friends in this city. He was chief of the Warren fire department and a prominent citizen whose death is deeply deplored. He died very suddenly after an illness of only a few days.

A number of our subscribers took a notion to call in and liquidate last week for which act of thoughtfulness we feel duly grateful. Such little helps as this seems to relieve the monotony of winter life in a wonderful degree and made us feel as though we would like to see others on the same mission. We extend a hearty invitation to all who can to call.

It now seems to be an assured fact that the Great Northern road will be extended to Duluth before another fall and without a doubt the Duluth & Winnipeg road will also be built into the Red River Valley at some point giving us two direct competing lines to the head of the lakes. This may force the Northern Pacific road to also build direct from here to Duluth.

Will, Ed. and Frank Cleary, under the firm name of Cleary Bros. have commenced business in the Reckitt block on Second street. They expect to make a speciality of fine groceries, but at present have a stock of gent's furnishings, clothing, boots, shoes and dry goods, which they purchased at a sacrifice and will sell them at less than cost. The boys are popular and have the necessary amount of hustle to make them successful.

R. P. Roberts has bought a half interest in the steam laundry and will attend to the office work of that institution hereafter. Mr. Hertz will look after the interests of the laundry on the outside, and together they will push the business for all there is in it. The new firm will reach out for more new business from the surrounding towns and villages and Mr. Hertz will have more time to look after this part of the work than heretofore.

A small boy, an iron grey horse and a go-cart, caused some excitement on Main street, Friday evening all because the horse took a notion to run away. The boy hung on to the leathers pluckily, however, and some of the time the boy was on top of the sled but oftener under it, but managed to escape serious injury. The horse was stopped near the old store of Williams & Roberts on Main street, at which time the boy was acting as one runner for the sled but apparently none the worse for his experience.

The idea of a county fair held early seems to be quite popular.

The new elevator in the Fournet block is now making its regular daily trips up and down.

See notice elsewhere of bargain sales for New York Store. They mean business, and if you doubt it call and see.

Sheriff Grundysen went to St. Paul to spend the Sabbath with his wife, who is there sick. He found her improved and hopes to be able to bring her home soon.

The Minnesota State Editorial Association met in St. Paul yesterday for the annual business meeting. We go to press too early to give results this week. A big turnout was anticipated.

Mine host Miller gave a grand dance at the Germania hotel on Monday night. About forty couple participated and it was not until an early hour Tuesday morning that the party broke up.

Dr. Dampier was called to Fertile on Wednesday evening by a dispatch from Dr. Nelson, who wired him to come and assist in the amputation of the toes of a farmer named Furver, who was badly frozen.

Kitty Kursale, the dancing sunbeam of the "U and I" company, is said to have created a veritable furore with that organization. She is young, beautiful and an accomplished comedienne and danseuse.

Tom Erwin was up from Fisher on Monday. Talking of a county fair he said that he thought it would be an excellent idea to have one held early in the summer and he thinks it would be a popular idea.

A. B. Carlton met with an accident on the yard on Wednesday morning while coupling cars that may result in the loss of a finger or two on his left hand. Dr. Dampier dressed the wound and hopes to be able to save the fingers.

Harry Norrie has bought out Priester's interest in the wood yard and will hereafter run the business alone. This business has grown to such proportions as to demand and will receive his entire attention for the future.

News was received in this city that the office of the McIntosh Times was entirely destroyed by fire early this week. We have been unable to learn what Lanman intends to do about continuing, but suppose he will go ahead just the same.

T. G. Thompson has rented room, formerly occupied by Max Ericsson and as soon as he can fix up will open out, probably about March 1st. He will make a specialty of wines and will always carry the choicest brands for family use.

W. O. Wilson says he is going to try business alone for awhile and wishes to assure the public that he will try and keep things up to the usual style, at least, and his aim will always be to improve things to the best of his ability. Call and see him.

The first school examinations for certificates in the county this year will be held as follows: Crookston March 3 and 4; Red Lake Falls, March 10 and 11; McIntosh, March 14 and 15. Superintendent Lommen expects that there will be about 100 applications and the examinations will be held in the court house.

S. L. Collins: Warren people have a way of dealing with the snow on the sidewalks that I think might be adopted by Crookston to advantage. They use a snow plow drawn by six horses and while the expense is trifling the benefits are ample. You see no snow drifts on sidewalks and crosswalks in Warren.

It is becoming quite the fashion, with some newspaper men to shoot off great wads of advice to farmers as to what "would have been" the better course to pursue—and some of these same newspaper men couldn't tell a reaper from a Jersey cow. Now, if some of those fellows had only blown their bazoo last spring, perhaps it might have done some good. This from the Faribault Republican says:

"A Red Wing grain merchant has figured out the actual cost of raising a bushel of wheat in Goodhue county at not less than 65 cents a bushel. Of course, all the wheat marketed this winter has been at a loss. Less wheat and more corn, oats and potatoes must be the rule if farmers would prosper."

A number of beautiful girls is one of the many features of "U and I" company, which will be presented at the Opera house, Tuesday evening, February 21st. George P. Murphy is the bright, particular star, Mr. E. J. Heffernan playing the opposite part, "O'Donovan Innes." Miss Edith Newton, a first-prize graduate of the New York Conservatory of Music, and only 20 years of age, is the leading vocalist of the company. Harry McDowell, the funniest of all comedy policemen, is the wily copper, and Edward Lawrence, who is also well known, illustrates the trials and tribulations of a New York flat house janitor.

Wilson & Thompson have dissolved partnership, and Mr. Wilson will carry on the business hereafter. Mr. Thompson expects to remain in the city and go into business again, but hasn't decided just what he will do yet.

W. O. Wilson: Thompson and I have been in business together for about nine years, and never had a word of trouble. When we decided to dissolve partnership it took us about two minutes to close the deal. I wrote him out a check and he put on his cap and coat and walked out.

Mr. W. W. Fegan has been appointed voluntary observer at this point for the state weather bureau to succeed John Ross, resigned. Mr. Ross has been observer here for three years, and in a letter to the JOURNAL, observer Harmon of the central station says "he was one of the best and most accurate observers in the state, and we trust the people of Polk county will appreciate his services when they realize that all this work was done gratuitously. From the high recommendations that have been given Mr. Fegan we believe he will be a worthy successor of Mr. Ross." And the JOURNAL will add that if Mr. Fegan's genial disposition and equable temper have any influence with the weather-manager, we shall certainly have some pleasanter weather hereafter.

E. C. Davis has commenced suit through his attorney H. Steenerson, against W. J. Murphy, president of the Crookston, Waterworks, Power and Light company to recover the sum of $7,042.27 claimed to be due on a contract for the building of the power house at this point. The contract price was $14,104.54 and of this sum $7,052.27 has been paid, but the balance remains unpaid, the power company claiming that the contract was not finished in the stipulated time. Mr. Davis claims that it was finished, so far as it was in his power to do so, in the stipulated time, and that the delay was caused by the high water, for which he was not responsible. On February 4th he filed a mechanic's lien upon the power house, and now brings suit to get judgment upon said lien.

"U and I."

Geo. P. Murphy in "U and I." The great laughing festival, "U and I", with the master of teutonicisms, George P. Murphy, and the acme of farce comedy organizations, will be at the opera house Tuesday evening Feb. 21st.

The comedy embraces an interesting plot, interpersed with extremely funny situations and a variety of new and catchy music. Mr. Murphy, the bright star of the organization, is probably the best in his line; his methods are peculiarly his own, and his humor is unctuous and natural. E. J. Hefferman assumes the opposite role and is more than funny as the Irish bricklayer; Miss Kitty Kursale, as Babette, is sure to create a veritable sensation with her singing and dancing; Miss Edith Newton is the principal vocalist, and should completely capture the audience with her beauty and sweet voice; Alex. Gourley, as the funny policeman; Harry McDowell as the dude; Ed Lawrence as the colored janitor, Miss Lora Thorne as "Mrs. Ungerblotz;" The first act is located in the parlor of "Mlle Vermicelli's" apartment. She is an actress at the Casino, in New York City. Act 11 passes in the dining room of "Professor Ungerblotz's" apartments. Act III is the grand fete given on the roof garden of the Sitting Bull Flats, which is a scene never before seen on the stage and embraces an entirely new idea. There are employed, in order to interpret the piece properly, four ladies who impersonate comic opera sylphs, erratic as persons in their sphere of life usually are a comic opera prima donna, who is worshipped by the Johnnies; a dude American by birth but English by adoption; a policeman, whose idea of keeping the peace is to keep at a distance from, all disturbances a janitor, who is the despotic ruler of Sitting Bull Flats; a confidential maid, who is called Babette because it is tonier than Bridget; a retired Irish bricklaying contrector, who visits the metropolis one night and sees enough to last him forever, and Mr. George P. Murphy as the German music teacher, a victim of circumstances and mixed drinks.

Dangers of the Season.

The sudden changes in weather in the latter part of the winter and early spring are a source of colds and coughs. This season is a particularly dangerous one for persons with weak lungs or a delicate constitution. A slight cold is likely to become a serious one, and the cough that follows is the one great cause of the many deaths from consumption in the early spring. Never neglect a cold or cough. Keep a reliable remedy on hand and check the first cough, that may lead to consumption. As such a remedy the medicine called Kemp's Balsam is strongly recommended. For every form of throat and lung disorder including the la grippe cough, croup and consumption in the first stages, it probably has no equal anywhere. Get a bottle today.

Of Interest to Tobacco Users.

Elsewhere in our columns appears the advertisement of the P. Lorillard Co., the well-known tobacco manufacturers. Although their goods are favorably know wherever tobacco is used, this is their first appearance in this locality as newspaper advertisers.

This firm is the oldest in America in its line, having been established in New York on "the Boston turnpike" (now Park Row), in 1760. When George Washington was inaugurated in that city in 1789, the Lorillards had been supplying its leading citizens with tobacco for 29 years.

Not only is the Lorillard Company the oldest, but it has been for years the largest manufacturer of tobacco in the world. The enterprise which was great enough to get on top, has been (as often it is not the case), sufficient to keep there. In the past 25 years it has paid to the U. S. Government for Internal Revenue over fifty millions dollars. It has about 4,000 employees, and their welfare is contributed to by a Library, a Dispensary, Sewing Schools, Night Schools, etc.

Of course in such an enormous output of tobacco there are numerous brands, adapted to every taste. The present advertising is designed to extend the sale of "Climax Plug," which to use their expression, is "much the best." It already sells largely in this locality, but will, doubtless, with the help of newspaper advertising, now become more popular than ever.

The Plain Truth

Is good enough for Hood's Sarsaparilla—there is no need of embellishment or sensationalism. Simply what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story of its merit. If you have never realized its benefits a single bottle will convince you it is a good medicine.

The highest praise has been won by Hood's Pills for their easy, efficient action. Sold by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

McINTOSH, Feb. 13.

The town has been crowded with teams since good weather set in, and business is reviving a little.

A carload of cattle was shipped from here last Saturday, and four more will be shipped the 21st of this month. Ole Bjorgo and Simon Solberg are buying for Hans Breidal of Goodhue County.

Ole Narveson was up from Fertile on Monday, looking after his interests here. He will remove to McIntosh again in the spring.

The McIntosh fire department had another opportunity to show their ability as fire fighters last Tuesday night. The alarm was given at 11.45 and in ten minutes the boys were at their posts. The orders were given by Chief Thompson, and a rush was made to the Times office where the fire was located. In six minutes from the time the engineer started a fire in the engine, we had water, and in ten minutes more the fire was extinguished. Editor Lanman saved all his books and valuable papers, and the damages will amount to about $100. The fire caught from the stove.

M. W. Jenson, Alex. Thompson, A. Gilmour, Tom Rice, Hans Quam, Ole Larson and Owen Nelson took the train Wednesday for Crookston where they went to attend the meeting of the I. O. O. F.

School commenced last Monday with Professor Ryding of Minneapolis as principal, and Miss Smith of Mentor assistant.

We miss the familiar face of Conductor Norrie on the train lately. And it seems as if the train was run by a ghost when Norrie ain't at the helm. Mr. Norrie was well liked all along the line by all who knew him, and all regret his absence very much.

We understand that the spring teacher's examination will be held in the new school-house at McIntosh, March 13th and 14th.

Mentor News.

[Owing to the storm the following items, which should have appeared in our last issue, did not reach us until too late for publication.—ED. JOURNAL.]

MENTOR, Feb.. 15, 1893.

We have had another little blizzard again now, making the roads worse then ever.

The last storm checked the drawing of wood for a few days, but yesterday it was in full force again.

Mr. Fultou from Ada is visiting with D. E. Fulton his son for a few weeks.

There will be more wood at this station next spring then any season yet.

A party of eight persons went down to the lake to fish last Sunday being it was such a fine day. They were gone about 6 hours and returned with 10 small perch.

J. T. said he would wait about another year, until he went fishing again.

The boys of Mentor are getting up a masquerade ball to take place in the town hall on the 22nd it is the first masquerade ever talked of at this place and we hope they will make a success of it.

A lumber yard and hardware store is to be the next addition to our town in the spring. J. C. Larson from Hatton N. D. is the party who decided to locate here. It is a branch of business that has long been looked for by the patrons of Mentor and vicinity.

E. D. Childs has just finished cutting the wood on one timber claim, and has began on another with a full force of men.

A. D. Tice of this place is taking charge of the camp.

Ole Halgrimson from Fosston was down here this week he says that E. D. Childs just beats Walker all to sawdust to cut lumber. Seems that the little man is right in it in lumbering.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, Feb. 21, 1892.

B. S. Chapin of Warren was in town Sunday and Monday.

Dr. Leguee of your city came up on Thursday's train to make a new horse of E. C. Murney's old Buck-skin.

Robert Casmey took a run over to the Forks, Thursday.

Mrs. E. J. Hazeltine started for Mazomanie, Wisconsin, Wednesday, where she will join her husband and they will make their future home. We are all sorry to see Jay go as he is one of the old "land marks."

We have just received a telegram, that Hattie Dahl is seriously ill at the hospital in Grand Forks.

There was a surprise party held at the Keystone house Wednesday evening which was highly enjoyed by those who attended.

Dr. McGillan of Warren was in town Monday.

It's Missionaries you Need.

East Grand Forks Courier:—Crookston, with a population of 6,000 people, employs four policemen, and an effort is being made to reduce the number to two. East Grand Forks, with a population of 1,500 to 2,000, employs six policemen, and the city is threatened with a civil suit in the sum of $400 by a discharged officer, who was known as the seventh man, all because his discharge was not according to the East Grand Forks code.

East Grand Forks Review:—On Monday the county commissioners let a contract to James McIlraith to drive and properly plank 30 piles as a water and ice guard to the abutments of the Mallory bridge, consideration a little over $400. Letting the contract to James, insures a good job.

Hood's Cures.

In saying that Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, its proprietors make no idle or extravagant claim. Statements from thousands of reliable people of what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them, conclusively prove the fact—Hood's Sarsaparilla cures.

Hood's Pills act especially upon the liver, rousing it from torpidity to its natural duties, cure constipation and assist digestion.

Cheap Fuel.

QUITE A BLAZE.

Three Buildings on Second Street Destroyed by Fire.

About 8 o'clock last Friday morning, the paint shop of A. C. Schmidt's on Second street was found to be on fire, and the department was soon on the ground, but owing to the inflammable nature of the contents of the building, the fire swept through the store like a flash and was beyond control before the water could be turned on. The flames communicated to the adjoining building owned by H. F. Brown and occupied by Bert Duntley as a restaurant, and Mr. Brown as a cigar store, and although the firemen worked valiantly and prevented the fire from spreading further, the building was so badly damaged that it will be a total loss.

Nothing was saved out of Schmidt paint shop, and his loss will be $3,500 with an insurance of $2,200. The building was owned by Carl Reidesil and is insured sufficiently to cover the loss.

H. F. Brown's loss on building was $3,000; insurance $2000. On his stock and fixtures he had $2,700, which will probably cover his loss, as there was a quantity of his cigars and fixtures saved.

Bert Duntley saved his furniture and dishes, but as he carried no insurance he will sustain considerable damage.

The household goods of A. B. Carlton, who lived over Duntley's restaurant, were all saved except some carpets.

W. E. Walker lost about $300 on desk, papers, etc.

The stock of goods of A. C. Rauch, the furniture and fixtures of C. C. Ralston's barber shop, Dahle & Bergstrom's saloon and the Main street barber shop were all removed and of course more or less damaged.

H. F. Brown will start manufacturing cigars again as soon as he can find a suitable room. As yet he hasn't decided whether he will build in the spring or not, but the probabilities are that he will.

ATTENTION, FARMERS.

The World's Fair Commissioners Want Samples of Your Grains.

G. Purvis, the official designer and decorator for the Minnesota World's Fair Commission, was in the city Tuesday. In conversation with a JOURNAL representative he said that what the commission lacked was an exhibit of threshed grains, and the farmers are urgently requested to send samples of wheat, oats, barley, flax, peas or anything they have got in the way of cereals to L. P. Hunt, St. Paul, and they will not only be paid for it if the wish—but will have a chance to compete for three prizes, the state prize, an international prize and the world's prize. Send not less than a sackful of any cereal. It will be properly numbered, and after the prizes have been awarded the names of the owners will be placed on the exhibits. Why cannot the famous Red River Valley—so justly famed for her wheat-raising—capture the world's prize for wheat? In 1880 a county away up on the northern boundary of North Dakota—Bottineau—secured first prize for wheat at the World's Fair at New Orleans. Other countries in that state produce just as good wheat as Bottineau, but it wasn't at the fair. Minnesota, has been awarded a splendid location in the agricultural building—alongside of Russia and France, and opposite the South American republics, and it behooves the commission to get a good agricultural exhibit, as this is largely a grain-producing state. Mr. Purvis can vouch for the decoration of the exhibit, but said he, if we do not get the exhibits, it will be like a frame without a picture." Let the farmers who have any grains which are in good condition send some of them to Mr. Hunt, and even if you don't get a prize you will have the honor of having had something at the greatest World's Fair that has ever been held. The commission would also like to get exhibits of Indian handiwork and curios and the JOURNAL would suggest that the exhibit of bead work which the White Earth Indians had at the Fosston fair last year be sent to the World's Fair.

Died.

Saturday morning, February 18, 1893, Carl Edward Misner, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Misner, of Euclid, aged five years and twenty-seven days. Carl was a bright, affectionate child and a favorite with all who knew him.

This morning while the aurora with unusual magnificence sent forth its beautiful dancing lights over the clear star-studded sky, God's messenger came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Misner and called Carl, the youngest of the little home circle below, to his own circle above. Seldom has a little one in five short years, become so universal a favorite as Carl. The dear little songs which won the hearts of all have been heard in the earthly home for the last time. The heavens themselves seemed one burst of rarest music as the little feet so soon grown weary passed over the river, there to mingle his sweet voice with the melodies of heaven. To know Carl was to love him. Bright, winning and affectionate, he entwined himself around the hearts of old and young: But God had need of this pure little earthly blossoms, and the Divine gardener transplanted it to the fields of light above to bloom on through eternity. God's will be done: comes from the depths of loving hearts through the wound the parting makes. Farewell dear little Carl, until in the brighter, better world, the loved ones shall all meet again.

"O, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The reaper came that day:
'Twas an angel visited the green earth
And took this flower away.

Shall I have naught that is fair? saith he;
Have naught but the bearded grain?
Though the breath of these flowers is sweet to me
I will give them back again."

THE WEEK'S NEWS.

Wednesday, Feb. 15.

William Lindsay has been elected United States senator in Kentucky to succeed Mr. Carlisle.

Victor Gardner, the noted Hicksite Quaker preacher, died at his home in Farmington, N. Y., Tuesday, aged 91.

An attempt to arrest the clerk of the Populist house in Kansas resulted in a fight in which several countenances were damaged.

The state department has telegraphed Minister Stevens approval of his action in declaring a protectorate over Hawaii. An annexation treaty will probably be laid before the senate this week.

Charles W. Gardner, chief detective of Dr. Parkhurst's anti-vice society in New York, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment for attempting to extort money from the keeper of a disorderly house.

FALL OF THE READING.

The Great Pennsylvania Corporation in the Hands of Receivers.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—The Philadelphia and Reading railroad is in the hands of receivers. Its credit and its power in the financial world are gone and the ownership of its panic-blown, widely scattered stock is unknown. It was just a year ago this month that the formation of the great Reading-Jersey Central-Lehigh Valley alliance was publicly announced. In mileage it was the largest railroad system in the East and its ownership of coal mines made it apparently the arbitrator of the coal markets of the country. The hand of J. Pierpont Morgan was frankly disclosed in the new combination, and the prestige of his name added much to the public confidence in the stability of the statement.

Cause of Dissolution.

The dissolution of the Reading combination was begun by the opposition of the New Jersey authorities and courts to the formation of a coal trust. Although Mr. McLeod and his associates pooh poohed that opposition for a while they finally had to give way to it and complete severance of the relations between the Reading and Jersey Central was announced. The facts relating to the Reading's incursion into New England, the series of brilliant moves which apparently placed the new Poughkeepsie bridge, the Boston and Maine railroad, the New York and New England railroad and the Connecticut River railroad in the control of

are still familiar events in the public mind. By invading the territory of the consolidated system he antagonized a strong financial interest represented by Drexel, Morgan & Co., which at the outset had been a most powerful backer. The relations between Mr. Pierpont Morgan and the Reading management at once became strained and it was not long before McLeod found his feet slipping off his financial basis. The Philadelphia syndicate who were carrying the stock of the Reading company found themselves overweighted with the newly acquired subsidary properties in New England and elsewhere, and the need of more money was felt. Heavy obligations approached maturity and some quick turns had to be made to escape direct default. The sagacious and resourceful Morgan was no longer interested in protecting Reading's credit if the earnings failed to come up up to his expectation, and the prestige of the Reading combination began to fade.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Feb. 14.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—After a short conflict between the Democrats and Republicans in the house the Democrats were obliged to yield gracefully and agree to the terms which the Republicans presented. These were that general debate on the pension bill should be continued until the minority was accorded six hours debate. Then the debate continued, but it was without special interest.

The senate discussed the Nicaragua canal bill for two hours and then took up the sundry civil bill.

Wednesday, Feb. 15.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—All the amendments to the sundry civil bill reported by the committee on appropriations, including the world's fair items, were disposed of with the exception of the river and harbor items, and these were in the full tide of debate when the president's Hawaiian message was delivered, and then, without the delay of a minute, the senate on Mr. Sherman's motion went into executive session.

The invalid pension appropriation bill monopolized the attention of the house during day. Against the amendments changing the existing pension laws points of order were made, the determination of which was postponed.

Thursday, Feb. 17.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The session of the house was almost entirely devoted to the consideration of the pension appropriation bill. The feature of the day was a personal collision between Turpin, of Alabama, and Waugh, of Indiana, which, but for the bodily intervention of friends, might have resulted seriously. As it turned out, any injuries sustained were received by the peacemakers.

The session of the senate was occupied in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The various amendments recommended by the committee on appropriations to reduce the amounts inserted by the house of representatives for some of the great internal improvements were discussed and voted down.

Friday, Feb. 17.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The sundry civil bill occupied the exclusive attention of the senate during the day. The amendment which had been discussed on Wednesday and the effect of which is to continue in force the law for federal supervision of elections was carried by a party vote. All the committee amendments having been disposed of, and the bill being open to general amendment, the question as to the issue of 3 per cent. bonds to maintain the gold reserve was precipitated on the senate.

The merits of the amendment were discussed for the remainder of the day and the adjournment came about before the discussion closed.

There were no personal conflicts on the floor of the house during the day, although there was a strong under current of bad feeling. In four or five instances a passionate word would have worked trouble. But reason took the place of passion, and the pension appropriation bill was passed. The postoffice appropriation bill was considered without final action.

Saturday, Feb. 18.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The senate opened the day discussing the Sherman amendment to the silver law providing for issue of bonds. It was carried, 30 to 16.

The house proceedings were uninteresting. The postoffice appropriation bill was under discussion.

Monday, Feb. 20.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Senator Morgan, to some remarks in opposition to appropriations for public buildings, spoke of the serious and alarming condition which confronted the country; expressed the belief that only the borders of trouble had been touched, and said that extraordinary action would have to be taken by the treasury department, or else congress would have to reassemble before July to meet the condition. His warning did not prevent the senate from agreeing to all the amendments that were offered making appropriations for or increasing the limit of cost of public buildings. The sundry civil appropriation bill occupied the attention of the senate throughout the day.

In the house, filibustering against the New York and New Jersey bridge bill proved ineffectual during the day. It was led by Messrs. Stone and Dalzell, both of Pennsylvania, but they were never able to muster more than seven men to their support, and the bill was passed practically without opposition. After the disposition of two private bills, the naval and agricultural appropriation bills were called up under suspension of rules and passed.

Interpreting the Scriptures.

"There is a queer old preacher down in my country," said a native born Marylander to a party of friends in the Manhattan club one evening last week. The man had just returned from a visit to his old home after a long absence and was amusing the company with anecdotes.

"He is about seventy years old," continued the speaker, "and he has had little or no education and is utterly incapable of preaching a sermon. He believes every word, letter and punctuation mark in the Bible is inspired, and his method of teaching his flock is to read from the Scripture and expound and explain his reading to the best of his ability.

"Of course the good old man quite frequently runs up against some passage most difficult to interpret. His method of extricating himself, as I have reason to know, is unique. I was listening to his exposition of Solomon and all his glory the other Sunday and wondered how he was going to do justice to the great king in the matter of his thousand odd wives. All of a sudden he came upon the passage, which he read through slowly. Then he paused, mopped his brow and said:

" 'Brethren, we have come across a difficult passage. Let us, however, not shirk our duty. We must look the difficulty firmly in the face and pass on to the next verse.' And he promptly proceeded to do so, to the evident satisfaction of his flock."—New York Herald.

A Typical Mississippi Steamboat.

The City of Providence was one of a long line of Mississippi boats edging the broad, clean, sloping levee that fronts busy St. Louis. She was by far the largest and handsomest of the packets, but all are of one type, and that is worth describing. They are, so far as I remember, all painted white, and are very broad and low. Each carries two tall black funnels, capped with a bulging ornamental top, and carrying on rods swung between the funnels the trade mark of the company cut out of sheet iron, an anchor or an initial letter, a fox or a swan, or whatever.

There are three or four stories to these boats—first the open main deck for freight and for the boilers and engines, then the walled in saloon deck, with a row of windows and doors cut alternately close beside one another and with profuse ornamentation by means of jig saw work wherever it can be put, and last of all the "Texas," or officers' quarters, and the "bureau," or negro passengers' cabin, forming the third story.

Most of the large boats have the big square pilot house on top of the "Texas," but others carry it as part of the third story in front of the "Texas." The pilot house is always made to look graceful by means of an upper fringe of jig saw ornament, and usually carries a deer's head or pair of antlers in front of it.—Julian Ralph in Harper's.

A Shocking Organization.

The Liars' club is all that its name implies. It is composed largely of wicked fishermen whose improbable stories have given a bad name to honest, truth telling worshipers at the shrine of old Izaak Walton who would not tell a lie about the number of fish they caught for the world. The biggest liar is chosen president, and several gentlemen of prominence in our community have held the office.—New York Times.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I SOON GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

THE WAR IS OVER.

AN AGREEMENT BETWEEN WARRING FACTIONS IN KANSAS

And Peace Now Reigns in the Capital City of the Grasshopper State—Imprisoned Republicans Celebrate Their Release by a Big Love Feast.

TOPEKA, Kan., Feb. 17.—Peace reigns supreme in the capital city of the Grasshopper state. The spectre of that worst of conflicts, a civil war, no longer stalks abroad. Hostilities have been averted without the shedding of blood. The taps of the drummer boys and the steady tramp of militiamen as they march down Kansas avenue is all that remains as a reminder of what might have been. Like the ruler of France in ancient history, Governor Lewelling has marched his men up the hill and marched them down again.

Republicans Claim a Victory.

The members of the "Legal house," as the Republicans call themselves, regard the outcome of the difficulty in the light of a signal victory. They have secured all that they were contending for—the right to meet and transact their business in the hall of the house of representatives, and the reference of the question at issue to the courts. Meanwhile the Populist house is outside, but its members do not by any means conclude that they are worsted. On the contrary they claim that the situation has returned to the original status, and this solely on account of their disinclination to

Mar the Good Name of the State

by insisting on a course that would inevitably involve the shedding of blood. Governor Lewelling himself asserts that to the magnanimity of the Populists in failing to insist upon their legal rights is due alone to the peacable turn of affairs. Thus both sides are vociferously declaring:

"The victory is ours."

Militia Disbanded.

A conference between Brigadier General Hettinger and Sheriff Wilkerson took place at 3 o'clock. It was agreed that the militia should at once be withdrawn from duty and that the sheriff should disband his deputies, save a squad of eighteen, twelve of whom were to keep the swarms of curiosity mongers out of the halls and corridors, the others to perform similar service in the state house grounds. This agreement was satisfactory all around. The Populist house remained in session throughout the day, at Trades Assembly hall. A resolution was adopted declaring an adjournment until April, but in this the senate will refuse to concur.

IN FAVOR OF REPUBLICANS.

The District Court at Topeka Decides One of the Legislative Cases.

TOPEKA, Kan., Feb. 18.—In the district court Judge Hazen rendered a decision in favor of the Republicans on the motion for an injunction to restrain the state treasurer from paying the legislature salary warrants.

LEFT TO THE GOVERNOR.

The Wyoming Legislature Adjourns Without Electing a Senator.

CHEYENNE, Wy., Feb. 18.—When the joint session of the state assembly met at noon to ballot for senator, a motion to adjourn sine die was carried by two votes. The Democrats were afraid that Warren would be elected and the Republicans that A. L. New would prove the winner. The governor will appoint a senator. The house then adjourned sine die without having the speaker sign the journal and leaving over one hundred bills pending.

ELECTED A DEMOCRAT.

The Senatorial Deadlock in North Dakota at Last Broken.

BISMARCK, Feb. 20.—W. N. Roach, Democrat, of Grand Forks, was elected United States senator on the 61st joint ballot, the vote resulting: Roach, 50; Casey, 23; Miller, 16; Wallen, 2; J. R. Smith, 1.

BEAUREGARD IS DEAD.

The Famous Confederate General Passes Away at New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 20.—General G. T. Beauregard died at 10 o'clock p. m. of heart failure. For some time past the general had been ailing with the grip, but he improved greatly and Sunday was up and about. He dined with his family at 6 o'clock and retired at 9 o'clock. At that time he was apparently all right. But before 10 o'clock the crisis came and he died before medical assistance could be summoned.

Sunday Opening Undoubtedly Shelved

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The world's fair committee of the house met on the appearance of a quorum, further discussed the several propositions relative to the Sunday opening of the exposition. The discussion of the measures was general, but no conclusion was reached and the committee adjourned sine die.

A member of the committee said after the meeting that he thought it safe to say that no action on the proposition would be taken at this session of congress.

Weissert Denies.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—A. G. Weissert, commander-in-chief of the G.A.R., says that there is no truth whatever in the report that he would be candidate for re-election to his present position, and that he never thought of such a thing.

Refuse to Cede.

CHEYENNE, Wy., Feb. 20.—The commissioners appointed to treat with the Shoshone Indians have so far failed to accomplish a treaty as the Indians absolutely refuse to cede any lands on the south side of the reservation.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England; Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

OFFICIAL PAPER, CITY OF CROOKSTON.

THE clerk hire of the present legislature amounts to just $240 per week less than the clerk hire of the "reform" legislature of '91. This is another proof that reforms are expensive on the people.

A NEW paper has been started at Leech Lake by C. G. Fairbanks, called the Cass County Courier. Mr. Fairbanks evidently wants to be on the ground before the boom takes possession of the embryotic city.

HON. W. A. FLEMMING, of Brainerd, has introduced a bill providing for the final sale of all delinquent tax property at not less than 50 per cent. of the amount for which said property is delinquent. If the day of sale should be changed to the last of November or 1st of December it would be all right as this would allow farmers a chance to get in under the bill.

THE World's Fair commissioners extended an invitation to Gov. Nelson and staff and to the legislature to visit Chicago and look over the Minnesota building on Friday and Saturday next. The governor declined to go on account of the expense it would incur to the state and all the republicans in the house and senate are opposed to the expedition on the score of economy, but all of the democrats and the populist in both houses favor the idea and it may obtain as far as those branches are concerned. Governor Nelson believes in practical economy and, so far as he can will rigidly practice it.

THE North Dakota legislature, with a republican majority of thirteen, has elected a democratic United States senator—W. N. Roach, of Larimore, N. D. The struggle was continued for some forty-one days because of the inability of the republicans to agree on a man. There was no lack of good timber in the republican party, but a number of the republican members allowed themselves to be controlled by their personal jealousies rather than by a sense of duty to their party and their constituents. These few republicans have dealt the republican party in North Dakota a blow which it will take some time to recover from.

PRESIDENT-ELECT CLEVELAND has given out the names of six of the men chosen to fill positions in his cabinet. The selections do not seem to give general satisfaction to the faithful, and no wonder, when life-long democrats are rejected and white-washed republicans and luke-warm democrats get positions in the cabinet. It was this policy which Mr. Cleveland pursued when in office before which tended more than anything else to defeat him in 1888, and it was thought he would act differently this time. But as he cannot get another term he is just going to do as he pleases. The names of the men he has thus far selected are

Walter Q. Gresham of Illinois, secretary of state.

John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, secretary of the treasury.

Wilson S. Bissell of Buffalo, postmaster general.

Daniel S. Lamont of New York, secretary of war.

Sterling Morton of Nebraska, secretary of agriculture.

Hoke Smith of Georgia, secretary of the interior.

THE scenes recently enacted in Kansas are without a parallel in the history of this country and makes one stop to ask, whither are we drifting? It shows the autocratic methods to which the populists will resort in order to gain their ends. The story of the trouble is as follows: at the last election the republicans had a majority of one in the lower house of the Kansas legislature, but the populists elected the governor and had a majority in the senate, and were determined to control the entire legislature. So the populist in the house met and organized, and then declared enough seats vacant to give them a quorum when filled by populists, and proceeded to act as the legally constituted legislative body. Their party leaders told them they were justified in using any means to place themselves in power—even to precipitating a revolution, which they virtually did on a small scale. The republicans of the house refused to recognize the power of the populists, and the governor took it upon himself to order out the militia to eject the "obstinate" republicans from the hall of the house of representatives. But the arbitrary governor found that the people were not with him in such a revolutionary movement, and the first man to disobey his orders was the colonel commanding the militia forces of the state. This officer was deposed but no one was found who would do any better. The militiamen themselves refused to serve in any such cause, and when the sheriff of the county was appealed to he collected a posse to prevent any of the governor's men from breaking the law. The governor's scheme of revolution went to pieces because the people weren't with him. And without the people there could be no revolution. The governor finally made a compromise whereby the republicans were allowed to remain in the hall of the house until the matter is settled by the courts. The populists have rented a building in the city and will go ahead enacting laws, claiming that they are legally qualified to do so.

The theory upon which the populists work—that every one who is not with them is dishonest—can only bring the party to ruin. A despotic, tyrannical government, in the interest of one class as against another, can never prevail in this country. Our interests are so diversified that a government, in order to be enduring, must legislate for all.

CAPITAL LOCATION.

"Between two evils choose the least," seems to the JOURNAL to be a very good motto for the question of capital location now before the legislature. We have received a copy of the majority and minority report of the committee on capital location, also the bill, and one feature of the bill that we unanimously oppose is that limiting the choice to an area not exceeding three-quarters of a mile from the present site. The capital is to be built for the future. For the present the present site is good enough, but if St. Paul continues to grow as it has for the past few years that site will soon be in the very business center. The midway district can furnish a sufficiently large tract at a reasonable cost and we should be opposed to any plan that shut her out of a chance to bid. If the twin cities are considered two great evils why not choose a site between the two—Midway?

A FREE AND OPEN MARKET.

The JOURNAL has not ceased to demand for the people a free and open wheat market, a market uncontrolled by any one set or combination wherein any man can buy and sell as he sees fit, and the bill now before the legislature, H. F. No. 337, seems to us the best calculated to accomplish this important feature of any one we have seen.

It provides that all country elevators become public warehouses and be under the supervision and inspection of the grain and warehouse commission. The license fee is merely nominal, $1.00 being the amount. The party operating the elevator is required to keep an account in proper books of all grain received, stored or shipped by his house, stating the weight, grade, dockage for dirt and other causes, and upon the request of the person delivering the grain is to give him a receipt, stating the gross and net weight of the grain, the rate of dockage and the grade. The failure to specify the correct gross weight in the warehouse receipt is made a misdemeanor.

In case of a disagreement between the owners of the grain and the warehouseman as to the grade a sample of at least four quarts of the grain in dispute is to be placed in a sack provided especially for that purpose, under the inspection of the parties interested, and sent to the railroad and warehouse commission for grading. The decision of the commission is to be made as soon as possible and the sample returned at once. The judgments of the commission are to be made out in triplicate and a copy sent to each of the disputants. In case the commission decides in favor of the owner a new receipt is to be issued to him and he is given power to compel the issuance of the new receipt by either mandamus or mandatory injunction in the district court, if necessary. The costs, as in other actions of this kind, are to paid by the successful party. The railroad commission is to investigate all charges of unfair dockage, discrimination, etc., and to punish the guilty party if wrong has been done.

Last, bul not least, any agreement, pool or combination made between operators or owners of country elevators is declared a misdemeanor, and each day of its continuance is declared a separate offense. For the commission of any of the offenses named in the act the guilty party is to be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500.

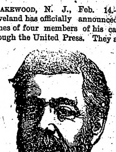
While this bill embodies the demands of the farmers almost universally, it is a matter of surprise that the populists in the legislature—those who pretend to represent the interests of the farmers, do not seem to be sincere in their professions. Now that the bill is drawn they refuse to support it. The JOURNAL has believed and insisted that the republican party has the highest good of the people at heart, and it is such measures as the above that prove our faith well founded.

THIS IS OFFICIAL.

MR. CLEVELAND GIVES OUT A PORTION OF HIS CABINET.

Judge Gresham for Premier and Carlisle for the Treasury—Lamont and Bissell as Secretary of War and Postmaster General.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Feb. 14.—Mr. Cleveland has officially announced the names of four members of his cabinet through the United Press. They are:



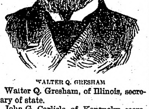
WALTER Q. GRESHAM

Walter Q. Gresham, of Illinois, secretary of state.

John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, secretary of the treasury.

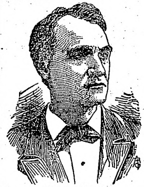
Daniel S. Lamont, of New York, secretary of war.

Wilson S. Bissell, of Buffalo, postmaster general.



JOHN G. CARLISLE.

On making the announcement Mr. Cleveland said: "There is no need of any mystery in regard to the cabinet and it is useless to speculate and indulge in guess work. I shall make no secret of the matter but shall announce the names of the gentlemen selected to fill the positions as fast as I receive their acceptances and permission to make the matter public."

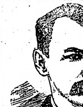


DANIEL S. LAMONT.

GETS UNCLE JERRY'S PLACE.

J. Sterling Morton Selected for Secretary of Agriculture.

LAKEWOOD, Feb. 18.—Mr. Cleveland has announced that J. Sterling Morton, of Nebraska, who visited him at his request during the day, was tendered the secretaryship of agriculture and accepted it. Mr. Morton is one of the most prominent Democrats in the State of Nebraska. He has been in the state legislature and was talked of for governor last fall. Very little is known of him in the East, but he has been a prominent figure in the West for a number of years. He owned a proprietary interest in an Omaha newspaper at one time. Mr. Morton's selection leave's only the navy and attorney generalship to be provided for.



J. STERLING MORTON.

SMITH GETS A PLACE.

The Georgia Man Chosen Secretary of the Interior.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Feb. 16.—Mr. Cleveland has announced the name of the fifth member of his cabinet. It is that of Hoke Smith, of Georgia, for secretary of the interior.

O'DONNELL ACQUITTED.

Charge of Murder Against the Homestead Leader Not Sustained.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 18.—After having been out all night the jury in the murder case against Hugh O'Donnell brought in a verdict of not guilty. He was accused of being an active participant in the Homestead riot during which T. J. Connor, a Pinkerton detective received the wound which cost him his life. The Homesteaders present were all greatly pleased with the verdict and the attorneys for the commonwealth correspondingly depressed, for they had expected a manslaughter conviction.

Meeting His Ideal.

"It is always said," remarked Scott Hendee to the corridor man, "that a man's ideal does not exist on this terrestrial ball; that always it is ethereal, evanescent, and can never be described nor painted. I am a painter—not by trade, but by choice—and I really think that I have not only painted my ideal woman, but later still found her. For a long time I studied over what beauty is in woman and endeavored to visionize my ideal. I partly succeeded in this, for later I painted what I considered the most beautiful women, measured, of course, by the standard of my own inclinations and choice. Then I fell to admiring my work and dreamed of some day meeting my ideal. About five years ago I traveled in Switzerland, sketching the glorious Alpine scenery, the natives and the pretty women.

"One afternoon I journeyed, or rather pilgrimaged, to a rich old burgher's country seat, about seventeen leagues from Lucerne, to sketch and to visit the graves of some of Switzerland's fallen heroes. While there I met the owner, a stern old Roman Catholic, who could fluently speak french. He introduced me to his daughter, the fair Emily, in whom I found a majority of the characteristics of my ideal. I had almost painted her correctly. While there I studied her face closely, so as to be able to catch the fleeting expressions and the sentiment that I knew my picture lacked. Then I returned home and touched again the face with my brush. After making a very little change I found that the picture was a splendid likeness, and I accordingly presented it to the family."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Beauty and the Beasts.

Three Broadway cars, four trucks, a mail wagon and a light cart became entangled in a blockade near Prince street. It was bitter cold, and the drivers felt grieved that they had to stand still.

Then a handsome carriage with a spanking team and old driver in livery tried to worm its way through the blockade. There was a rattle and a bang, and the carriage wheels were caught by the wheels of a truck.

"Hah, ye swash faced, lunk headed baboon," a car driver yelled to the liveried driver, "whar' y' gaw'n?"

"Gabback out o' that!" cried another driver.

The air was blue with profanity, each driver vying to outswear the other. The driver of the carriage said never a word, but his face was a study. Rage, hostility and cuss words were struggling there with restraint and duty.

Just then the carriage door was opened from within, and a rosy face appeared, budding from a hazy mass of light furs.

It was a sweet, blue eyed, young and very pretty face, only the mouth was contracted as if in pain.

"What's the matter, John?" she asked plaintively. "Can't you drive on? I'm just freezing in here."

The swearing ceased at once, and no one looked John in the face, but the driver of the car backed his horses, the truck pulled up a little, the cart swung slightly around, and the carriage passed through and rolled on its way.—New York Sun.

In the Days of Forty-nine.

After the city and county of Sacramento were organized in 1850 the lawful authorities attempted to remove the squatters. Over 200 had organized, and when the sheriff attempted to remove a squatter he was met by an armed mob.

Mayor Biglow then called upon the citizens to aid the sheriff, and with a small body of citizens he halted the mob and ordered them to disperse. His commands were met by defiance, and the leader ordered his men to fire. The mayor and his horse were wounded, and his little band fled.

I was behind a tree. I heard a voice rising above the yell of the mob ordering them to surrender. Thinking that re-enforcements had arrived and looking from my shelter, I was surprised and fascinated to see only a solitary horseman facing the maddened mob and ordering them to surrender. His orders were met, as were the mayor's, by a volley of musketry. Instead of falling or retreating, the rider held his rearing horse in check, and as the horse came down on his feet Mr. McDonald cooly fired both his pistols, each wounding a man. This unequal contest continued until McDonald had emptied his weapons. His last shot brought down the leader. As the leader fell McDonald was aided by the sheriff and posse, when the rabble fled.—A Forty-niner in New York Press.

Altogether Too Much Pepper.

A man was appointed superintendent of a Sunday school much against his own desire. He had been a very profane, worldly man in his early life, but had experienced religion and had attempted to reform in every way. When the appointment of superintendent of the Sunday school was suggested he demurred. He was afraid he might lapse into profanity or into some of his old ways. But he was finally urged and persuaded to take the position. He held it very well until one night he was asked to pray for the poor of the parish. He said: "O Lord, help the poor. They need it. Help Jones. Jones and his family are hungry and they need help. Send them a barrel of flour. Send them a barrel of pepper. Blazes! that's too much pepper!"—New York World.

The Shape of the Shoe.

Our Puritan fathers wore shoes moderately peaked. About 1680 square toes made their appearance. In the reign of Mary, who died in 1658, there was a proclamation issued that no person should wear shoes over two inches wide at the toes. Square toes began to lose favor in 1757. In our newspapers from 1716 to 1735 round toes became more common, and peaked ones less, according to descriptions given of shoes on runaway slaves and servants. From 1787 shoe toes continued in a small proportion and became mostly pointed. This shape lasted nearly a hundred years. Square toes began again in 1825, and in 1836 were succeeded by round toes.—Boston Herald.

ANNEXATION MESSAGE.

A Communication from the President on the Hawaiian Question.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The treaty of annexation concluded between Secretary of State Foster and the commissioners of the provisional government of Hawaii was transmitted to the senate Wednesday, but not made public. The message of the president was brief. It states that it was deemed more desirable to fully annex the islands than to establish a protectorate. The president says the overthrow of the monarchy was not in any way promoted by this government; that the restoration of Liliuokalani is undesirable, if not impossible, and that unless actively supported by the United States would be accompanied by serious disaster and the disorganization of all business in the islands. He says:

> It is essential that none of the other great powers shall secure these islands. Such a possession would not be consistent with our safety and with the peace of the world. Prompt action upon this treaty is very desirable. If it meets the approval of the senate, peace and good order will be secured to the islands under existing laws until such time as congress can provide by legislation a permanent form of government for the islands. This legislation should be, and I do not doubt will be, not only just to the native and all other residents and citizens of the island, but should be characterized by great liberality and a high regard to the rights of all the people and of all the foreigners domiciled there.

In a letter to the president laying the treaty before him, Secretary of State Foster recapitulates the history of recent events in the islands leading up to the revolution; the establishment of the provisional government; the appearance of the commissioners in Washington; the negotiations that have taken place, resulting in the preparation of the treaty, and the establishment of the protectorate by Minister Stevens.

Secretary Foster confirms the president's statement that the revolution was entirely unexpected as far as this government was concerned.

Opposition to Annexation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The Hawaiian annexation is giving its promoters some trouble. It is doubtful whether the necessary two-thirds of the senate can be found to agree with the treaty. There is more talk against it than before, and it is the claim of the opposition that the more there is known the stronger the opposition grows.

POPE LEO'S JUBILEE.

Fiftieth Anniversary of His Consecration as Bishop Celebrated.

ROME, Feb. 20.—At daybreak the pealing of church bells announced the celebration of the pope's episcopal jubilee. By 4 o'clock thousands of pilgrims, priests and citizens were crowded before the doors of St. Peters. At 5 o'clock two battalions of infantry in full uniform were drawn up before the cathedral steps to be ready to help the 200 or more gend'armes in preserving order. The crowd swelled steadily, but remained quiet despite the tremendous pressure caused by some 5,000 ticket holders to get nearer the doors.

At 6 o'clock the cathedral doors were opened and the foremost of the crowd swept in. Within half an hour the great building was packed to the steps.

Thirty Thousand Pilgrims

and 25,000 or 30,000 Catholics from this city gained admission. Not fewer than 40,000 persons, many of them ticket holders, were turned away by the military, who cleared the space around the building so as to prevent disorder when the service closed. The pope entered the cathedral at 9:45, pale but smiling, and apparently in somewhat better health than usual. The cathedral rang with tumultuous cheering as the pope was borne toward the alter. His holiness officiated at the special jubilee mass, intoning the opening words of the Te Deum and giving his blessing in a clear, penetrating voice. The mass lasted until 10:45, but apparently did not fatigue his holiness. He remained in the cathedral forty-five minutes after the celebration and then proceeded to his apartments. The crowd dispersed slowly. At noon most of them had gone and a quarter of an hour later the military withdrew

STORY OF A FAITHFUL DOG.

He Was Sent After His Master's Coin and He Brought It Back Home.

One day when a Paris tradesman was walking on the Boulevard St. Antoine with a friend he offered to lay a wager with the latter that if he were to hide a 6-livre piece in the dust his dog would discover it and bring it to him.

The wager was accepted, and the coin secreted after being carefully marked.

When the two friends had proceeded some distance from the spot the tradesman called to his dog that he had lost something and ordered him to seek for it. Caniche immediately turned back, while his master and his companion pursued their walk to the Rue St. Denis. Meanwhile a traveler, who happened just then to be returning in a small chaise from Vincennes, perceived the piece of money, which his horse had kicked from its hiding place.

He alighted, took it up and drove to his inn in the Rue Pont-aux-Chaux.

Caniche had just reached the spot in quest of the piece when the stranger picked it up. He followed the chaise, went into the inn and stuck close to the traveler. Having scented out the coin which he had been ordered to bring back in the pocket of the latter he leaped up incessantly at and about him. The traveler, supposing him to be some dog that had been lost or left behind by his master, regarded his movement as marks of fondness, and as the animal was handsome he determined to keep him. He gave him a good supper, and on retiring to bed took him with him to his chamber.

No sooner had he pulled off his trousers than they were seized by the dog. The owner, thinking that the dog wanted to play with them, took them away again. The animal began to bark at the door, which the traveler opened. Caniche snatched up the trousers and off he flew. The traveler posted after him in his dressing gown. Anxiety for the fate of a purse full of gold napoleons, of forty francs each, which was in one of his pockets, gave double velocity to his steps. Caniche ran at full speed to his master's house, where the stranger arrived a few moments afterward breathless and enraged. He accused the dog of robbing him.

"Sir," said the master, "my dog is a faithful creature, and if he has run away with your trousers it is because you have in them money which does not belong to you." The traveler became still more exasperated. "Compose yourself, sir," rejoined the other smiling; "without doubt there is in your purse a 6-livre piece, with such and such marks, which you picked up on the Boulevard St. Antoine, and which I threw down there with the firm conviction that the dog would bring it back again. This is the cause of the robbery which he has committed upon you."

The stranger's rage now yielded to astonishment. He delivered the 6-livre piece which he had deposited in the purse and complimented the dog which had occasioned him so much uneasiness and such an unpleasant chase.—New York World.

Making Money Easily.

A story is of a certain Brooklyn woman who finds a peculiar significence now in the words of the psalmist, "Pride goeth before destruction and haughty spirit before a fall." Her husband is a man of prejudices, and one of them is against wearing an overcoat that costs more than fifteen dollars. This notion sorely tried his wife's artstocratic ideas, and when expostulation and entreaty availed nothing she resorted to strategy. Collusion with his tailor on the occasion of his recent need of an outdoor garment permitted his purchase of a sixty-five dollar coat for his usual price, fifteen dollars.

The wife duly paid the difference and was happy—for a few days.

Within a fortnight an old friend met her husband and at once noticed the unusual elegance of his new overcoat. "Why, how's this? You are wearing better clothes than you used to."

"Not at all," he replied. "This is one of my ordinary fifteen dollar overcoats."

"It is! Well, I'll give you twenty-five dollars for it."

"It's yours," was the prompt reply, and the bargain was completed on the spot.

When the husband reached home his wife was surprised at his appearance.

"Why, where's your coat?" she asked.

"Oh," was the complacent reply, "a fool down town offered me twenty-five dollars for it and I took it."—New York Times.

Virtue in a Hunchback.

Some two or three years ago a hunchback, well known as "Bosco," used to clean the boots and run errands for the habitues of the Maison d'Or and Cafe Riche, in Paris, many of whom, before making a bet or sitting down to play at cards, would touch his hump "for luck." One evening a celebrated actress, coming out of the Maison d'Or, sent a friend for two lottery tickets in a drawing that was to take place on the morrow. Many a time before she had tried her luck, but always without success, so this time she rubbed the two pieces of paper on Bosco's talismanic hump. Next day she found she had won £2,000.—London Tit-Bits.

Sharks Deteriorating.

The modern shark is deteriorating. In ages gone by there were ferocious sharks, such as would make a mouthful of you without blinking, seventy feet in length. Plenty of their teeth have been found which are five inches long, whereas the biggest of the teeth belonging to sharks that exist at the present day are 1½ inches long.—Exchange.

A Description of the Heart.

Here is a question and answer of a high school pupil:

Briefly describe the heart and its functions or work. The heart is a comical shaped bag. The heart is divided into several parts by a fleshy petition. These parts are called right artillery, left artillery, and so forth. The function of the heart is between the lungs. The work of the heart is to repair the different organs in about half a minute.—Miss A. C. Graham in University Correspond-

The Value of Thought.

It is hardly necessary to say that all men need to "swing" the moral compass from time to time and to take their bearings in the sea of life. The advice is as true as it is conventional. Upon the use of thinking for such purposes we shall not, then, dwell. We may, however, point out, as a means of strengthening and invigorating the mind in a secular and worldly sense, the habit of thinking is of the greatest possible value.

The minds of those who dread thinking, as if it were a penance, become like the bodies of those fed solely on spoon meat—soft and unable to stand the slightest strain. Reading, as one ordinarily reads, is like swallowing pap; thinking, like eating solid food. The man who trains his mental powers by meditation and by following outlines of thought obtains an intellectual instrument a hundred times more powerful than he who is content never to think seriously and consecutively.—London Spectator.

IVORY AND ITS USES.

WHY CARVED ORNAMENTS IN IVORY ARE VERY EXPENSIVE.

There Are Few Expert Workers in Ivory in This Country—The Price of Elephants' Tusks Has Not Greatly Changed in Recent Years—A Costly Luxury.

When Whitelaw Reid was in search of a workman to decorate apartments at Ophir Farm with rich and beautful antiques brought over from Europe he found that there was but one man in America who could do such work, and he lay sick. Had Mr. Reid been in search of skilled ivory carvers he would have found them almost as scarce. There are not above three or four ivory carvers of approved skill in New York, and hardly so many in all the rest of the country.

The men who do such work are paid high wages the year round, whether busy or idle. They are Frenchmen, Germans and Italians. Of the three the Italians are perhaps the most skillful, since ivory carving has been an art in a high degree of perfection among the Italians for centuries. The most famous ivory carver living, however, is a Frenchman, Moreau Vauthier. Few of his masterpieces have been seen in America, though two were sold at the famous Morgan art sale of a few years ago, and two more, held at a great price, are now in the possession of a noted American jeweler.

The ivory carvers of this country do little or nothing in the East Indian or Japanese manner, nor do they occupy themselves with figure work. Their chief employment is in producing decorative toilet and stationery articles. The rage for stained and carved ivory is of recent growth in the United States, and the demand for such articles is not large, as they are more costly than the same articles in silver would be. They were produced to tickle the jaded æsthetic palates of the rich and luxurious, and only those who may tride away what they will indulge themselves to any considerable degree in carved ivory.

In all such articles the cost of the raw material is small in comparison with that of the labor. Billiard balls are costly because they contain large quantities of the finest ivory cut from the best part of the tusk. The labor cost of billiard balls is trifling, as they are turned by machinery and rapidly. Thus it often happens that a single small article, richly stained and carved, will cost five times as much as a billiard ball containing ten times the weight of ivory. The carvers of ivory use much the same tools as the wood carvers, but of lighter and more delicate make. The work is extremely tedious and laborious.

The carving is usually done in low relief, and the subjects are such as are suitable to this treatment—Persian designs in delicate curves, the cactus, with some varieties of palm, and hints caught from those marvelously simple but artistic carvings of the Alaskan Indians. The ivory is stained slightly, so as to bring out the design, and is permitted to absorb moisture, which it readily does, in order to give it that fresh look common in newly manufactured articles of ivory. The art of staining ivory is a secret guarded well by the carvers.

Some notion of the cost of ivory carving may be had from the fact that, while a hand mirror framed in plain ivory may be had for ten or twelve dollars, a mirror in carved ivory may cost $100 or more. The small articles in carved ivory cost from five to twenty-five dollars, and a toilet set in that material may fetch as high as $500. The American climate, with its extremes of heat and cold, is very trying upon ivory, and ivory backed mirrors of European manufacture almost invariably crack across the back after a few months of use upon this side of the Atlantic. The American manufacturers have hit upon the expedient of leaving a space between glass and frame in order to allow for contraction and expansion.

Nearly all the ivory brought to the United States is bought in the great London market, where the price is knocked about by bulls and bears, who corner ivory as they corner wheat or corn. The African rather than the Asiatic ivory is brought to this country, though one of the largest tusks ever seen in this market—that of a sacred East Indian elephant—has just been mounted in oriental style as a trophy of the chase. The tusk measures more than six feet in length and retains the marks it bore when worn by the sacred beast to which it belonged. Thanks to the predatory and murderous industry of Tippu Tib and his black Zanzibaris the supply of ivory has kept pace with the increased demand resulting from its extended use in this country, and the price for the raw material has not permanently advanced.

Few tusks of more than five feet in length come to this country, and many are less than four feet long. Many of the tusks reach here after having been buried in Africa for years to save them from thievish enemies of the savage owners. Every tusk must go through a process of seasoning, long or short, according as the process is natural or artificial, before it is made up into articles of ornament or use. It is difficult to obtain a perfect slab of ivory more than six inches in diameter, as the upper end of the tusk, which is the thickest, is hollow and the material is coarser than that in the solid part of the tusk.

From the latter are made billiard balls and the most beautifully carved articles for the toilet and the writing desk. From the coarser parts are made poker chips, buttons and a hundred small articles. Every part of the tusk is put to use. Even the chips and sawdust are converted into ivory black by burning. —New York Sun.

When a Girl Has More Fun.

When a girl visits in a town she nearly always has a good time, but a young man seldom does. The men pay him but little attention and the young ladies hold him at a distance because it is not proper to become acquainted too rapidly. —Atchison Globe.

Speaking of the state elevator bill recommended to pass the Duluth News-Tribune says:—"The legislature has evidently made its mind up on the necessity of building a state elevator at the head of the lake. Of course that elevator will be in Duluth. So long as it is to be built, our people will be glad that it is to come to this city. It will give us additional elevator capacity, and from all the indications there will be plenty of business for much more capacity than there is now here, save in years of exceptionally short crops. The state will make no money by the enterprise; and it is hard to see how the farmers can have prices or grades or profits in any way increased by it. A state elevator must in nearly every way have just about the same regulations as private houses. The farmers, or at least the farmer politicians, will never be satisfied until the scheme is tried, and so it might as well be provided for now as at any future date."

This is Meant for You.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly meant to include you.

A Horse and a Hobby.

"The difference between a horse and a hobby," said an old gentleman of much worldly experience, "is that you can get off a horse, but you cannot get off a hobby." It is said by some naturalists, we do not know with how much truth, that the horse was once a five-toed animal of great size and terrifying appearance. In the process of evolution the toes of each foot have disappeared, or rather been consolidated into one. But that was certainly a long time ago, as for some thousands of years the horse has been what he is now, the most useful and handsomest of man's animal servants. He has his place in art, song and his history, and the annals of war and the chase would be incomplete without him. The hobby is probably not so ancient as the horse in its origin and yet it is almost, if not quite, contemporary with the race of man. A distinguished alienist has said that there are no absolutely sane people—that every one is a little "off" in some respect. We would not slander our fellow-citizens by imputing insanity to them, but certainly every one has his hobby, delights to mount it The disagreeable feature of it is sometimes that the hobby and the rider are alike tireless, and you can't stop them. A partial remedy is to select a pleasing hobby, not a roaring, kicking, rampageous one. The Burlington Route has several hobbies, fast time, courteous employes, luxurious accommodations, and safety. A great many people like to ride these hobbies, and any who wish to try it can get tickets from almost any railroad agent, or by addressing W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Sioux City, "The Corn Palace City of the world," is arranging to hold another of its unique and peculiar festivals this year. The date of opening is fixed for September 20th, continuing until October 18th, 1893, and the management promises attractions that shall far surpass anything heretofore presented. It is expected that many of the thousands who will attend the World's Fair can be induced to extend their visit to Sioux City and view the marvels in cereal decoration which will be so perfectly shown, and at the same time gain a correct idea of the greatest corn producing territory on the globe.

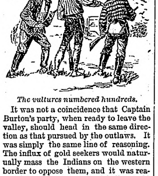
CHAPTER XXVII.



The vultures numbered hundreds.

It was not a coincidence that Captain Burton's party, when ready to leave the valley, should head in the same direction as that pursued by the outlaws. It was simply the same line of reasoning. The influx of gold seekers would naturally mass the Indians on the western border to oppose them, and it was reasoned that the route to Fort Sully would be unopposed. In going out of the valley, however, each party took a different route, and it was not until the gold seekers arrived at the forts of the Cheyenne and the soldiers' encampment that they knew the outlaws had passed on before and only two days ahead.

"I had rather have them ahead than behind," said the captain when he heard the news. "If they can get through we ought to be able to."

"I don't like it," answered Joe with a shake of the head. "They were a desperate lot before Taylor joined them, and you know how he feels toward us. I believe they have come this way to ambush us, and from this on we can't keep our eyes open too wide."

"That's true," added Harkins. "Taylor knew what we were after, and through him all the others know. I think they played spy on us and discovered that we had struck the treasure. They dared not attack us in the valley, as we would be on our guard, but I shall be greatly disappointed if they do not show their hands before our second day down the river is over."

The party remained in camp with the soldiers only one night, and as in the case of the outlaws the contents of the wagons were not suspected. They were looked upon as one of the hundred unsuccessful expeditions already returning disgusted from the diggings. They were given three cheers by the soldiers as they moved out, and camp had been placed only a few miles behind when a vigilant outlook was maintained for the outlaws. Three times during the day, when the party was obliged to pass locations where a foe could lie in ambush, scouts were sent ahead to make sure that no trap had been set for them. Their pace was not so rapid as that of the outlaws, and it was noon of the second day before they approached the scene of the tragedy brought about by Taylor.

While yet two or three miles away the scout, who was riding in advance, halted and waited for the others to come up.

"What is it?" asked the captain as all had closed up.

"Look!"

Hovering over the grove straight ahead was a cloud of buzzards. What their presence signified every man knew.

"They are low down," whispered the captain.

"Which means death," replied Joe. "While they are waiting for a wounded man or horse to die they sail high."

"The other party has been attacked and wiped out, I fear."

"Can't be otherwise. There's certain to be a sight there which the women should not be permitted to gaze upon. Some of us had best ride ahead and see what can be done."

Joe, Harkins and a third man were dispatched on the errand, and they found it one to try their nerves. When they had approached close enough to get a view of the camp they knew it to be the camp of the outlaws, for there were the horses and wagon. The vultures numbered hundreds, and while a part of them were running about on the ground, others sailed slowly about in short circles and hesitated to alight.

"Look at the horses!" exclaimed Joe.

The animals had been staked out on ground furnishing scant pasturage at best. For three days they had had neither food nor water, and as Joe spoke they were making tremendous efforts to break their lariats or pull the iron pins from the ground.

"There are dead men there!" whispered Harkins, with pale face, "but the buzzards are afraid of the horses."

The trio moved forward. They were greeted with whinnies of welcome from the suffering horses, but for two or three minutes they had eyes only for the bodies of the dead. But for the clothing on them it would have been hard to identify them as human beings.

"There are only four, and neither of them is Taylor," said Joe as he rode around the bodies. "There are no arrows here, no empty shells, no signs of a fight with the Indians. Let us ride through the grove and see if we can find the key to this mystery."

They scattered and hunted for further evidence, but they found none. Taylor, living or dead, could not be traced.

"Here's his rifle," said Harkins as he dismounted and picked up a gun lying by itself on the ground.

"And it has not been discharged," added Joe as he inspected it. "These dead men are his work, and the fact that he did not drive away with the team proves that something happened him. Let us relieve the horses and then get these horrible objects out of sight."

When the remainder of the party came up not an evidence of the tragedy existed, but the story told them by those who had drawn the corpses to the river and floated them off was shocking enough without the presence of the dead. The horses had been reduced to skeletons, and it was a full hour before their thirst was sufficiently satisfied to permit them to enjoy the fresh green grass at the other side of the grove.

The next surprise came when one of the men investigated the contents of the outlaws' wagon and found the treasure which had been responsible for so many crimes. While it was known that the men were hunting for the cave of gold, the idea that they had found it had not been entertained. Whom did it belong to? The wreckage of the sea belongs to the finder. So with the wreckage of the plains.

The wagons were moved to the other side of the grove and the gold hunters went into camp. If the newly added treasure was to be taken away it must be drawn by the horses which had hauled it thus far and were now hardly able to keep their feet. It would take a week to recruit them for the long pull to the fort. The camp was therefore made as comfortable as possible, the treasure examined piece by piece and its value estimated, and when this task had been accomplished even the sweet sad face of the orphaned Lizzie carried a smile.

* * * * * * *

I have written much of adventure and very little of love. Some of my readers may have been disappointed on that score. There is love among the castaways floating on a raft in midocean. There is love beneath the white topped wagon of the immigrant slowly trailing across plain and prairie—in the gold hunters' camp, surrounded by perils and alarms. But it is a silent love, born of heroism, self sacrifice and true merit, and it is not demonstrative. It waits for safety and civilization to betray itself.

A month after Joe and his companions rode into that death camp I met most of them in Denver. They had come safely through all perils, their treasure had reached the mint to be valued and paid for in coin gold, and there had been one marriage—Joe and Bess. A month later there was to be another equally satisfactory to all parties—Harkins and Lizzie. From their own lips I learned the story and have given it to you. If there was not enough love in it to satisfy the sentimentalists, blame them for concealing the fact from your most obedient servant.

THE END.

Browning's Memory.

Few people possessed the gift of memory in a higher degree than Mr. Browning. I am reminded of this by what I have been recently told by his friend and mine, Mrs. Le Poer Wynne. She tells me that in company with Mr. Browning and Mr. Cotter Morison they were one day discussing Byron, of whom Mr. Browning was an intense admirer. He spoke of Byron's extraordinary powers of satire, and repeated at considerable length a portion of the "Vision of Judgment," beginning with the words, "St. Peter stood at the celestial gate." When he finished, Mr. Browning said, "I have not repeated those lines for forty years, but they are graven on my memory." Then he burst out with the remark, "Byron was one of the most wonderful men ever created," and turning to Mrs. Wynne he said, pressing her arm in the way he had when much interested, "To think of all this coming to an end at thirty-seven!"

Mr. Cotter Morison agreed that as a satirist Byron was unrivaled, but threw out the query, "Is he a great poet?" Mr. Browning for answer recited with intense feeling those well known lines, "'Tis well that I should be unmoved," never faltering at a word. Mrs. Wynne tells me that he asked her if she remembered the dedication to "Don Juan," and proceeded to quote from it at some length.—Temple Bar.

Electric Lights and Plant Life.

The action exercised by the electric light on plants varies according to the species, and to solve the problem numerous researches are still necessary. The only points which seem to be decided are the following: The electric light accelerates assimilation, and often hastens growth and maturation; in some cases it intensifies the coloration of flowers, and sometimes increases the production. Nocturnal repose is not absolutely necessary for the growth and development of all the plants. The direct rays produced by the electric arc without globe have a very injurious effect on flowers too close to the lamp. The intervention between the arc and plants of a globe of ordinary glass arrests all hurtful effects which are exclusively attributable to violet and ultraviolet rays, and not, as was first supposed, to the production of nitrous acid.—Horticultural Times.

Life Saving Humor.

There is a priest at Saratoff who is a humorist, and it seems not improbable that his humor has saved his life. During the cholera riots his reverence was attacked by a mob, one of the leaders exclaiming, "That is the priest who buried me alive; I have just risen from the grave." Although the people were crying "Stone him," the priest kept his composure. "If you have just risen," he inquired of his assailant, "how is it that you are already drunk?" The answer is not recorded, but the priest survived to tell the tale.—London Globe.

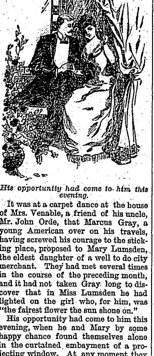
BROUGHT TO BOOK.

CHAPTER I.



His opportunity had come to him this evening.

It was at a carpet dance at the house of Mrs. Venable, a friend of his uncle, Mr. John Orde, that Marcus Gray, a young American over on his travels, having screwed his courage to the sticking place, proposed to Mary Lumsden, the eldest daughter of a well to do city merchant. They had met several times in the course of the preceding month, and it had not taken Gray long to discover that in Miss Lumsden he had lighted on the girl who, for him, was "the fairest flower the sun shone on."

His opportunity had come to him this evening, when he and Mary by some happy chance found themselves alone in the curtained embayment of a projecting window. At any moment they might be disturbed by some other stray couple in search of a quiet nook, and what Gray had to say, if he did not wish the occasion to slip through his fingers, must be brief and to the point.

Presumably it was so, in view of the fact that not more than three minutes elapsed from the time of our people finding themselves alone in the alcove to that of their emergence. It may further be assumed that their conversation, brief as it was, had not proved unsatisfactory to either of them, seeing that, as Miss Lumsden's partner for the next dance came up to claim her, Gray contrived to whisper in her ear, "I will call upon your father in the course of tomorrow."

Mention has been made of Marcus Gray's uncle, Mr. Orde.

John Orde's dearest friend was Edward Lumsden, Mary's father. Their friendship dated back to their school days. They took to each other, as the saying is, from the first—so much so indeed that some portion of the holiday of each was generally spent at the home of the other. When the time came for them to push their fortunes in the world, the city of London acted as a loadstone to both; Lumsden found a stool in the office of a drysaltery firm in Upper Thames street, while Orde went under the tutelage of his father, whose business was that of a shipbroker. Years passed, bringing with them their inevitable changes and vicissitudes, but in no wise interrupting the current of their friendship. In the course of time Orde succeeded to his father's position, while Lumsden started in business on his own account, and to neither of them did fortune prove unkind.

We come now to a certain memorable ninth of June, the day immediately following that of Mrs. Venable's carpet dance. Both Lumsden and Orde had deemed it advisable a little while before to put themselves in telephonic connection with such of their customers and agents as preferred to specify their wants and wishes through that ready medium of communication, and accordingly a wire had been laid on the premises of each. Although Lumsden and Orde were in no way related in business affairs, they frequently used the telephone for messages about private matters, such as a little while before would have necessitated the writing of a note or the transmission of a telegram. For instance, Lumsden, having got himself "switched on" at the exchange, would telephone Orde an invitation to dinner or a request to join him at his club at a certain hour, while Orde, on his part, would inform Lumsden through the same medium that he had just had tickets sent him for a concert or the theater, and would specify when and where he would look to meet his friend and wife unless they happened to be otherwise engaged.

At twenty minutes to two o'clock on the afternoon of the aforesaid June ninth, the telephone bell in Mr. Orde's private office signaled that some one was desirous of speaking with him. Mr. Max, one of the staff, whose duty it was to attend to the instrument during his employer's absence, at once responded to the summons, which was followed up by the usual preliminary question, "Are you there?"

To this Max replied with the stereotyped, "Yes; who are you?"

"Lumsden," was the answer. Then, evidently recognizing that the voice was not his friend's, "Is not Mr. Orde there?" he queried.

"At present he is out, sir," replied Max; "but I am expecting him back every moment."

"In that case I will keep the connection open for a few minutes. Tell him to signal me immediately he returns."

"All right, sir," responded Max, and with that the conversation came to an end for the time being.

So far as could be ascertained afterward, it would seem to have been Lumsden's intention to ask Orde to meet him at his club and dine with him, his wife and daughter being under an engagement to accompany some friends that evening to a concert.

Four minutes later Mr. Orde pushed open the swing doors of the outer office, and was at once informed by Max of the conversation that had passed between himself and Mr. Lumsden. Going forward into his room he took up the telephone tube with the intention of signaling to his friend that he was there and at his service. The tube was in his hand, and he was on the point of putting it to his lips when a sound which reached him through it arrested his attention and caused him to clap it to his ear instead. What he heard sounded to him like an inarticulate cry, as it might be, of surprise or fear, followed, the moment the tube touched his ear, by the words, "Oh, Harry, Harry—this from you!" Close upon which came a groan, then a dull thud as of some heavy body falling, and last of all, after a brief silence, but very faintly, what seemed like the clashing of a door.

For a few moments longer Mr. Orde stood with the tube glued to his ear like a man stupefied, but no further sound of any kind reached him. Then his wits came back to him in some measure. He gave the signal he had been on the point of giving before and waited, with a sickening suspense impossible to describe, for a response. But none came. Again he signaled, and again he waited; but with a like result, or rather with no result at all. The tube dropped from his fingers and he sank into his chair utterly dazed and confounded.

What had happened to his friend? Had he been the unwitting auditor of a tragedy in which Lumsden had played the part of victim? If nothing had happened, why had the latter failed to respond to his summons? But the need for ascertaining, beyond the possibility of doubt, whether his fears had any foundation in fact was a spur to immediate action. He rang and ordered a hansom to be fetched with all speed. While waiting for it he signaled again through the instrument, hoping against hope to hear his friend's cheery "Halloo!" in return, but the silence that ensued was as the silence of the grave. It was with a heart replete with foreboding the most dire that, a few minutes later, he found himself on his way to Saint Augustine's alley, in which narrow but important thoroughfare Lumsden's offices were situated.

But quick as he had been in reaching the scene, the tragedy which had been enacted there—for nothing less did it prove to be—had already become public property. The premises were in charge of the police, while the alley itself was blocked by a surging crowd of men and youths, each and all anxious to glean the latest particulars of a crime so startling and mysterious, for it is not often that a merchant of the city of London is murdered in his own office in broad daylight.

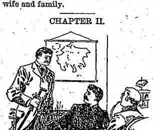
On the oblong mahogany table, at which he had sat for so many hours every week day, lay the dead body of Edward Lumsden, a terrible wound on his left temple, as if caused by some blunt instrument, revealing to all present the nature of the foul play to which he had fallen a victim.

The particulars of the affair, so far as they had yet been ascertained, were as follows:

It had been Mr. Lumsden's practice to charge himself with the care of the establishment during luncheon time, which was limited to half an hour, when, as a rule, he and an office boy were the sole occupants of the ground floor, which comprised a couple of rooms—Lumsden's own office and a much larger one for the use of the staff. On this ninth of June, about five minutes after the half dozen clerks had left in a body, the office boy, Houghton by name, was sent by his master with a note to the head of a firm some distance away, and, according to his own account, was gone just a quarter of an hour, during which time it must have been that Lumsden tried to open up a communication with his friend by telephone. On the lad's return he was horrified at finding his master's body stretched lifeless on the floor. It was evident that Lumsden had been struck down while seated close to the telephone waiting for the signal that Orde had returned. Appearances led to the conclusion that the safe had been hurriedly rifled of whatever notes and gold it might have contained, the door being open and the floor littered with documents of various kinds. So far all inquiries had failed to elicit the slightest evidence of any one, either a stranger or otherwise, having been seen to enter or leave the premises between the time of Houghton's quitting them and his return. And there, for the present, the affair rested.

As the dead man's oldest friend it now became James Orde's unenviable duty to break the terrible tidings to his wife and family.

CHAPTER II.



"Hello, Garry; you here?"

Marcus Gray had taken his ticket at Victoria Station and two more minutes would have seen him in the train on his way to Streatham, where the Lumsdens lived, when his attention was attracted by the placard of an evening newspaper. "Mysterious Murder This Day of a City Merchant" was the startling announcement which stared him in the face. Now, his uncle was a city merchant, one of thousands of others, and that of itself was enough to cause him to invest a penny in the purchase of a paper.

It is enough to say that Gray did not go to Streatham that day, nor for many weeks afterward.

Some days passed without any evidence on which the police could act being forthcoming, other than that which their first crude investigation had brought to light. That the safe had been rifled there was no longer any doubt, seeing that neither a note nor a coin of any kind was found in it; but in view of the fact that Mr. Lumsden had been in the habit of keeping all cash matters connected with the business in his own hands, it was difficult to ascertain with any degree of exactitude until certain books should have been gone through what moneys he had in hand at the time he came by his death. The chances, however, were that the sum was not a large one, the dead man having been in the habit of banking day by day. Mr. May, the managing clerk, had no knowledge of any cash having been paid to his employer on the morning of the ninth; but, on the other hand, Houghton averred that on taking some letters into his master's room about eleven o'clock he found there a gentleman dressed in deep mourning and an entire stranger to him, who, at the moment of his entering, was in the act of handing a number of bank notes across the table to Mr. Lumsden. The notes in question were not now to be found; no entry of them had been made in the cash book; neither could Mr. May throw any light on the personality of the man who had paid them over.

At the inquest, which was more than once adjourned in the hope that further evidence would presently be forthcoming, a verdict of "willful murder against some person or persons unknown" was eventually returned. The funeral had taken place some days before.

Mr. Orde did not fail to impart to Inspector Fountain, who had charge of the affair on the part of the police, the particulars of what he had so strangely heard through the medium of the telephone. The inspector appeared to be much struck thereby and made ample entries in his notebook. There was reason for believing that during the next few days he devoted a considerable portion of his time to endeavoring to ascertain whether the murdered man had been on intimate terms with any one, either a friend or a relative, whose baptismal name was Harry or Henry, but all such inquiries proved of no avail. To his initiative it was due that an advertisement was inserted in The Times and other newspapers requesting that should the same meet the eye of the person who on the morning of the ninth of June paid the late Mr. Edward Lumsden, of Saint Augustine's alley, a sum of money in bank notes he would at once communicate with the police; but time went on and the advertisement seemed likely to remain a dead letter. That the merchant had come by his death at the hands of some one who was aware that at that hour of the day he and the office boy had, as a rule, the premises to themselves, could scarcely be doubted. In all probability Houghton had been seen to leave the office, and advantage had been taken of his absence. But all such suppositions merely served to deepen the mystery which clung around the affair.

Mr. Charles Lumsden, Edward's younger brother, came up from the country to attend the funeral. He, the widow, Mr. Rice, the lawyer, and Mr Orde met in the drawing room after all was over for the reading of the will. James Orde was already aware that he was appointed sole executor.

As a matter of course the bulk of Mr. Lumsden's property devolved upon his wife and children. To his brothers was bequeathed a legacy of one thousand guineas, and to his cousin, Eustace Crake, one of five hundred guineas. There were minor legacies to Mr. May and others, while to Mr. Orde was devised a diamond breastpin and one or two other mementos.

"And, pray, where is Mr. Eustace Crake to be found?" asked Mr. Orde of Mr. Charles Lumsden, when the lawyer had brought his reading to an end. It was the first time he had heard of the existence of such a person, or if he had heard of it in years gone by he had forgotten.

"That is more than I can tell you," was the reply. "All his life Eustace Crake has been one of those rolling stones which are proverbially said to gather no moss. Indeed, if I were to term him the scapegrace of the family, I could hardly be indicted for libel. I am quite aware that my poor brother had always a sort of sneaking regard for him, but for my part any cousinly feeling I may once have had for him died out long ago."

"Then I suppose our only chance of finding him is to advertise for him?"

"That is what I should recommend. At the present moment he may be in Timbuctoo or Peking."

As it turned out, however, no advertisement was needed. On going through his friend's private papers a few days later Mr. Orde found among them a letter of recent date from Crake—an application, in point of fact, for what he termed "a further loan" of twenty pounds, attached to which was the tissue paper press copy of Mr. Lumsden's reply, in which occurred these words:

"I wholly decline to lend you any more money; why not say give, for that is what it really comes to? because I am convinced that the various sums you have already had from me have done you more harm than good. Should I, however, happen to predecease you, you will find that I have not forgotten you in my will."

Crake's latter was dated from some obscure street in Pentonville, to which address Mr. Orde at once wrote, asking the legatee to call upon him with as little delay as possible. Crake was shown into Mr. Orde's office next morning as the clock was striking eleven. He was a handsome but dissipated looking man, with sunken cheeks, a heavy mustache and red rimmed eyes; in age somewhere between thirty and forty. His clothes were of a fashionable if somewhat horsy cut, but worn to the verge of shabbiness. His demeanor was a curious compound of jauntiness and servility, but there was a veiled insolence in his eyes which proclaimed him for the bully he doubtless was at heart. A swarthy flush flowed through his sallow cheeks when told for what sum his name was down in his cousin's will.

"Poor Ted!" he murmured, half under his breath. "Who could have dreamed that he would come to so terrible an end?"

"It seems somewhat singular, Mr. Crake," said the merchant, "that you did not think fit, more especially in view of all he had done for you from time to time, to attend your cousin's funeral. You can scarcely plead ignorance of the fact of his death, or the mode of it, seeing that there was not a newspaper in the kingdom which did not publish ample details of the affair."

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Feb. 14.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 14.—The senate routine only occupied a few moments, and at 10:20 that body resolved itself into committee of the whole.

Bill requiring railroads to give notice at all stations by blackboard when trains are late was recommended to pass. Bill requiring railroad companies to build platforms at stations for unloading machinery slightly amended and recommended to pass.

Senator Dean's anti-pool selling bill was then taken up. The sentiment appeared to be almost unanimous in favor of the bill, Senators O'Brien and Mayo alone speaking in opposition, while a dozen of the senate orators recorded themselves as in favor of the measure. The debate was chiefly on an amendment offered by Senator Tawney and which was not strongly opposed by Senator Dean, allowing pool selling within the actual enclosures of race tracks not more than twenty-four hours before a race and limited to thirty days in a year. The amendment was attached by a vote of 24 to 16, and the bill was recommended to pass by a practically unanimous vote. The senate then adjourned.

The house spent the morning in the introduction of bills, resolutions and reports. The total number of bills crept up past the 500 mark, and the aggregate of bridge appropriations asked now exceeds any possibilities of the internal improvement funds for years, by many thousands of dollars.

The introduction of bills was resumed after recess, and another batch of appropriation bills were handed in. The house then went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Gorman in the chair. The Union Pacific joint resolution was indefinitely postponed, and the world's fair bill and Mr. Bleecker's bill regulating the salaries of officers of building and loan associations were recommended to pass. The house then adjourned.

Wednesday, Feb. 15.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 15.—Senator Sanborn's resolution was indorsed in the senate by a vote of 23 to 10. The resolution, as adopted, provides for free coinage of silver without details as to the ratio.

Senator Wood's bill making the threshing bill a first lien on grain threshed; Senator Craven's bill relating to the law of cartways and Senator Keller's adulterated coffee bill passed.

In committee of the whole Senator Canestorp's bill providing for the election of railroad commissioners was recommended to pass as was Senator Sanborn's bill proposing a constitutional amendment exempting parsonages from taxation.

The house was busy with appropriation bills, it being the last day upon which they could be introduced. The bills introduced provide for the outlay of more than $200,000 in counties in all parts of the state, for the building of roads and bridges and for making similar improvements.

The only bills of importance passed were the world's fair appropriation and Mr. Bleecker's bill relating to building and loan associations.

Thursday, Feb. 16.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 16.—In the senate Glader's bill requiring railroads to provide suitable appliances for loading heavy machindry was passed almost unanimously. Senator Crandall's bill requiring railroad companies to post blackboard notice of late trains also met unanimous approval.

Senator Dean's anti-pool room bill was taken up and passed, 35 to 5.

Senator Eaton's measure proposing an amendment limiting regular sessions of the legislature to biennials of sixty days was discussed in committee of the whole, but no action was taken.

The business of the house opened with a bushel of petitions against a new capitol building, against religious legislation and for a law prohibing betting on horse races.

Mr. Greer's bill to provide for furnishing Minnesota reports to judges was passed, as was Mr. Koerner's bill relating to liquor licenses.

Mr. Ives' bill enabling water power companies to organize as electric light and power companies was passed with an amendment offered by Dr. Williams, of St. Paul, inserting the words "franchise" instead of "privileges," and a clause requiring city councils in issuing franchises to comply strictly with the terms of the charter.

Mr. Greer's bill regulating the receipt, shipment and storage of grain occupied nearly all the afternoon, and no action was taken on the measure before adjournment.

Friday, Feb. 17.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 17.—The Minnesota legislature set apart Friday for its biennial visit to the state prison at Stillwater. The legislators and their families and friends to the number of about three hundred assembled at the Union depot at 10 o'clock, and were disposed of in six extra coaches attached to the regular train on the Duluth road. Upon arriving at Stillwater the train was stopped opposite the prison, and the party entered through the warden's office, where they were met by Warden Henry Wolfer and the members of the board of prison inspectors. The entire morning was spent in a tour of the buildings, and at noon the party was so disposed about the place as to have a view of the arrival of the convicts for dinner, the disposition of that meal and the return to work. After the convicts were back in their places, the visitors were seated to a splendid dinner served in the apartments adjoining the warden's office. In the afternoon the manufacturing departments were visited, including the new binding twine building. The party returned to St. Paul on the 4 o'clock train.

Saturday, Feb. 18.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 18.—Following the introduction of the bills the senate resolved itself into committee of the whole and spent the rest of the day in work on general orders. Thirty-six bills were considered and all but two were recommended to pass. Among them were the following.

H. F. No. 40—O'Neill's bill to make insurance valid whether premium notes are paid or not; amend by making it apply only to "written" contracts and then pass.

S. F. No. 279—J. D. Smith's bill requiring the attorney general to set forth opinions of general interest rendered by him, in his annual report; to pass.

H. F. No. 401—Gutterson's joint resolution declaring in favor of the election of United States senators by the people; to pass.

S. F. No. 290—The grain and warehouse substitute for the state elevator bills, Keller's bill relating to banks and banking, J. D. Smith's bill to abolish days of grace, Lineau's election bill and Representative Maguire's bill relating to the construction of sidetracks and switches were passed over on account of the absence of their authors.

The house has put itself on record as opposed to its committees holding excluding members of the house and representatives of the press from any meeting. After some committee reports the house adjourned.

Monday, Feb. 20.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 20.—The house did considerable work at its session today. There were 74 bills on general orders and 10 of them were disposed of in two hours. Among those favorably acted upon was one for a monument to Minnesota soldiers at Chickamauga, the cost to be $15,000.

H. M. Richardson's bill amending the law of 1878 relating to usury and trusts, recommended to pass.

Mr. Baston's bill, relating to roads, cartways and bridges, recommended to be indefinitely postponed.

On motion of Mr. Fletcher of Hennepin, an invitation was extended to ex-Senator J. J. Ingalls of Kansas, to address a joint session of the senate and house at noon Thursday.

The senate had only one more than a quorum when it met in the morning, so adjournment was taken to 2:30 p. m.

The senate reassembled at 2:30 o'clock with a full attendance. The report of the committee of the whole on S. F. No. 28, O'Brien's bill making the face of an insurance policy the full measure of the loss sustained, was adopted. A few measures were considered in committee of the whole, but none of great importance.

A HOME RULE BILL.

Mr. Gladstone Introduces the Much-Talked-of Measure.

LONDON, Feb. 13.—The struggle among the members of the house of commons and others to obtain seats to listen to what was generally conceded would be a masterpiece of oratory when Mr. Gladstone made his speech giving the details of the Irish home rule bill produced the oddest mixture of members. The seating capacity of the house, as is well known, is entirely too small to accommodate even the members and the time honored custom of members who could get seats, sitting together according to their political predelictions, was honored. The rush to get into the galleries was equal to the struggle to enter the legislative chamber. All the galleries were packed to their Fullest Capacity.

Justice Harlan, of the United States supreme court, who will shortly proceed to Paris to take part in the Behring sea arbitration, had a seat in the diplomatic gallery. He was accompanied by the Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, the United States minister. Scores of other noted strangers were in the galleries.

Spoke for Two Hours.

Mr. Gladstone spoke continuously for over two hours, concluding his speech at 6 o'clock, amid storms of applause. When the cheering had died out Sir Edward Clarke, who was attorney general in the Salisbury administration, congratulated Mr. Gladstone on the magnificent physical effort which he had just made, and then proceeded to enlarge on the proposals of the bill. Remarks were also made by other members of the house before adjournment.

The Parnellites express hesitant approval of the bill, though they are dissatisfied with the proposal to retain the land under English jurisdiction for three years.

AGAIN RISING.

The Ohio River Continues to Cause Alarm.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 13.—The fickle Ohio river has again frightened people along its banks. Sunday it was falling at all points above, and now Charleston, Point Pleasant, Catlettsburg and Portsmouth report the water rising. In this city there has been no check in the present rise. At 6 o'clock a. m. the stage was 48.6 feet. At 6 p. m. it was 49 feet and rising slowly. At Catlettsburg there was rain and snow during the day, which may cause a continued rise here. Good judges do not expect more than fifty feet if there is no rain, but rain is predicted, and if it is extensive the apprehension will increase.

PANAMA SENTENCES.

De Lesseps and His Son Get Five Years Each—Other Sentences.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—The Panama sentences have just been delivered. M. Ferdinand de Lesseps is sentenced to imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs. M. Charles de Lesseps is sentenced to imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs. M. Marius Fontane and M. Cottu are each sentenced to imprisonment for two years and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs each. M. Eiffel is sentenced to imprisonment for two years and to pay a fine of 20,000 francs. The sentences have caused a profound sensation, especially that of M. Ferdinand de Lesseps. The judgment finds the defendants guilty of swindling and breach of trust.

CONDEMN THE VERDICT.

Frenchmen Call the Sentence of De Lesseps Unnecessarily Severe.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—Public opinion is substantially unanimous to the effect that the ignominous judgment passed upon Count Ferdinand de Lesseps went beyond the requirements of justice. The newepapers considered the sentence very severe, and especially that of Ferdinand de Lesseps, and several of them demand the pardon of the man who has been one of the glories of France.

Say Smith Has Accepted.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—The Press correspondent at Lakewood, N. J., says that Hoke Smith, of the Atlanta, Ga., Journal, has been offered the portfolio of secretary of the interior and that his letter of acceptance has been received by President-elect Cleveland.

Typhus Fever Record.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—The official record of the typhus fever visitation since the 30th of last November is 271 cases, 98 deaths, 81 discharges, 73 patients on North Brother's island and 63 "suspects" in quarantine and 3 patients quarantined in their homes in this city.

Common Hypocrisy.

Miss Willard says that few forms of hypocrisy are more common on the lips of women than this, "I would on no account have my name in the newspaper." If a woman has accomplished something helpful to humanity it is just as desirable to have it known as if a man had accomplished the same.

A Mania for Decorations.

There are Frenchmen, according to M. Simon, who collect decorations just as others collect postage stamps. In certain official positions it appears the one thing is hardly more difficult than the other. "I knew," he says, "two public officials who had this inoffensive mania. One was fat. The chain on which he hung his medals spread across his ample chest and struck downward and was lost to view in his waistcoat pocket, in the interior of which the imagination pictured further honorary insignia. The other was thin, to his great disgust, and he could only exhibit some thirty decorations in a row. Some one advised him to wear a double line, just as unruly convicts wear a double chain. He did so, and he was quite right. His breast was a collection of all the animals of creation in gold, silver and enamel. It amused people to look at all this while he was speaking, and they were very glad of this little distraction, for he was an ass."—London News.

'Round Home.

Wheat—1 Hard 57.
1 Northern 55.

Maj. Mix is visiting in St. Paul for a few days.

C. T. Lanman of the McIntosh Times, spent Sunday in the city.

Rev. R. H. Battey went up to Stephen to preach on Sunday last.

A. C. Schmidt and Will Walker went up to Thief River Falls last week

Terry Shelly of Fosston passed through the city Monday on his way home from Grand Forks.

Mrs. H. E. Cooke, who since Jan. 1st, has been suffering from a severe attack of La Grippe is convalescent.

W. A. White was up from Fisher on Monday to purchase tickets for Passadena, Cal., which place he will soon leave.

W. O. Wilson extends a cordial invitation to his friends to call and see him at the old stand in McKinnon's block, Main street. Everything to taste.

W. E. McKenzie, of the Times, went down to St. Paul last week to attend the meeting of the, State Editorial Association, returning on Saturday morning.

Charlie Thomas came up from St. Paul last week for a few days visit with the old folks at home and friends in the city. Charlie says he enjoys metropolitan life hugely.

J. P. Johnson, of McIntosh, went down to St. Paul last week to see what could be done in relation to county division. J. P. did not seem to be well satisfied with the result.

Chet Ralston, the barber, got fast in a partition in some way at the fire last Friday and was with difficulty rescued. For a time it looked like it might be a serious matter.

Jas. Greenhalgh Sr., returned from St. Paul this week where he has been looking up a matter in which some old settlers are interested as being entitled to recover certain monies from the state.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co. are sending out stacks of pamphlets and advertising matter to the farmers to remind them of the different kinds of farm machinery which they will handle during the coming spring and summer.

E. M. Hitchcock and Geo. W. Bennett, of Minneapolis were in the city Tuesday adjusting the recent fire losses.

United States District Attorney Eugene Hay was in the city Tuesday in connection with the timber-stealing case.

A. C. Rhinehart was in the city last week, well pleased at the result of his contest with Anderson for county commissioner.

Tom. Bjoin arrived on Sunday evening with a carload of horses and started with them on Monday for Fosston—just in time to be caught in the snow blockade.

A number of the McIntosh boys were down last week to attend the Odd Fellows Lodge. A lodge is to be organized at McIntosh soon as they now have enough members to warrant such a step.

Dr. A. Gilmour and wife came down from McIntosh last Wednesday. Mrs. Gilmour went down to Fertile to visit friends while the genial doctor remained to enjoy city life pending her visit.

Herb Mason has decided not to go to Battle Creek, Mich., as he had intended and at present is undecided what he shall do. He is at present visiting relatives at Prescott while considering several business propositions.

M. E. Kirsch was in St. Paul last week to see about getting an appropriation to cover expenses incurred by the grasshopper campaign last year. After getting a bill introduced he discovered that the case was covered by an old appropriation and all we had to do was to get the governor to certify to the losses to get his money. He got something over $400.

George McLean who left for St. Paul a few weeks since to accept a position as book-keeper in a large job printing house, in forwarding his order for the JOURNAL to be sent him, reports that he is well pleased with his new situation and thinks he will do well there. He is at present located at the Clifton hotel and invites his Crookston friends, when in St. Paul, to call upon him. Ed Moechel and he room together when Ed is at that end of his run.

Ole Lindquist and Jonas Hanson were brought in from the northeast part of the county Tuesday charged with stealing timber from government land. They were taken before Conrt Commissioner Christianson and bound over to await the action of the United States grand jury and in default of bonds were committed to the Polk county jail. There is said to have been a good deal of timber taken off government land along the Red river this winter, and more arrests are likely to be made.

At the jobbers banquet held at Duluth on Wednesday evening of last week President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern road, assured the people of Duluth that his road would be continued from the Red River Valley at an early date. Among other things Mr. Hill said: "Having built our railroad to the coast I find that I must have something to do to occupy my time. We have started two lines to your city from the Red River. We have reached the top of the hill and the question is how to get down. We hope to find a way to get down to Duluth and we will have a line direct from the Red River Valley to the head of Lake Superior."

On Friday morning A. B. Carlton started for his father's home at Angus to relieve the anxiety of his mother in relation to the wound he had received on Wednesday, and when he arrived at Euclid heard that his house in Crookston was burning. It was a long and anxious day for him until he could get back at night to learn the full extent of the damage and when he at last arrived and found his wife safe and sound and learned how nobly the boys had worked to save his household goods his feelings of relief can better be imagined than described. He says he never can half express his gratitude to the boys for their noble work in his behalf. Some carpets and a fine bird dog was the extent of his losses. The boys tried hard to persuade the dog to go out of the burning building but the dog resisted every effort to get him out threatening to bite everybody who came near him, and was burned up in the building.

DR. PRICE'S Cream Baking Powder.
The only Pure Cream of Tartar Powder.—No Ammonia; No Alum.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

O. H. Lucken went down to St. Paul on Tuesday evening to attend the G. A. R. meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ray, of Belmont, N. D., are in the city visiting friends and relatives.

Another snow-storm on Monday.

H. W. Donaldson was registered at the Palace last Saturday.

Engineer Russell and wife of Grand Forks were in the city Sunday and stopped at the Palace.

The genial Tom Adams has met with deserved promotion. He will go to Barnesville as master mechanic.

Engineer Jack Bunnell has the north run to St. Vincent, which arrangement gives Jack the privilege of being at home oftener than before.

W. E. Haynes was up from Fisher on Monday. Says he will not venture up again until next 4th of July as he always brings a snow storm with him. So mote it be.

Levi Myers was in from the west-side this week. Says if snow is any sign we ought to have a thundering big wheat crop next season as he never saw so much in the country before.

Mayor Anglim returned on Friday morning from a few days rusticating in the Twin Cities. In St. Paul he went to see the world's champion, Jim Corbet, at the Grand.

Miss Emma Veronneau returned on Thursday evening from a fortnight's visit with her sister and friends in Grand Forks. She thinks Grand Forks a very good place—to visit.

John O. Buhn the popular Mentor merchant, made our sanctum a visit of pleasure and profit on Monday. Mr. Buhn says there will be hundreds of cords of wood at the Mentor station this spring—very much more than ever before.

Jim Cunningham returned from a week's visit to Bagley's lumber-camp, fat, healthy and lively—yea, exceedingly lively! He says the boys are doing big work this winter and will bank a much larger cut than ever.

Conductor W. D. Scott has been promoted to the position of assistant superintendent on the Great Northern road and will have headquarters at Grand Forks. Superintendent Jenks will be promoted and C. C. Ponsonby, train dispatcher will be superintendent.

The supper given by the gentlemen of the Presbyterian church Tuesday evening in the opera block was well patronized and much enjoyed by those present. The gentlemen were voted to be good caterers and these unique affairs are likely to become popular in the city.

John Gilbert was up from Fisher on Monday and, while the storm was raging he was looking anxiously for a break so that he could start for home. Said he did not relish the idea of having an experience like that of Mr. Gordon, of Neilsville, who left Crookston last Monday in the storm, got lost and was obliged to remain out all night.

A good audience greeted the "U and I" company at the Grand Tuesday evening and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The play is a light farce-comedy, with plenty of songs, dances, jokes, etc. There are twelve people in the company and they are about the average, while the two leading characters are well taken and exceedingly funny.

Dr. Dampier returned from Fertile on Thuasday morning where he went to attend to Mr. John Farrier, who had frozen his feet so badly in the storm of Monday the 13th. He found that amputation of both feet was necessary and took them off above the ankle. He left the patient doing nicely, not having suffered seriously from the shock and at last accounts Mr. Farrier was doing well with bright prospects of recovery.

A. C. Schmidt: No, I do not think the fire will clean me out entirely; and I hope to be able to start in again at an early day but it must necessarily be on a smaller scale as I had a very extensive and expensive stock that I will not be able to replace on the insurance carried. Shall open out at the old stand on Broadway for awhile as soon as possible.

The case of Beauchaine vs. McKinnon et al, which has been in the district court here since 1890, was argued Tuesday in St. Paul before Judge Powers he having been the judge before who tried the case last time. Twice a verdict has been rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant now moves for a new trial on the ground that there was prejudice on the part of the jury in awarding a verdict of $650 damages, which is claimed to be excessive. The case was argued Tuesday before Judge Powers in chambers in St. Paul, he having been the Judge who tried the case last time. A. A. Miller appeared for the defendant and Ed. George for the plaintiff.

J. A. Dainard was married last Tuesday at St. Hilaire to Miss Josie Harris of that village. Mr. Dainard expects to remove to Fisher where he will go into business. Jim's many friends here extend congratulations.

Engineer Jack Bunnell and his wife returned from a sad visit to St. Paul last week. They were summoned there to attend the funeral of Mrs. Bunnell's brother and while there a niece of Mrs. Bunnell's died and was buried. The young lady was visiting the Bunnells in this city awhile last year.

A. B. Carlton who was burned out at the fire last Friday, has rented of I. U. Jennings the house on Main street vacated last week by W. A. Hammond, owned by W. H. Jennings, of Tacoma, and took possession on Monday.

The grand clearance sale at the New York Store begins Monday—we need the money and goods must be sold.

Deputy United States Marshals W. H. Hilligoss, T. S. Sheehan, G. M. Carrick and H. S. Tallman were in the city Monday in connection with the timber-stealing case.

Go to Gervais & Gervais and secure some of the bargains that are offered at their great clearing sale.

W. G. Fuller has purchased Gay Halvorson's restaurant business, and Gay has taken Walter Bivins' place in the opera house.

Comrades Gonyea and Cooke went to St. Paul Tuesday evening as delegates to the G. A. R. encampment in that city.

St. Vitus' Dance cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Cloaks, blankets and flannels will go with a rush. It will pay you to buy now and pack away for next fall. Come and see.

Tom Bjoin returned from Iowa Monday, bringing with him a carload of horses, which he will dispose of around the county.

The Fosston train started out Monday but got stuck in a snow drift before reaching McIntosh and an engine and snow plow was sent out from here Tuesday morning and succeeded in reaching Fosston about 5 o'clock in the evening returning reached Crookston about 9 o'clock.

The Crookston Belle—Kœppe's new cigar, is as fine as silk. Try it.

Call and see L. I. Benoit in his new store.

Lewis Lohn and S. S. Stadsvold, of Fosston, passed through the city Wednesday en route to St. Paul.

Halvor Steenerson, who was over to Grand Forks Monday, reports the people over there as well pleased with the election of Roach as senator.

Clothing, winter caps mitts fur caps at actual cost.

NEW YORK STORE.

Lane's Medicine Moves the Bowels Each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

Great clearing sale of all winter goods at Gervais & Gervais.

Ed George left for St. Paul on Sunday evening and A. A. Miller on Monday evening to argue the case of Beauchaine vs. McKinnon.

Yesterday being the anniversary of Washington's birthday, the Commercial hotel prepared an elegant dinner for its guests. The bills of fare were the handsomest ones ever used in Crookston, and were all carried away as mementoes. Landlord Stoeser believes in getting the best of everything.

Tremendous bargains will be offered in dress goods, cloaks and shawls during the clearing sale of Gervais & Gervais.

Chas. S. Vine went down to St. Paul last week to consult a specialist in catarrh cases. He failed to find his man, who was away on a visit east, and returned on Sunday morning.

Though other dealers may offer you some small articles at less than cost to deceive you into the opinion that I. U. Jennings is not selling at cost, and thereby induce you to buy some larger article at a large profit to themselves, yet it is a fact that you can buy of him as cheaply as at the factory cost of freight added.

The following clipping from the Detroit Record will be of interest to the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Norcross, who were former residents of this city:—"Marion B. Norcross, aged twelve years, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Norcross, died yesterday forenoon at 11 o'clock, of consumption. Marion was a bright, winsome child, loved by all who knew her, and the idol of her parents to whom is extended the heartfelt sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The funeral took place this afternoon, the remains being interred in Oak Grove Cemetery."

The Fertile Journal finds the following item, relating to our tourists abroad, in the Astoria (Oregon) Budget:—Last evening there arrived in this city, direct from Crookston and Fertile, Minnesota, by way of the Northern Pacific railroad and Portland, a notable party of German-Americans. They are four in number to-wit: Joseph Hoch, August Wentzel, Otto Kankel and Geo. Kronschnabel—all of them prominent citizens of Minnesota and substantial men of affairs. They switched off to Astoria from the general line of their route for the sole purpose of renewing their long-subsisting and most happy friendship with Mr. A. W. Utzinger and his equally well-known brothers, with whom they came to that portion of Minnesota in which they are now located as prosperous business men, over sixteen years ago. You may be sure that the meeting of these old-time comrades was a joyous occasion and that the travelers were most happily and handsomely entertained. Mr. Utzinzer remarked, when he called at the Budget office with his solid friends from Minnesota today, that he was really ashamed of Oregon for the first and only time since his arrival in the state. He has been wielding a flowery pen in his communications to these very men in describing the climatic advantages of Oregon, fairly wreathing her with chaplets of tropical bloom and all that, and here they have had to fight their way to him through the streets of Astoria in a hideous, howling and blinding blizzard that would have been a credit to the Godless plains of Kansas.

It is really too bad, for these visitors are men of sense as well as substance, and it is unfortunate that they could not see Oregon under more favorable aspects, as they are really looking for a new location in a milder climate than that of Minnesota in which to invest abundant means and enjoy the rewards of their early labors. One of them remarked that today was the first time that they had seen the sun since starting from Minnesota, a week ago last night. In the morning they will return to Portland and proceed thence, over the Southern Pacific to the Golden State, where they stay will be more prolonged and, we trust, favored by a kindlier disposition of the elements than that with which they were unhappily greeted in Oregon.

The editorial meeting at St. Paul on Wednesday and Thursday of last week was fairly well attended but not as well as it should be, considering the importance of such occasions. This feature was discussed and the fact that the publication day of so many of the weeklies occurring on one of those two days was urged as a reason why many could not come, so the days for the annual business meetings for the future were changed to Thursday and Friday. The Press club of St. Paul invited the boys to partake of an elegant spread on Wednesday evening and kept open house for the association while it stayed in St. Paul and on Thursday evening the boys were all invited to attend the governor's reception at the Ryan which was one of the grandest of the kind ever held in the state. It was enough to cramp a kitten to see some of the boys in swallow-tail rigs, doing the agreeable to the fair ones of St. Paul but they all stood up to the rack like little men. We came extremely near losing one of our most brilliant and bright lights—Irving Todd, of the Hastings Gazette, who stepped up in front of Jim Corbett, who was engaged in playing a game of pool at the Ryan billiard rooms, and Corbett, thinking Todd a new aspirant for championship was just about to square himself when Bro. E. P. Barnum, of the Sauk Centre Avalanche, seeing Todd's danger rushed in and seizing him by the collar was enabled to make Todd "break away" just in time to save his life. Todd, after he fully realized his danger rewarded Barnum with one of his sweetest smiles and the remark: "What shall it be?" which latter remark was heartily responded to by all of the boys in chorus, "a little of the same!" A resolution defining what a legal paper should be was adopted and the proper committee was authorized to lay the matter before the legislature to establish such a paper as the basis for the future. Bro. Johnson, of the St. Peter Herald, was elected president for the ensuing year and Bro. F. E. Barnum, of the Sauk Centre Avalanche, secretary with Bro. Koercher, of the Big Stone County Herald, corresponding secretary. The vote on president stood pretty close between Johnson and Ed. A. Paradis, of the Midway News, Johnson beating him by only five votes. The association decided to take its usual summer outing in May by a visit to the World's fair at Chicago. Every member will be notified in time to make all necessary arrangements. The next business meeting will be held in Minneapolis on the second Thursday and Friday in February.

Ed. Moeckel was one of the victims of the wrecked train at Bartlett, N. D., last week fortunately escaping with a few severe bruises and cuts. He received a bad looking cut on the top of his forehead which is healing nicely. From his account of the affair, one is led to wonder how anyone escaped alive as the coaches some of them were reduced to kindling wood. Some were badly wounded and two deaths have resulted.

The Columbia club rooms on the second floor of the new portion of the Reckitt block are about completed, and the members will soon be able to enjoy the luxury of social club life. Some of the furniture, including a handsome billiard table, has already arrived. Crookston will soon be in line with Grand Forks and other northwestern cities which have hitherto put on metropolitan airs with their social clubs.

Dangers of the Season.

The sudden changes in weather in the latter part of the winter and early spring are a source of colds and coughs. This season is a particularly dangerous one for persons with weak lungs or a delicate constitution. A slight cold is likely to become a serious one, and the cough that follows is the one great cause of the many deaths from consumption in the early spring. Never neglect a cold or cough. Keep a reliable remedy on hand and check the first cough, that may lead to consumption. As such a remedy the medicine called Kemp's Balsam is strongly recommended. For every form of throat and lung disorder including the la grippe cough, croup and consumption in the first stages, it probably has no equal anywhere. Get a bottle today.

Fits.

All fits stopped free by Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2.00 trial bottle free to fit cases. Send to Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St. Phila., Pa. For sale by all druggists; call on yours.

Rheumatism Quickly Cured.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done, if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill.: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days. I am all right to-day; and would insist on every one who is afflicted with that terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

Cholerine in Pennsylvania:

Swickley Penn.: We had an epidemic of cholerine, as our physicians called it, in this place lately and I made a great hit with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. I sold four dozen bottles of it in one week and have since sold nearly a gross. This remedy did the work and was a big advertisement for me. Several persons who had been troubled with diarrhœa for two or three weeks were cured by a few doses of this medicine.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Mentor News.

From our special correspondent.

MENTOR, Feb. 23, 1893.

Mr. Fulton from Ada, who has been visiting with D. E. Fulton of this place, returned home last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Collar from Fargo, N. D., are visiting with Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Smith. Mr. Collar is connected the M. & N. Elevator Co He arrived just in time to show some of his musical talent at the masquerade ball on the 22d.

Owing to frequent storms of late, the masquerade ball was not as well attended as was expected. The condition of the roads rendered it impossible for any one from a distance to get here, although many had made preparations to come. But after all the young folks enjoyed themselves very much, and if prizes had been offered Morris would have taken home one as a darkey.

The fair sex say that J. Tagley is not in it with a mask. His nose is too visible.

Wheat buyers are having a snap now—same salary, no work, 28 days to the month.

W. Marston is reported as having an heir arrived at his place. We congratulate with a smoke, W. M.

Moe & Buhn have rented their place at the lake to H. W. Cleveland, who is already piling up the ice.

E. D. Childs has broke camp here, his crew of men and teams starting for home on Saturday, Feb. 25th.

We learn that John F. Smith is going to build a hotel in our village in the near future. He has purchased a lot and will begin work in the spring. We expect to see quite a change in our village before next fall.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent

MCINTOSH, Minn., Feb. 27, 1893.

The weather is still very cold, with now and then more snow, which makes country roads almost impassable.

Mr. Weitzel, the hustling clothier for Ernst Bros. of Milwaukee was in the city from Friday to Saturday of last week.

Mrs. Smith of St. Paul is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. S. H. Drew.

Frank Gravel was in the village on Saturday taking orders for more groceries as usual.

Mr. Hunt, the cigar salesman for Kuhles & Stock, has been stopping in the village for a few days. He says that when he wants a little fun and recreation McIntosh is the place to get it.

Everybody is talking of going to the World's Fair.

Ole Bjorgö left for St. Paul last Thursday with two carloads of fine cattle. He will return as soon as possible after two more. McIntosh is fast becoming a cattle market, as no less than twelve carloads have been shipped from here during the past two weeks.

Miss Katie Nowlan arrived in McIntosh Monday, and is now teaching in district No. 120, where she closed a very successful winter term of school about six weeks ago. Miss Nowlan is well-liked, and we hope to be able to keep her as teacher in our schools for some time.

Rev. S. Stone preached a very able and interesting sermon at the Congregational church last Sunday, to a very large audience. All present acknowledged it to be one of the best they ever listened to, and the reverend gentleman deserves the hearty support of all his congregation.

The first masquerade ball of the season was given at Johnson's hall on the 22d, and a good time was had. Supper was served at the hotel Duluth. The prize for the most ludicrously costumed couple was given to Dr. McEachran and Mrs. S. Drew, and for the handsomest costumed couple to Hans Hanson and Miss Scotland.

Mr. Norrie came up from Crookston last Tuesday and staid till Wednesday visiting with his numerous friends, who showed their appreciation of his presence by giving a party at Quam's hall in the evening in his honor. There was no dancing, but a very social time was had, however, by telling stories, reciting Shakespeare and Napoleon Bonaparte, interspersed with numerous songs and ballads, concluding with the song of the McIntosh Golden Circle. Come again, Harry.

The McIntosh K. of H. lodge held their regular weekly meeting last Saturday night with 26 members present. An I. O. O. F. lodge will also be started here in the near future.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, Feb. 28, 1893.

M. M. Davis came up to look after matters on the farm Saturday.

George Murray, an old-time Euclid boy, now residing in Marshall county, spent several days at the Kilreany farm last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Useldinger went down to the Queen City to visit with their daughter, Wednesday.

Charlie Bronson, the genial knight of the grip, was with us Thursday.

Herman Wallis returned from the lumbering camp, Friday.

A number of young folks tumbled themselves into a sleigh and went out to Charlie Teal's to hold a surprise party. A good time is reported.

D. Farrell, Stewart Chapin and Mr. Robertson were among the Argyleites that were visiting in our city last week.

The petition that was sent up here by Senator Lommen relating to the drainage of the Red River valley, was very liberally signed.

Harvey and Florence Misner and Rena Ballou, who have been seriously ill, are now convalescent.

A. A. Chapin of Coldwater, Michigan, has established a barber shop over Taylor & Co's store.

C. L. Troohy of Duluth, was doing business in our village on Saturday.

Mrs. M. A. Amsden, of Bolton, Texas, is visiting in the family of G. H. Fargo.

Rev. S. Currie took the train for Grand Forks Monday.

M. E. Kirsch, chairman of the county supervisors, spent Monday with us.

The Angel of Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Cottet and took from its earthly home their baby boy, which was about two months old. The little one had not seen a well day. The family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

Mrs. Myers who has been visiting in the family of Tom Brown for several weeks, returned to her home in Crookston Monday.

The dance which was held at the Keystone farm in honor of the return of Robert Gaston and bride, was highly enjoyed by all who attended. There was about one hundred and twenty-five couple, including parties from Crookston, Grand Forks, Euclid and Fisher.

Miss Hattie Davidson, who has been visiting with her parents for a few days, has returned to take up her studies in the high school of your city.

The G. A. R. Encampment.

The annual encampment of the G. A. R., held at Market Hall in St. Paul on Wednesday and Thursday of this week was one of the biggest events of the kind in point of attendance and interest ever held in Minnesota. Addresses were given given by Commander Lange, Commander-in-Chief Weissert, Adjutant General Smith, John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, Governor Nelson and others. The following officers were elected:

Department commander, John Day Smith, of Minneapolis; senior vice-commander, S. R. Van Sant, of Winona; junior vice-commander, George N. Lavaque of Duluth; chaplain, H. G. Bilbie of Duluth; medial director, J. M. Tucker of Hastings. The adjutant general will be a Minneapolis man, and E. N. Leavens of Faribault, department quartermaster.

The following five members of the council of administration were re-elected: Thomas Montgomery, St. Peter; R. C. Livingston, Spring Valley; J. M. D. Craft, Farmington; Perry Starkweather, Minneapolis; L. W. Collins, St. Cloud.

The following delegates and alternates were selected to attend the national encampment at Indianapolis: Delegates—J. M. D. Craft, Farmington, and I. C. Seeley, Minneapolis, at large; First district, Charles Stauff, Wabasha; Second, R. M. Anderson, Marshall; Third, Aug. T. Koerner Litchfield; Fourth, C. W. Fisher, St. Paul; Fifth, F. C. Hartson, Minneapolis: Sixth, John Schaffer, St. Cloud; Seventh, H. E. Cooke, Crookston. Alternates, W. Potter, Aitkin, and Samuel Bloomer, Stillwater, at large; First district, T. J. Hunt, Dodge Center; Second, David Secor, Winnebago City; Third, F. E. Ford, Glencoe; Fourth, Chas. Stees, St. Paul; Fifth, Mathias Kees, Minneapolis; Sixth, H. B. Hoffman, Pine City; Seventh, A. E. Rice, Willmar.

A resolution was adopted pledging the department to urge the senators and congressmen from this state to oppose all efforts to repeal the pension law of June 27, 1890, known as the disability pension law. The resolution, passed unanimously.

Gov. Nelson and Senator Ingalls were enthusiastically received on their entrance to the hall. Brief and appropriate addresses were made by both.

Resolutions of respect for the late Generals Hayes, Butler, Doubleday and Bartlette were adopted, and the council of administration made its report. The salaries of the A. A. G. and A. Q. M. G. were placed at the old figure, $800 and $400 respectively. A committee of three was authorized to be appointed by the coming department commander on testimonial to the retiring department commander. Memorial pages in the Journal of the encampment were authorized for Comrades James Cannon, of Mankato, and William McCrory, of Minneapolis.

Comrade Wheelock, chairman of the department soldier's home committee, made a report, commending the present board of trustees, commandant and officials and saying that they had no suggestions to offer, so far as the management was concerned, but suggested that the home would be a good place for a grand reunion every year. He thought the near-by posts should make arrangements for such a reunion and invite all the comrades in the state.

Resolutions of thanks for the attentions shown the members of the encampment; for the reduced rates on the railroads; for the reports in the public press, and mostly for Commander-in-Chief Weissert's genial presence and his many words of counsel.

Adjt.-Gen. Gray entered and was presented to the encampment and Commander Lange closed the encampment with an address of thanks to his subordinates. Comrade Roberts moved a vote of thanks of the encampment to the retiring commander for the good sense and good nature he has exercised in trying to keep the encampment in order. Commander Lange turned over the gavel to the commander-in-chief for the purpose of installing the new officers. He performed this duty and the encampment adjourned sine die.

Department Commander John Day Smith was born in Litchfield, Me., in 1845. He served in the 19th regiment Maine volunteer infantry, which was with the 2nd army corps, under General Hancock, and was in all the campaigns of the army of the Potomac. He was in the battles of Fredricksburg, Chancellorville, Gettysburg, Mine Run,, Bristow Station, the Wilderness, Spotsylvania. Cold Harbor, Tolodotomy, Petersburgh and Weldon railroad. He was slightly wounded at Gettysburg and severely wounded and left for dead on the field south of Petersburgh. At this time he was one of the six color guards, two of whom were killed, two wounded and two taken prisoners. He has been commander of Bryant Post, Minneapolis. Two years ago he was elected junior vice department commander, one year ago senior vice department commander. Senator Smith graduated from Brown university in 1872 and from Columbia Law school in 1879. For some time he was law lecturer in Harwood law school and to-day holds a similar position in the University of Minnesota. In 1889 he was elected to the house of representatives, and in 1891 to the state senate. He has a wife and four children.

S. R. Van Sant, senior vice commander, was born in Rock Island, Ill. In 1861 he enlisted in the 9th cavalry and served for three years, being, during a greater part of his service, a member of Grierson's famous raiders. Being only 20 years of age when mustered out, he entered the New York Business college from which he graduated and went to Knox college, where he studied two years. In 1886 he came west again settled in Iowa, where he engaged in the boat building and repairing business, constructing one of the first raft boats on the river. Since that time he has actively followed the business of raft towing. Mr. Van Sant removed to Winona in 1883, where he has served several terms as alderman from his ward and from which city he was sent to the legislature.

The camp-fire in the evening was a grand affair, the hall being packed to its utmost capacity while many went away being unable to find standing room. Among the attractions was Comrade Henderschott. "the drummer boy of the Rappahannock," with the historic drum that was given him by Horace Greely. Addresses were made by prominent men and women in G. A. R. and W. R. C. circles and the camp-fire broke up at a late hour, the boys voting it a grand success in every particular.

The Nationality Issue.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—Allow me to say a few words through your paper in regard to the slur upon the Scandinavians in the Daily Times of last Monday. Mr. McKenzie never loses an opportunity to belittle the Scandinavians and is constantly bringing up the race issue and trying to make the people believe that the Scandinavians are the most clannish people on earth. Now I claim that they are not more clannish than any other nationality, and after they learn the English language they affiliate readily with the American people and make just as good citizens as the people of any other nationality. I don't suppose the Times has any particular grievance against the Scandinavians, but as the mouthpiece of the democrats of this city, it must be contiually trying to "down the Scandinavians." This policy has been strictly adhered to by the democratic party here, and as they have been running city affairs for many years, is it any wonder that the Scandinavians feel that they shouldn't be constantly sat down on simply because of their nationality. They only want to be treated as other citizens are treated, and care nothing about the nationality of the people who control city affairs.

At the election in the city last fall the votes of dozens of Scandinavians were challenged on the presumption that all the Scandinavians would vote for Knute Nelson. On the contrary the Scandinavians of the seventh district were Mr. Nelson's bitterest enemies and he didn't receive one-tenth of the votes of his own countrymen. And by the way some of our people havn't forgotten the scurrilous, contemptible manner in which the Times treated our governor when on his trip through the county.

Who is it that is keeping the race question alive here—is it the Scandinavians or the Crookston Times? Does anyone ever see or hear anything of it except in the Crookston Times? I believe not, and it is done for the purpose of antagonizing the balance of the population against the Scandinavians. Is that a good way to build up a city? Does the Times think that by continually ghosting the people with this lie upon the Scandinavians that the welfare of the city will be subserved? But these things are of no moment to the Times. Of the three political parties in Crookston the democrats are the strongest and it behooves them to create discord and jealousy among the balance of the people. Hence it is that the Times is always trying to place the Scandinavians in a ridiculous light before the Americans.

Trusting you will excuse me for trespassing so much upon your generosity, I remain,

A SCANDINAVIAN-AMERICAN.

The Hoosiers Want the Best.

"The people in this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace, Druggist.

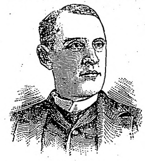
A POET AND HIS WIFE

HOW EUGENE FIELD COURTED A "PRETTY COMSTOCK GIRL."

Inks of Diverse Colors Indicate This Versifier's Moods and Intentions—His Progress Up the Ladder of Fame—Example of His More Serious Verse.

They say of Eugene Field, the Chicago poet, that he changes his ink with his varying moods and intentions. If he is blue, the story goes, and does not intend to labor long when he seats himself at his desk, he uses writing fluid of a deep azure hue; if he is in fine fettle and purposes doing a quantity of his best work, he dips his magic pen into ink of a midnight shade; if he has it in his mind to write a love song, a delicate mauve is chosen; if sarcasm and ridicule are to flow from his pen's tip, the color selected is a most sanguinary carmine. The present writer cannot vouch for the truth of this story, but there is no doubt that Mr. Field is a man of many conceits and unusual ways—ways that may almost be termed eccentricities.

Eugene Field's life has not been a monotonous one. He is a native of St. Louis and was born Sept. 3, 1850, but he passed most of his boyhood days at the home of his cousin, Miss Mary Field French, in Amherst, Mass. Of the details of his youth there is not much recorded. He was a student at the University of Missouri at Columbia, that state, and there met a young man named Comstock. They became "chums" and decided to travel together for a year in Europe. Before the journey was begun young Field accepted an invitation to make a few weeks' visit at the Comstock home in St. Joseph. His friend had five sisters of such surpassing fairness that they were known and are remembered as "the pretty Comstock girls."

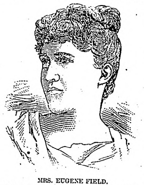


EUGENE FIELD.

The second of these young ladies, Julia Sutherland Comstock, was then only 16 years of age, but Eugene fell in love with her at once and in earnest, and before he started for Europe with her brother had proposed and was accepted. Before the two had reached the Atlantic coast young Comstock missed his traveling companion. Investigation showed that he had returned to St. Joseph to bid his sweetheart another and a longer farewell. The European tour was finally undertaken six months afterward, but was cut short because of the late start. Upon his return from his foreign trip Mr. Field insisted on an immediate marriage and carried his point.

At the time of his marriage he was a young man of considerable wealth, which had been left to him by his father, and he lived without an occupation. That happened which was to be expected—the money wasted away, and he was presently "broke." It was not until about this time that he began to climb the ladder to literary fame. The first rung was a reporter's position on an insolvent journal, and the struggle for a time was a hard and well nigh discouraging one.

Later came employment on a newspaper in whose office salaries were paid with that regularity that cheers the getter up of copy, and from that time to the present Eugene Field's literary progress has been steadily upward. Several years were passed in Denver, and there he met Bill Nye, then of Laramie, and, I think, Mark Twain. It was while Field was a member of the staff of The Rocky Mountain News that his verses began to attract notice. Though his work was from the first such as to command attention, they were then far from being such finished literary gems as he now produces. They were mostly humorous, and in fact it is as a humorist that he is better known to this day, though much of his later literary work is instinct with a true and delicate sentiment, such as is expressed in the poem entitled "Yearning For Home," from which two stanzas are here reproduced:



MRS. EUGENE FIELD.

It comes to me often in silence,
When the firelight sputters low—
When the black, uncertain shadows
Seem wraiths of the long ago.
Always with a throb of heartache
That thrills each pulsive vein
Comes the old, unquiet longing
For the peace of home again.

Outside of my darkening window
Is the great world's crash and din,
And slowly the autumn shadows
Come drifting, drifting in:
Sobbing, the night wind murmurs
To the splash of the autumn rain,
But I dream of the glorious greeting
When I go home again.

Mr. Field has for several years now been identified with the "Sharps and Flats" column of the Chicago News, and prosperity is his, but his wife is the financier, as she was in the early days of his journalistic life. I. D. MARSHALL.

SHE TURNED THE TABLES.

How a Little Homely Knowledge Saved a Young Lady Much Discomfort.

A young lady through her knowledge of housewifery rather turned the tables upon a would be jester one day and let that individual, who was of the male persuasion, into a little secret of considerable importance to those who have occasion to work in the kitchen as amateurs.

The two were members of a party visiting an Adirondack camp in the Saranac lake region. Every one was well acquainted, and the days passed merrily away until a heavy rainstorm drove the ladies and the less enthusiastic fishermen indoors and compelled them to seek other forms of amusement. The rain continued to fall almost without intermission for several days, and as a means to relieve the monotony the gentleman already referred to proposed that the various members of the party try their hand at cooking the next meal.

Permission was obtained from the host, the members of the party laughingly agreed to the proposition, and the guide, whose duty it was to act as cook, was for the time sent about other business. The gentleman acted as chef, and with a knowledge obtained from serving on the house committee of a prominent New York club proceeded to assign various work to his aids and appointed the young lady first vegetable cook for the express purpose of making her peel onions, the odor of which she loathed.

When the party adjourned to the kitchen to begin preparations, a large supply of strong odored red onions was brought to the lady, and she was requested to remove the outer cuticle. The acting chef and the others who had been let into the secret made merry over the supposed discomfiture of the first vegetable cook, but the latter smiled sweetly and uttered no protest.

"Bring me a deep pan," she said to her helper, and when this was produced she filled it to the brim with water. Then she tucked up her sleeves to the elbow, showing just the prettiest pair of arms in the world, and removing her rings set to work peeling the onions under water with a deftness that showed how familiar she was with the work and depriving it of all its offensiveness.

It was a revelation to the man, who had looked either for a vigorous protest, or had expected to see the eyes of the vegetable cook water from the effects of the onion juice. The amateur dinner was in every way a success, but none of the cooks achieved a greater triumph than the one whose practical experience showed to the others the common sense method of peeling onions.—New York Herald.

A Life Work.

Mr. Sutherland got hold of a prodigious Clarendon and Burnet and made it the richest and most extensive pictorial history in existence or ever likely to be in existence. He found nearly 19,000 prints and drawings for it and no less than 731 portraits of Charles I, 518 of Charles II, 352 of Cromwell, 273 of James II and 420 of William III. If, remarks Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, we only think how few are the portaits of Charles I, and these mostly copies after Vandyke, we shall have an idea of the labor and exploration necessary to gather up the 731. Think also of the pains and cost in cleaning, "laying down," "insetting," and "inlaying" these portraits, the binding, arranging, etc., and we shall not be surprised to learn that this folly occupied the fanatical Sutherland such a lengthy portion of his life.

When finished, it filled 67 huge volumes and had cost £12,000! We may conceive all the visitings of print shops, the turning over boxes of prints, the groveling among winds and lanes, the correspondence and the endless paying of money! To give a finish to his labors a catalogue was prepared of all the engravings. This filled two great quartos. At Sutherland's death the work was carried on by his widow, who is reported to have given as much as £80 for a single plate!—Temple Bar.

Peculiarities About Tramps.

"A fact about your professional vagrant or tramp is that they never want to go back to the place from where they were sent," says a penitentiary superintendent. "For instance, if one is sent in from along the Susquehanna road, on his discharge he usually requests to be sent north, east or south, or any direction that will take him away from that in which he was apprehended.

"Only the other day a tramp sent from Otsego begged to be sent to Hudson. He begged so hard that I gave him a ticket to Hudson. The next day he was back again. 'They pulled me as soon as I stepped from the train,' he said. County officers, you see, are always on the lookout for tramps because of the mileage received for bringing them here. Work? No, they wouldn't show any inclination or desire for work if they had to lay in the penitentiary for months. But we compel them to earn their keep, very much to their disgust. Usually I set them to work cane seating chairs."—Albany Journal.

Mrs. Mossman Was Petrified.

In June, 1884, Mrs. Abigail Mossman was interred at the Hazelwood cemetery in Poweshiek county, Ia. Not long since relatives determined to remove the remains to another cemetery. The workmen engaged to perform the job found the coffin filled to overflowing with red colored mineral water. This was drained off, whereupon it was found that the corpse, with the exception of the fingers and toes, was perfectly petrified. The hair was perfectly natural, as was also a bouquet of roses that lay on her breast. After a thorough examination by relatives and friends the coffin was again closed and covered in.—St. Louis Republic.

A Kind Mistress.

It was raining in torrents.

"Julie!" said madam to her maid, "be quick and run across to the milliners and tell her not to forget my hat."

"Can I take Azor out with me, madam?"

"Are you mad, Julie? Can't you see for yourself that the weather is not fit to turn a dog out of doors?"—Evenement.

A PRISON AND PALACE.

Behold the tall and lambent spire
Irradiate with sunset fire,
Those windows smit with twilight beams,
With evening's iridescent gleams;
How they reflect the early night,
Its mingling gold and lazulite,
And how those tall transfigured towers
Bloom 'gainst the night like granite flowers;
How grandly lifts yon burnished dome
A skyey shape of fire and foam!
"What are the buildings, friend?" said I,
"That loom against the eastern sky,
And dashed with many a sunset gleam
Look like the palace of a dream?"

"Them buildings, boss," the man replied—
A sly smile in his features pale—
"You just lookout you keep outside,
Them buildings is the county jail."

Pained at this ending of my dream,
This anticlimax to my theme,
I found a poultice for my pain
In this wise moralizing strain

We all live in a county jail
Whose towering walls we cannot scale,
Though firmly, all in vain, we press
Against its granite stubbornness,
Dull, cold as fate, its walls arise
And shut our vision from the skies.
But when hope's sunlight falls upon
Its thick and heavy walls of stone,
They loom against the coming night,
Transfigured in a mystic light,
And, bathed in gold and amethyst,
The granite grows as soft as mist—
Transformed becomes the culprit's jail,
And from its towers cloud banners fling
Their gorgeous windings to the gale—
It is a palace of a king!

MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to faint. I was also much troubled with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

THOUSANDS

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly believe that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

May 29th, 1892. MRS. ELMIRA HATCH.

SUGAR AND ITS KING.

HOW SPRECKELS OBTAINED HIS MASTERY OF THE MARKET.

Hawaiian Planters Just Dawdled Along Until He Taught Them Better—How It Was Done and How Sugar Is Made—Sitting on Inverted Bottles.

[Copyright, 1893, by American Press Association.]

IT WAS after 1875, when the reciprocity treaty with the United States first went into force, that the Hawaiian Islands attained their great prosperity. Access to the markets of the United States made the sugar planters wealthy. Since we have had free sugar and other countries have been able to send their sugar into our markets, things have not been so bright for the Hawaiian planter. That is partly what brought on the discontent leading to the revolution last month, which resulted in deposing the queen and a petition from the new government to the United States to annex the islands.

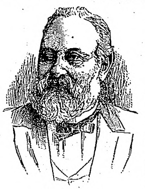
Sugar planting was practiced in the islands on a small scale before the reciprocity treaty with the United States, but it was after that event that it took on the large proportions and improved methods which characterize it today. No small part of the improvement in methods and enlarged scope of the business is due to an American citizen of German birth, of whom the American people have heard a good deal in one way and another. This is Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, who is drawing dividends on millions of sugar stock.

Spreckels' work as a financial artist is drawn with a bold, free hand which produces striking effects. He got his first foothold in the business world by land speculations in California. Having achieved in this way the wherewithal to pursue further operations he got control of the California sugar refinery. This opened up an occupation most congenial to his mind in the shutting off of competition in the refining industry. He paid a rival refinery a comfortable income for many years to stand idle and made it well worth his own while by the increased price he charged for the refined sugar.

He succeeded in cornering the Hawaiian sugar crop year after year and enjoyed a monopoly of the refined sugar supply on the whole Pacific coast. The Hawaiian sugar supply was ample for the demands of the Pacific coast, even with only the most favored spots brought under cultivation. The easy going Hawaiian planters were long content to work these rich lands until Spreckels went into the planting business himself, reclaiming vast areas of what had been considered waste lands.

Previous to that time sugar planting had been confined to areas within reach of existing water courses. The cane requires a great deal of water, and the rainfall is not to be depended on to supply its needs. The resource is irrigation. There is a vast amount of land in the Sandwich Islands which could be made productive by a water supply, either by digging wells or by lengthy conduits. Before Claus Spreckels' time the planters huddled about the mouths of the valleys and along the streams, from which they brought water for short distances in rickety wooden flumes.

Hawaiian sugar planters are the embodiment of hospitality. They are much isolated from one another, and for long periods their only intercourse with the outside world is through the occasional travelers who stop with them for shelter and food. So they welcome all comers. There is in this region a plantation and sugar mill run wholly by Chinamen. It is owned by Afong, the wealthy Chinese merchant in Honolulu, whose son is a graduate of Yale college. The overseer is a Chinaman. The mill hands are Chinamen, and the field hands also. The mill machinery was all made in Honolulu.



CLAUS SPRECKELS.

The cane requires 13 months to mature. After the first crop is taken off, a second and sometimes a third, called the first or second ratoon crop, is raised from the same seed, each time with a diminishing quantity and quality of sugar. Then the cane is good for nothing further but to use as seed in replanting. As this cane is cut in the fields and stripped, it is in most cases pitched into one of the rickety flumes used to carry the water for irrigation and floated down to the mill, which is often run by the same water.

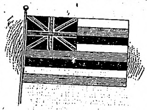
In other cases the cane is carried to the mill in ox carts. It is then run between heavy rollers and the juice pressed out. The juice is run first into clarifying tanks with copper steam pipes in the bottom. Upon being boiled the dirt and foreign substances rise to the surface and are skimmed off. The evaporating pans are very similar, but shallower, and are used to clear the water from the juice. The pure juice is then sucked up into the vacuum pan—a gigantic inclosed tank, from which the air can be exhausted in order to save time in boiling the juice. After being boiled down to a thick, granular substance, it is turned into the centrifugal circular iron jars, which are set to whirling at the rate of 1,800 revolutions a minute and so separate the sparkling sugar crystals from the fluid. The sugar is then dumped, still hot, on a clean floor and from there shoveled into sacks. Then it used to be stowed away until Claus Spreckels came along and offered his price for it.

This was the tranquil and easy going way of doing things which it struck Claus Spreckels 10 years ago could be improved upon to his own advantage. The island of Maui, next north of Hawaii in the group, is made up of two separate clusters of mountain peaks 20 or 30 miles apart and joined together by a low lying strip of land—so low lying that it looks as though Maui had once been two islands, with the sea flowing over this strip. There are several hundred square miles of this lowland, and there are no natural water courses flowing through it.

The planters on Maui had consequently never attempted to plant sugar in it, and had confined themselves to the mouths of the valleys on either side of it. But Spreckels thought it was good land and that water could be brought to it. So he set to work to build an enormous waterway or ditch from the southern cluster of mountains. There were several formidable gulches to be crossed on the way. Through these he laid gigantic iron pipes and proceeded on his way to the plain, while the Hawaiian planters looked on at what seemed to them the scheme of a madman. It took $1,000,000 to finish that ditch, but it was finished.

Then Spreckels proceeded to plant seed cane over this seemingly desert land and to turn his water supply upon it, and it was not long until his faith was justified. Several sugar mills, made with American machinery and on a scale never before attempted on the islands, were erected, turning out in the aggregate several hundred tons a day. Steam plows were introduced and patent devices of various sorts. In 1881 there was a unique railway running from one of these mills to the shipping place, the motive power of which was the trade wind, utilized by sails. Now there are locomotives to pull trains of cars along temporary tracks to various parts of the plantations and bring in the cane.

It had always been the custom in the islands to take the sugar up to Honolulu and reship it from there to San Francisco, owing to the lack of landing facilities on the other islands. But Spreckels built himself wharves and had vessels come to his plantation. This offended the Pacific Mail Steamship company, and their vessels stopped touching at the islands, whereupon Spreckels built steamers and put on a line of his own to run twice a month between Honolulu and San Francisco instead of once a month, as formerly. He lent King Kalakaua money and was made Sir Claus Spreckels and had a voice in all the affairs of the kingdom.



THE HAWAIIAN FLAG.

There are plantations in these islands which yield as high as eight tons of sugar to an acre of cane. Compare this with the yield of Louisiana plantations, which is from 1¼ to 1½ tons of sugar to the acre, and it will be perceived that Spreckels had in his island possessions a formidable instrument with which to rule the world's price of sugar.

Spreckels is a rubicund German of no very great education. He speaks broken English. I remember him presiding over the dinner table in the cabin of a Pacific steamer, sending his champagne around the whole length of all the tables and then, after the meal, leading the way on deck to see who could sit on an inverted champagne bottle on the deck of the rolling steamer. His wife is a hearty looking, kind hearted German woman, and he has several blond children to succeed to his wealth.

Scarcity of Field Labor In Mexico.

The scarcity of field labor is interfering seriously with agriculture in Mexico, and the government has taken hold of the matter with a view of ascertaining to what extent this condition prevails. A circular was recently sent out to each of the municipalities of the republic by the secretary of promotion for the purpose of getting statistics on this important subject. In answer to this more than 300 of the municipalities stated in substance that there were not enough field laborers to meet the present ordinary demand, and that the planters and farmers had to limit the cultivation of their lands to the number of laborers. On most of the large haciendas the planting is done on shares. The proprietor gives the land and the seed, and the laborer his time and work. When the crop is gathered a division is made of the produce.

Proud of Her Wrinkles.

Recently up in central Maine a lady who had lived over 100 years was photographed. She was very much wrinkled, of course, and the artist thought to improve the picture by taking the creases out of the negative, but the old woman protested strongly against the change. She hadn't "lived 100 years for nothing," she sensibly said, and she wanted to be represented "just as she was," so the wrinkles were all put back to please her.

Cotton Growing In Russia Asia.

The Russians believe that cotton growing will rapidly develop in their possessions in central Asia. A cargo of the fleecy staple was recently shipped from Odessa to various German ports. The quality, however, was very inferior.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind in morals, politics, science literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—In short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc, etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

SENATOR GLADER has a scheme to remove the capital of Minnesota to Kandiyohi county. He will be Glader when he makes it win.

BOB DUNN is after Auditor Bierman with a sharp stick alleging that Bierman sold pine lands at $2 that were worth $5 per thousand, and that, too, before the aforesaid lands were appraised. Bob calls for an investigation and will follow up the clue until he gets at the whole truth in the matter.

IT is now almost practically settled that the World's Fair will be closed on Sundays, the house fair committee having refused to report favorably even a bill for the opening of the fair on Sunday afternoons. The church brought so much influence to bear upon the congressmen who had hopes of re-election that they feared the consequences of opposing her wishes.

THE supreme court of Kansas has decided that the republican house of representatives of the Kansas legislature is legally organized, and that the populist house is not, and—therefore the bills passed by the populist house are illegal. The populist members—like the prodigal son—have returned to the capitol and been forgiven by the republicans.

THE financial statement of the county shows that Commissioner DeMers received for his services last year $791.90. Commissioner Kirsch comes next, with $655.00. Rhinehart $336.34, Johnson $115.50, Erwin $68.00, Stortroen $48.00. The last named gentleman only served a short time on the board, and his term was finished by Erwin. Commissioner Johnson only attended about half the meetings of the board.

JERRY RUSK says that the present high price for hogs is likely to keep up for two years owing to the fact that the farmers have been tempted by the high prices to sell their breeders, and also to the fact that the meat inspection carried on by the agricultural department opened the markets of Europe, and packers thus got rid of their surplus, and this foreign market is likely to prevent another surplus of pork in this country for several years, even should the hog-raising industry be crowded to the limit.

THE drainage committee met in St. Paul last to consider action upon the bill now pending in the legislature and adjourned until Tuesday Feb. 28 when they were to appear before the committee having the bill in charge to present their claims. If they can show that the needs are imperative and that the people unite in demanding it the chances for the passage of the bill are excellent. Meantime our members ought to be deluged with letters and petitions from their constituents asking for this important measure.

OUR legislature from this district seem confident that the bill for an appropriation for drainage will pass. While this is true they ought to be backed up by letters from their constituents asking for this appropriation, also by petitions in the same line and every paper in the district affected should constantly urge, through their columns the immense benefits to be derived. While our legislators can do much they can not do it alone and their efforts would be far more effective if they could show that their constituents are solidly behind them in this matter.

JOHN DAY SMITH's bill to prevent docking of horses shows how easily our legislators can conscientiously waste the people's time. While the bill has its origin in a laudable desire to subserve the cause of humanity it is only one of the kind that opens the door to hundreds—nay thousands of kindred subjects, that to cure by act of legislature would keep our solons busy from one end of the session to the other to the exclusion of more important subjects. After a long and heated debate the bill was passed in the senate—but will no doubt be killed in the House.

CLEVELAND's cabinet as now completed is as follows:

Walter Q. Gresham of Illinois, secretary of state.

John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, secretary of the treasury.

Wilson S. Bissell of Buffalo, postmaster general.

Daniel S. Lamont of New York, secretary of war.

Sterling Morton of Nebraska, secretary of agriculture.

Hoke Smith of Georgia, secretary of the interior.

Hilliary A. Herbert, of Alabama, secretary of the navy.

Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, attorney general.

THE following from the Grand Forks Herald echoes the sentiments of everybody except the republican floppers:

We hope it will not be as a life long democrat said last evening: "There will be so many new recruits at the crib that they will get the corn and we old standbys will have to put up with the husks." That wouldn't be right. The old guard, the men who stood almost alone for years, now that the democratic party is in power, should have the honors, not the men who have been holding office for years as republicans. Of course The Herald, a republican paper, has no advice to give, but we do hope the old corporal's guard who have been fighting, making the best fight they could these dozen years, will have the choicest places at the feast of patronage.

THE JOURNAL gives place this week to a communication in which the writer pays his compliments to Editor McKenzie, who is accused of trying to create a feeling between the Americans and Scandinavians. And the JOURNAL wants to remark also that this practice should be discontinued. The existence of factions here has been the curse of the city for years, but with the advent of new people last summer, this spirit has been dying out, and it would be better for the city if the Times would try to lessen instead of trying to create factions. There is nothing to be gained by it unless, as our correspondent says, it be for the purpose of helping the democrats retain control of the city government. The club referred to is not wholly composed of poor, unlettered Scandinavians, as the Times alleges, but numbers among its members not only many of the best educated Scandinavians, but also men of other nationalities. The object of the club is said to be in the interests of good government, and the JOURNAL is requested to invite all who believe in an economical administration, all who beleive in a progressive administration in accordance with the true American spirit, to join the club, without regard to nationality, and aid in attaining their object. A public meeting will be called for the evening of March 10th for the furtherance of their object.

A BILL has been introduced in the house by Representative Dunn defining what shall constitute a newspaper for the publication of legal notices. It provides that in addition to the requirements already prescribed by law, the paper must have an established office or known place of business, equipped with the necessary materials and skilled workmen for preparing and printing the same, in whole or in part, in the village, city or county where it is dated, and be generally circulated where the office is located. No paper is to be considered a newspaper of general circulation until it shall have been published at least one year in the county and shall consist of not less than four pages of five columns or more to each page each column not less than 17¾ inches long, or its equivalent in space and the publisher must issue and deliver at each regular issue not less than 350 complete copies to paying subscribers. Publications that are practically duplicates or are made up wholly of patents or plates and patents and advertisements, are not to be recognized as newspapers of general circulation. The publisher desiring to publish legal notices or the state laws must file an affidavit with the county auditor describing the paper in which he desires to publish the laws or notices, giving the circulation and other facts required in the bill.

Should this measure become a law—and it probably will—it will only be an act of justice to the publisher who owns and operates a printing outfit in the state, as against the man who hasn't a dollar invested in printing material but gets his paper printed elsewhere. It is on the same principle that a merchant should be protected against the peddler who has no money invested in the city and bears none of its burdens.

THE QUEEN OF THE VALLEY.

The following from the St. Vincent New Era shows how the people of Kittson county feel toward Crookston, and the proposed Polk county fair, and the New Era, on behalf of the people of St. Vincent, offers to help the fair by sending an exhibit. This is the proper spirit, and there is no doubt that Marshall and Norman counties will also join in making the first fair of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association a success. Here is the kind words expressed by the New Era:

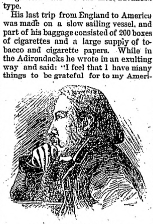
By reading next column something can be learned of the enterprise of the Crookston Agricultural society, and of the sort of campaign Secretary Wyatt proposes for this year. A great deal depends upon the secretary in such societies and the Crookston people, in Secretary Wyatt, have got the right man in the right place. We expect to help him out. Crookston should be the capital of the Red River Valley counties. It rests with herself whether she shall be Queen of the valley, or merely the county town of Polk county. Secretary Brackett, of the Minneapolis exposition, proposes to offer three sweepstakes of $500, $300 and $200, for the best county or agricultural society exhibit. Three years ago Kittson county took third prize on county exhibits and this year we shall, undoubtedly take first prize at Minneapolis. Kittson county will send down one or two carloads of exhibits and will beat the state. If Secretary Wyatt shall date his fair so that our county exhibits could be shown on the return trip, we promise him that Kittson county display shall be a circus in itself. Hallock Fair can be taken in two days afterward, and the triumphal procession will close up, in a blaze of glory, at St. Vincent. St. Vincent shows in the opinion of independent judges, beat the North Dakota state fair, and some of last year's exhibits are secured for the World's Fair, at Chicago. Mr. Charles Clow is now in Minneapolis, confering with Secretary Brackett and Capt. Donaldson, manager of President Hill's great farm, will visit him next week. Hallock will be expected to join in, an invitation will be extended to Bro. Clark's parishioners to send in garden truck and wild animals. What has Secretary Wyatt and the Crookston people to say to this program?

NOVELIST STEVENSON'S WORK.

He Has Mapped Out a Considerable Programme For a Dying Man.

The painful news that Robert Louis Stevenson is very low with lung disease in his Samoan home, and that he will probably not live to finish the work on which he is now engaged, has caused many who knew him to exclaim: "Ah! Another victim of the cigarette habit!" There is some room for doubt, as the novelist's lungs have been weak from boyhood. But he certainly has been a "cigarette fiend" of the most advanced type.

His last trip from England to America was made on a slow sailing vessel, and part of his baggage consisted of 200 boxes of cigarettes and a large supply of tobacco and cigarette papers. While in the Adirondacks he wrote in an exulting way and said: "I feel that I have many things to be grateful for to my American residence. Not only has this brisk and invigorating air almost completely restored my health, but I have practically overcome the cigarette habit. I find myself now reduced to five boxes of cigarettes a day."



ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The habits of a man who could exult over a "reform" like that must have been wearing indeed. One who knew him well says: "He practically smoked all day and was rarely without a cigarette in his mouth. When he was, he felt miserable. Often when he waked during the night while he lived in New York he would light a match and smoke a half dozen cigarettes in bed while wooing renewed sleep. The result was that when he left for Samoa one of his lungs was beyond medical remedy." Conceding that he was doomed to die of consumption at any rate, it is still true that he has shortened his life greatly.

Mr. Stevenson's new volume of Polynesian tales will, The Athenæum says, be published about Easter, probably under the general title of "Island Nights Entertainment," and will consist of three stories, "The Beach of Falesa," "The Bottle Imp" and "The Isle of Voices." "The Adventures of David Balfour" will be produced in book form in October, and in the meantime Mr. Stevenson reports himself well advanced with another Scottish novel, of which the scene is laid near Edinburgh about the close of the last century, and one of the principal personages is the famous, or infamous, Lord Braxfield.

Amelie Rives' Newsboy.

"There is a young man in Mobile," said Colonel Robert McEachin of Winchester, Va., "who has cause to remember Amelie Rives twice a year. When the now distinguished lady was a little girl and lived in that city, she became fondly attached to a newsboy who cried out his papers every morning in the neighborhood in which she lived. She met him one day and a friendship sprang up between them that has lasted to the present time. After the boy's stock of papers were sold in the morning he would call for the pretty little blue eyed miss, and they would take long strolls down Froscute road, plucking the orange blossoms and the magnolia blooms. They soon got to be familiar figures on Government street, as they would walk along that busy thoroughfare with the young girl's head garlanded with wreaths of beautiful flowers and the little boy's arms filled with vines and evergreens. Then Miss Rives moved far away into Virginia, but she never forgot her newsboy friend, for it was her custom almost daily to write him. The boy met with a misfortune some years ago which crippled him for life. He is poor, but his purse is twice a year replenished by a postoffice order from Mrs. Chanler. One of these arrives in Mobile on his birthday, which is in June, and the other on Christmas day."—St. Louis Republic.

CABINET COMPLETE

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND FILLS THE REMAINING CHAIRS.

Congressman Herbert of Alabama Chosen for the Navy Portfolio, and Richard Olney of Massachusetts, for Attorney General.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Feb. 23.—Mr. Cleveland announces that he has completed his cabinet by the selection of Richard Olney of Boston, for attorney general, and Hilary A. Herbert of Alabama, for secretary of the navy. The complete cabinet is as follows:

Walter Q. Gresham of Indiana, secretary of state.

John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, secretary of the treasury.

Daniel S. Lamont of New York, secretary of war.

Hilary A. Herbert of Alabama, secretary of the navy.

Hoke Smith of Georgia, secretary of the interior.

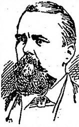
J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska, secretary of agriculture.

Wilson S. Bissell of New York, postmaster general.

Richard Olney of Massachusetts, attorney general.

The Last Appointments.

The selection of Hilary A. Herbert for the navy has been expected for several days, but Mr. Olney's name had not been mentioned in the new cabinet and his selection is a surprise to everybody, particularly to the friends of George A. Jenks. Hilary A. Herbert has been in congress for many years and has acted as chairman of the naval committee of the house. He is thoroughly familiar with the work that has been done toward placing the United States navy on a proper footing, and his knowledge of the present condition of vessels under construction and which have been plannd make him a most desirable man for the head of the department.



HILARY A. HERBERT.

Richard Olney is one of the leading practitioners of the Massachusetts bar. He has not held any political position or been prominent in political matters, but is known as one of the leading lawyers and substantial business men of Boston. His selection gives New England a representative in the cabinet, and that of Herbert gives the South three positions.

LEAVES THE CABINET.

Secretary of State Foster Will Sail for Paris Saturday.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—Secretary J. W. Foster today retired from President Harrison's cabinet and from the administration of our foreign affairs, for the purpose of assuming the active directorship and management of the case of the United States before the international tribunal which is to assemble in Paris March 23 for the arbitration of questions in controversy between the United States and Great Britain in regard to sealing industries in Behring sea. Secretary Foster will sail Saturday on the American steamship New York for Southampton, proceeding thence to Paris.

MINNESOTA VETERANS.

Annual G. A. R. Encampment Opens in St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 22.—The Minnesota department of the Grand Army of the Republic opened at 10 a. m. at Market hall, and at the same hour the Woman's Relief corps met in the First Baptist church.

The opening session of the G. A. R. gathering was called to order by Department Commander L. M. Lange of Marshall, and prayer was offered by the department chaplain. At 11 o'clock, when the roll was called, there were 500 delegates in attendance, representing 182 posts.

In the afternoon the veterans attended the exercises at the capitol given by the Sons of the American Revolution and in the evening a reception was given by the Woman's Relief Corps to the members of the G. A. R. at Acker Post hall.

John Day Smith Elected Commander.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 24.—There was a full attendance at the second day's session of the state G. A. R. encampment. Grand Commander Weissert, Senator John J. Ingalls and Governer Nelson were among those who addressed the veterans. All were enthusiastically received.

The thanks of the department were tendered to the Minnesotans residing in Washington for their hospitality to the Minnesota comrades at the Washington encampment.

Officers Elected.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of John Day Smith for department commander and R. S. Van Sant, senior vice commaneer.

The junior vice department commander is George N. La Vaque of Duluth.

Head quarters will be established in Minneapolis and the adjutant general will be a Minneapolis man. The department quartermaster general will be E. N. Leavens of Faribault, the present incumbent.

AN EXTRA SESSION.

The Senate to Convene March 4 to Act on Appointments.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The president has issued a proclamation convening the senate in extra session on March 4. The session of the senate is called for the purpose of acting on Cleveland's appointments.

Over Wertz' Head.

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 25.—The legislature has passed the race bill over Governor Wertz' head.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, Feb. 21.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—In the house the hours were mostly employed in filibustering against the car coupler bill. Some time was devoted to the consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill, the debate on which was confined to the special service provision, but the car coupler bill was the one which met with determined opposition. Mr. Richardson led the opposing parties and by parliamentary maneuvers prevented any action being taken on it.

The house was in session all night, adjourning at 6:30 a. m., after a private agreement that Representative Wise should be recognized on Monday to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The senate spent most of the day discussing the site for a new government printing office and for the new custom house at New York. Mr. Carlisle's successor, William Lindsay of Kentucky, was sworn in and took his seat.

Wednesday, Feb. 22.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The senate, in honor of the day listened to the reading of George Washington's farewell address by Mr. Manderson, and then proceed to other business.

There was a little time wasted in finishing up the sundry civil appropriation bill, after which the conference report on the army appropriation bill was agreed upon, and the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was brought before the senate. Before any progress was made on this bill the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. When the doors were reopened the senate adjourned.

The first of what it is said will be a daily series of conflicts between the appropriation bills and the anti-options bill until the latter is acted on, was the feature of today's session of the house. Mr. Hatch had grown tired of the delay to which the anti-options bill is being subjected, and when it was moved to take up the postoffice appropriation bill he antagonized the motion with the measure of which he is champion. Being defeated he made the same fight also unsuccessfully, when the postoffice bill was passed, and the Indian appropriation bill was called up.

Thursday, Feb. 23.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—In the senate within less than an hour, two of the general appropriation bills—the diplomatic and consular and the military academy—were read, considered and passed, and then the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which appropriates about $22,000,000, was taken up and considered until the time of adjournment. There was no discussion at all on either of the first two bills.

The house gave an ovation to Mr. Herbert, the newly appointed secretary of the navy. Then the Indian appropriation bill was taken up, notwithstanding the opposition of Mr Hatch of Missouri, who desired to call up the anti-option bill. Without disposing of the bill the house adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 24.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The debate in the senate today was not of an exciting or enlivening character. It was over the question printed in the legislative appropriation bill, whether the Utah commission, which has been in existence for the last 10 years, should be abolished, as proposed by the house, or continued in office, as recommended by the senate committee on appropriations. The question was decided in favor of continuing the commission. No further progress was made on the bill before adjournment.

In the house the anti-option bill met with another defeat. It failed to prevent the Indian appropriation bill from being taken up, and that measure was further considered, but without final disposition. Before the house took up the Indian bill there was a brief flurry over the sundry civil appropriation bill, which Mr. Bland declared must be considered in committee of the whole, and was so referred.

Saturday, Feb. 25.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—In the house today the sundry civil appropriation bill was taken up. There are in all 207 amendments to the bill. Mr. Holman desired that all except the Sherman amendment, upon which there was to be debate, be non-concurred in. Mr. Bland objected, unless it was agreed that that amendment should be, after debate, non-concurred in. This suggestion raised the antagonism of Mr. Cockran, and no agreement was arrived at. The silver men then resorted to filibustering tactics, which were effectual, and after a speech by Mr. Bland the bill went over without action.

After four hours in discussing various amendments (of little importance) to the legislative appropriation bill, the senate passed the bill today, insisted on its amendments, and requested a conference with the house on the disagreeing votes. After paying tribute to the memory of Representative Spinola of New York, the senate adjourned.

Monday, Feb. 27.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The pension appropriation bill was passed by the senate today without any amendments. It appropriates for army and navy pensions (including widows and minor children) $165,000,000, and about $1,500,000 in addition for fees of examining surgeons, clerk hire at pension agencies and some small items. The conference report on the military academy bill was agreed to.

A conference was ordered on the civil appropriation bill, and Messrs. Allison, Hale and Gorman were appointed conferees on the part of the senate. Public business was then suspended in order that fitting tributes might be paid to the memory of the late Senator Kenna.

In the house the Indian appropriation bill was called up and passed without objection. Mr. Peel's motion having been agreed to a discussion of the Sherman bond amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill was indulged in with some warmth, but finally all the senate amendments to the measure were non-concurred in and the bill was sent to conference. The car coupler bill then came up and after a great deal of filibustering the senate amendments to the measure were concurred in.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Feb. 21.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 21.—The house was busy all day and transacted considerable business.

Mr. Horton's bill for a monument to the Minnesota troops at the battlefield of Chickamauga passed by an almost unanimous vote, only five members voting against it.

Mr. Kremer's bill authorizing counties to return liquor licenses paid twice, Mr. Wilson's bill reducing the number of voters necessary for the incorporation of a village to 175, and Mr. Cotton's bill for the punishment of persons meddling with steam boilers were passed, as was also Mr. Fleming's bill relating to practice of veterinary surgery.

At the beginning of the afternoon session the inheritance tax bill came up as a special order and was referred to the judiciary committee.

The balance of the afternoon session was spent discussing Mr. Horton's bill to amend the military code and place the national guard on the same footing as the United States army. The bill was finally recommended for indefinite postponement by a vote of 49 to 41. The house then adjourned till Thursday.

The senate did very little work. Senator Canestorp's bill calling for the election of railroad and warehouse commissioners created a great deal of debate and was finally made a special order for Thursday, at 2 o'clock. The senate adjourned till 10 o'clock Thursday.

Thursday, Feb. 23.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 23.—The most important bill introduced in the house for the day was Mr. Dunn's, defining what shall constitute a newspaper for the publication of legal notices in this state. No paper is to be considered a newspaper of general circulation until it shall have been published at least one year in the county and shall consist of not less than four pages, of five columns or more to each page, each column not less than 17¾ inches long, or its equivalent in space, and the publisher must issue and deliver at each regular issue not less than 350 complete copies to paying subscribers. Publications that are practically duplicates or are made up wholly of patents or plates and patents and advertisements shall not be recognized as newspapers of general circulation.

A communication was received from Governor Nelson urging the passage of a law authorizing the sentencing of a certain class of prisoners to the state prison instead of the state reformatory, and providing for a system of parole. The measure is proposed to relieve the reformatory of its present overcrowded condition.

Senator Ingalls addressed a joint gathering of the house and senate after recess. No bills of importance were passed.

In the senate the Markham railroad tax bill was made a special order for Wednesday at 2:30 o'clock.

Senator Sanborn's constitutional amendment proposing to exempt parsonages from taxation passed.

The bill abolishing the railway and warehouse commission was debated and indefinitely postponed. The bill to elect the railway commission by popular vote was then taken up, but was not disposed of when the senate adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 24.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 17.—The senate met at 10 a. m. A number of petitions were presented and Senator Leavitt then rose to a question of privilege and denied statements made in a St. Paul paper regarding the coal trust investigation. The senate spent most of the day considering bills on the calendar, passing 21. Among them were John Day Smith's bill prohibiting docking of horses' tails, Phillips' bill to bring employes and officers of cities under the garnishment law, O'Brien's bill to make insurance companies responsible for the full face of the policy in case of total loss, Dedon's bill fixing the legal weight of farm products, and Dean's bill increasing the penalty for the publication and distribution of obscene literature.

In addition to the presentation of the usual number of petitions and remonstrances the house reconsidered the vote by which Anderson's bill requiring trains to stop at county seats was passed, and relegated the measure to general orders. The bill relating to savings banks, lost yesterday, was also reconsidered and placed on general orders. The house also voted down the resolution to visit the world's fair on the day set by the senate—at the close of the session—and will either go earlier or not at all. Mr. Walsh's personal liability bill was discussed and will be further considered on Monday afternoon.

Saturday, Feb. 25.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 25.—The house did most of its work in committee of the whole, when it recommended for passage Mr. Sullivan's bill prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors, and also Mr. Ives' bill making indemnity insurance companies parties to actions for damages for personal injuries. Strong opposition was manifested to the passage of both measures. When the calendar was reached Mr. A. B. Kelly's bill authorizing villages to maintain public libraries was passed under suspension of rules. Mr. Cotton's bill providing for an additional judge in the Eleventh district, and Mr. Nelson's bill, H. F. 541, to legalize village ordinances for the construction of works, were also passed under suspension of the rules. Mr. Underlake's bill to change the method of doing work on public highways and bridges in townships passed by a vote of 65 to 21.

In the senate the Davis bill striking out certain conditions of the standard fire insurance policy was defeated. John Day Smith's bill to declare certain marriages void and incestuous was twice defeated, the first time by a tie vote —20 to 20—and upon a reconsideration of the vote by 26 to 19. Several unimportant bills were passed.

Monday, Feb. 27.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 27.—The house met at 10 a. m. with Speaker Pro Tem Turrell in the chair. In committee of the whole it was decided to recommend for indefinite postponement H. F. 22, and the proposed amendments to it, by Mr. Walsh of Ramsey. The existing law fixes the limit of liability for death at $5,000. Mr. Walsh in his original bill proposed to increase the limit to $12,000, but acting on the suggestion of friends, he introduced amendments wiping out the limit entirely. There was a hot debate on the amendments and the bill was finally recommended to be indefinitely postponed. H. F. 262, a bill favored by labor unions, relating to labels, trade marks, etc., was recommended to pass.

The senate met at 3 o'clock with a slim attendance and went through the regular order of business.

Senator Glader introduced a bill for the appointment of a commission to locate and plat a new city on the state capitol lands in Kandiyohi county.

The bill for an extra judge for the Duluth district was passed to general orders.

TEACHERS IN QUARANTINE.

Serious Epidemic of Measles Prevailing at Ishpeming.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Feb. 28.—A dangerous form of measles is epidemic here and the physicians are not complying with the law requiring notification of the health officer. The latter has found it necessary, in order to check the rapid spread of the disease, to take the matter vigorously in hand without waiting for the physicians. He has quarantined five public school teachers and many other persons who were found to have been exposed. No deaths have occurred yet, but several cases are in a critical state.

Still No Result.

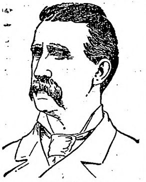
OLYMPIA, Wash., Feb. 28.—The 83d ballot for United States senater was taken during the afternoon without result.

JOHN MACKEY SHOT

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF THE NOTED MILLIONAIRE.

While Passing Through an Alley He Receives a Bullet in the Back—The Would-Be Murderer Then Endeavors to Take His Own Life.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 24.—John W. Mackey, the famous bonanza mining man and financier, was shot through the back shortly after noon by a man giving the name of W. H. Rippey, and narrowly escaped death. Rippey, after firing one shot at Mackey, shot himself through the left breast and will die. Owing to the great excitement it was some time after the shooting occurred that the shooter's name was ascertained. So far Mackey's wound is not considered serious, and there is no danger of a fatal termination. The shooting occurred in the paved court back of the Lick House, which runs from Sutter to Post street, between Montgomery and Kearney. A white haired man was noticed walking around Sutter street,



JOHN W MACKEY.

Acting Very Nervously

during the early portion of the morning, thro g his hand back toward his hip pocket. It is the custom of John W. Mackey to come about noon time every day to the jewelry store at the corner of Sutter street and Lick alley to compare the time of day, and he is always very prompt. As Mackey reached the end of the alley nearest Sutter street and a few feet away from where the old man was standing, the latter pulled out his revolver and fired one shot. The bullet struck Mackey in the middle of the back. After firing the shot the would-be murderer then supplemented his crime by turning the pistol on himself and firing a shot

Into His Own Body.

The self-inflicted wound was serious, but as long as he could walk he followed Mackey up, trying to fire at him again, but he was so weak that he could not pull the trigger. An immense crowd at once assembled and the police soon arrived. A patrol wagon was called and the wounded man was hurried to the receiving hospital. There the doctors found that the suicidal bullet had penetrated above the heart and had passed through the back, from under the skin of which it was extracted. At the time of the operation the man was unconscious and pulseless, and the wound was pronounced fatal. There was little on the dying man's person to indicate who he was. He had in his pocket a letter addressed to a morning paper in which the writer stated he was 73 years of age. It was signed W. C. Rippey, and there was also upon him an envelope bearing the name of Dr. L. L. Lincoln. On the back of the envelope there were the words: "The end is not yet." Upon a sheet of paper under the heading were the words: "Paid $150,000 for one sapphire to place on the forehead of his wife—a sufficient amount to have saved at least 500 of his victims from suicidal graves. Just think of it. Inscribe it upon his tomb."

"Food for Reflection,"

When Mr. Mackey was asked if he knew the man who had shot him he said: "I never knew of a man named Rippey. I had a good look at the old man who shot me, and I am certain I do not know him. I cannot give any reason for the assault."

At a late hour Mr. Mackey's condition is unchanged and his physicians think he will recover. Rippey is still alive but unconscious.

GHOULS IN HOCK.

Grave Robbers Arrested at Woodlawn Cemetery, Des Moines.

DES MOINES, Feb. 24.—Five men, two of whom are Dr. John Overton and John W. Schaeffer, of the United States signal service here, were arrested for body snatching. They were taken in the act of carrying a corpse from the graveyard. Police officers at the point of revolvers made the five men get into one hack with the corpse, and all were then taken to the police headquarters, a squad of police walking behind the hack with cocked revolvers. All but two have since been let out on bail.

Refuses to Resign.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 27.—Ralph Davis, speaker of the Tennessee house of representatives, who has been debarred by the action of Judge Esten of the Shelby county circuit court, announces that he will not resign his position as speaker, but will fight the case to the end. He has appealed the case to the supreme court. The legislature meets again on March 8, and unless Davis reconsiders his determination not to resign impeachment proceedings will be commenced.

Closed Their Factories.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—Several mill owners in Heywood have closed their factories so as to assist in bringing about the desired reduction of wages. Thousands of looms are idle.

MARKS A NEW EPOCH.

The United States Flag Now Floats Over an Ocean Greyhound.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—The ceremony of raising the American flag on the New York (formerly the City of New York), which was arranged for noon, was marred by the inclement weather, but, according to the determination of the company, there was to be no postponement of the exercises till another day. The beginning of the ceremonies was made late by the delay of the presidential party. The first section of the party, without the president, arrived in Jersey City at 1:35.

The President's Train

arrived at 2 o'clock and the party proceeded to the boat. The presidential salute was fired by the City of Chicago and a few moments later a similar salute was given in honor of Secretary Tracy.

The president proceeded to raise the American flag and then declared the New York in commission. The whole affair was very informal.

The Chicago saluted the flag as it was run up and an answering salute was fired from the navy yard. A banquet was served on board the New York after the ceremonies.

CANAL TOLLS REVOKED.

The Canadian Government Revokes Its Present System of Rebates.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—As the result of correspondence between Secretary of State Foster and Sir Julian Pauncefote, a new "order in council" has been issued by the Canadian government regulating the tolls of the Dominion canals for the season of 1893. The effect of this new order is to abolish the rebate on tolls and the regulation against trans-shipped goods, thereby removing all the discrimination of which the government of the United States has so long complained. In accordance with this diplomatic arrangement the president has issued a proclamation revoking the tolls levied on Canadian vessels and cargoes in the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

ALLAN MANVEL DEAD.

The Noted Railroad Man Passes Away at San Diego.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Feb. 24.—Allan Manvel, president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, died at the Hotel Del Coronado at an early hour of the morning. Mr. Manvel arrived here with his wife about three weeks ago. He had been in poor health for some time, and his death was not entirely unexpected. It is believed that his principal malady was Bright's disease. During the day Mr. Manvel complained of severe pains in his back and abdominal regions. He retired early, and shortly afterwards the hotel physician was summoned. At midnight it was apparent that the end was near. The doctor informed the wife of the dying man that he could not survive until morning. Mrs. Manvel carried herself with composure, and did everything possible to console her husband in his last moments. Mr. Manvel died peacefully and without apparent pain, at about 4 o'clock a. m.

RUFUS HATCH DEAD.

The Well Known Wall Street Broker Passes Away.

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—Rufus Hatch died at 3.25 p. m. The well known broker has been almost in extremis for several days, and, though his death had been expected, the news came with something of a shock to "the street," which had known him so well. He died at his home in Spuyten Duyvil.

WILL RECEIVE CONTRIBUTIONS

McKinley's Trustees Will No Longer Oppose the Wishes of His Friends.

CHICAGO, Feb. 27.—Trustee H. H. Koolsaat has practically decided to stop opposing the wishes of Major McKinley's friends, and to receive whatever funds they may decide to send toward paying the $9,500,000 worth of liability of the unfortunate and deceived governor of Ohio. The $1 contribution scheme met with almost uproarious approval in the major's own state. The trustees received dollars by mail, and at first being opposed to the plan he sent the first lot of contributions back, whereupon the pertinent question was asked Mr. Kohlsaat for authority to reject the token of esteem. Further objection will probably be waived.

Nebraska Bribery Investigation.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 27.—The senatorial bribery investigating committee held a session during the day and examined one witness, who testified that he had knowledge of money used, but would not answer questions put to him and the committee put in the balance of the time discussing the advisability of placing him under arrest, but reached no conclusion.

Thief River Falls Press:—One of the happiest events of the season in this city was the wedding of Mr. Goodwin A. Leppert and Miss Lena Olson which occurred at the home of the bride yesterday afternoon at four o'clock in the presence of a host of relatives and friends. The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Aug. Rudesen who tied the knot in a very impressive manner. After the solemn part of the program the young people received congratulations of the company who soon after took their departure. In the evening a reception was given the newly wedded pair which was attended by nearly a hundred friends and associates. The evening was spent in dancing and social intercourse until about midnight when it was announced that supper was ready which invitation everyone accepted. The table was luxuriantly spread and its contents were enjoyably discussed, after which the merry gathering dispersed. The bride is the daughter of Mr. John Olson, one of the pioneers of this city, and is a favorite among her acquaintances.

The groom is a popular young man and is doing a profitable business in the dray and transfer line. They will at once begin housekeeping and their many friends including the the Press offer congratulations hearty and sincere.

Warren Sheaf:—We believe the present legislature will sit down right hard on the proposed new capitol scheme. In the first place a new building is not needed yet, and in the second place the state cannot afford to build at the present time. If the twin city politicians must have a new capitol let them build it themselves.

True, but under the plans proposed it would take ten years at least to build by which time the needs for a good building would be sufficiently large. All we object to in the plan is limiting it to within three-fourths of a mile of the present site. This cuts out all of the cheapest property from a chance to compete and this is wrong. We wish to see a plan adopted that will admit of bids from the Midway district.

This is Meant for You.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rhuem and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly meant to include you.

BROUGHT TO BOOK.

"I was in Paris at the time, and while there I never saw an English paper. It has been a source of regret to me ever since that I was unable to pay a last tribute of affection and regard to one to whom I owe so much."

The words themselves showed no lack of good feeling, yet there was something in the way they were spoken that grated on Mr. Orde's ears. Before more could be said the door opened and in came Charles Lumsden. It was his last day in London, and he had come to bid Mr. Orde goodby. He started as his eyes fell on Crake.

"Hello, Garry! you here? Where on earth have you sprung from?" he exclaimed.

It was Orde's turn to start when the word "Garry" fell from Charles Lumsden's lips. For the next minute or more he was as one in a dream, heeding nothing of what the two were saying to each other.

Again he seemed to hear the last words of his poor murdered friend, "Oh, Harry, Harry, this from you!" Next moment, however, he asked himself whether the name which had thus reached his ears might not have been Garry and not Harry, as he had not unnaturally assumed it to be, in which case there could be but little doubt that the assassin of Edward Lumsden was at that moment sitting within half a dozen yards of him. It was a possibility which sent a chill shudder through him from crown to toe. He sat for several seconds, staring dumbly at Crake, and it was as well perhaps that just then all the latter's attention was given to Charles Lumsden. Presently he rose to take his leave.

"Then I may look to hear from you, Mr. Orde, at the earliest possible moment," he said as he turned to the merchant.

"As soon as ever the estate has been wound up, Mr. Crake, and probate granted, you may rely on my communicating with you."

Hardly was the door shut behind him before Orde said to Mr. Lumsden:

"Why did you just now address that man by the name of Garry?"

"The explanation is very simple. When he and I and my brother were lads together, each of us was known to the others by a nickname. Mine was Dixie, Crake's was Garry; what poor Ted's was I have now forgotten."

Thereupon the subject dropped, and presently Mr. Charles bade the other goodby and went his way. The following day Orde made it his business to call on Inspector Fountain.

Despite his professional phlegm it was evident that that official was considerably impressed by the further information now brought him, and as a matter of course the inevitable notebook was again brought into requisition.

"I will at once cause certain inquiries to be made respecting Mr. Eustace Crake," he said, "and will let you know the result with as little delay as may be."

Five days later it was Fountain's turn to seek Mr. Orde. Crake, it appeared, was a member of a low gang of betting men who made a point of attending every race meeting within a radius of fifty miles around London. As a rule his evenings were devoted to billiards. Further, Fountain had satisfied himself that during the five days which elapsed between the murder of Mr. Lumsden and his funeral Crake was not in Paris, as he had averred, but on each of the days in question had been seen at one or another of his usual haunts. So far, however, no information had been obtainable as to where he was or how he spent his time between the hours of twelve and three on the ninth of June, and in the inspector's opinion it seemed doubtful whether there ever would be.

A week later he called on Mr. Orde again, but without having anything fresh to communicate. He went so far, however, as to hint in pretty plain terms that there was little doubt in his mind as to the identity of the murderer.

"You may rely on it, sir," he said significantly, "that 'Garry,' and not 'Harry,' was the name you heard through the telephone; only I am quite sure that on such a piece of evidence, unless it was backed up by something much more positive, no magistrate would take upon himself to issue a warrant."

A despondent man was Inspector Fountain when he went his way that afternoon.

Some time before this a reward of five hundred pounds had been offered by the widow for the detection of her husband's murderer; but days merged into weeks and no one came forward to claim it.

A month passed without bringing the least change in the situation. Lumsden's business affairs had taken a longer time to wind up than his executor had anticipated, and although Crake had written to him, pressing for an early payment of his legacy, Mr. Orde was not yet in a position to write him a check for the amount. It was while affairs were in this position that one forenoon the merchant was waited upon by a person who sent in his name as "Mr. William Parkinson." It was a name he had no knowledge of, and when the bearer of it was shown into the office he proved to be an utter stranger.

"I have but just landed from New York," he began, "or I should have called on you before. I am here in response to an advertisement requesting that the person who paid a sum in bank notes to the late Mr. Edward Lumsden on the ninth of June last would make himself known. Sir, on the morning of the day in question I paid Mr. Lumsden, in liquidation of a debt which had nothing to do with the ordinary routine of his business, ten Bank of England notes of five pounds each. An hour later I had started for Liverpool on my way to the States, so that, as it happened, I knew nothing whatever of the sad fate which overtook Mr. Lumsden so soon after my interview with him till some days subsequent to my arrival in New York."

"May I ask, Mr. Parkinson, whether you have any record of the numbers of the notes paid by you to Mr. Lumsden?"

"No record whatever, I am sorry to say."

"Is it not possible," suggested Mr. Orde, "that the person out of whose hands they passed into yours may have kept a list of their numbers?"

Mr. Parkinson shook his head.

"Those notes, Mr. Orde, came into my possession in rather a singular way. They were found at the bottom of an old tea caddy which had belonged to my late Aunt Deborah and were handed over to me as her heir-at-law. How long they had been in her keeping and whence she had obtained them was known to herself alone."

The information imparted by Mr. Parkinson, while elucidatory of one hitherto obscure feature, failed to advance the case a single step beyond the point at which it stood already. In all probability the stolen notes had been put into circulation weeks ago. But whether they had or not, there seemed no likelihood of any link being forthcoming by the aid of which it would be possible to trace them. Such was the opinion of Inspector Fountain, and such was Mr. Orde's opinion, but fate willed otherwise.

CHAPTER III.

She was pacing the room slowly.

Two months had gone by since Marcus Gray had intimated to Mary Lumsden his intention of seeking an interview with her father on the morrow, and our two young people had seen nothing of each other in the interim.

The tragic circumstances connected with Mr. Lumsden's death had put an end to all lovemaking for the time being, and now the period Gray had allotted to himself for the English portion of his tour was nearly at an end. A week hence, if he carried out the arrangement agreed upon with his father before leaving home, he would be due in Paris. But his love for Mary had in nowise cooled for lack of fuel to feed itself on, and he was determined on no account to quit London till he should come to an understanding of some sort with her mother. In this contingency he decided to take his Uncle Orde into his confidence and claim the benefit of his advice in the affair. It was the wisest conclusion he could have come to.

Mr. Orde listened with lifted eyebrows to his nephew's recital. It was all news to him. Nothing had he seen or suspected.

"I congratulate you, my dear boy, on having made such an excellent choice," he said heartily when Gray had come to an end. "Mary Lumsden is a girl in a thousand. But tell me exactly what it is that you wish me to do."

Then Gray explained that, before seeking an interview with Mrs. Lumsden, he was desirous of arranging for a meeting between Mary and himself. He had not seen her since the night before her father's death, and he was wishful to ascertain whether she still looked to him to carry out the promise he had then made her, and, in short, to satisfy himself—not that for one moment he doubted her constancy—that she remained as unchanged to him as he did to her.

Mr. Orde readily undertook his nephew's commission—a week never passed without finding him at Oakdene once, if not oftener—with the result that Mary sent word she would meet him next afternoon at three o'clock, on the road leading from Oakdene in the direction of Tooting Common.

Well, they met, and Mary proved to her lover's satisfaction that she was in nowise changed. "I don't know how my mother will receive you," remarked the girl. "There has been a great change in her since poor papa's death. It is a dreadful thing to say, but there are times when I fear for her reason."

"I must appeal to my uncle for the second time. If any one can induce Mrs. Lumsden to grant me an interview, he can."

"Mrs. Lumsden has consented to see you at two o'clock tomorrow," said Mr. Orde to his nephew three days later, "although what kind of a reception she will accord to your suit it would be futile to prophesy. I must confess that in some of her moods I altogether fail to understand her."

Marcus Gray lacked nothing of that easy self possession which seems to be the birthright of so many of his countrymen, but it must be confessed that when, on being ushered into the drawing room at Oakdene, he found himself confronted by a tall, white faced woman, with hollow cheeks and hair which a few short weeks had abundantly streaked with gray, and with a strange steely glitter in her deep set eyes he felt for once that his tongue refused to do his bidding.

"Pray be seated, Mr. Gray," said the widow. "I have consented to see you in deference to the wish of your uncle, who was my dead husband's dearest friend, as he is now mine. He tells me that you have conceived an affection for my daughter, and that you wish me to sanction an engagement between yourself and her."

"That is the dearest wish of my life, Mrs. Lumsden."

"And do you consider, Mr. Gray, that this is a fit time to dream of lovemaking and giving in marriage, while the blood of my poor murdered husband cries out from the grave for vengeance on his assassin? If you think so, I certainly do not."

Gray knew not what to reply. Never in his life had he felt so nonplussed.

"Yes, the murderer is still at large," she resumed, speaking with slow, quiet intensity; "as innocent seeming as you or I, mixing with his fellow men, no one knowing or suspecting him for the vile wretch that he is. Every day that passes lessens the chances of his detection. Already at Scotland Yard my husband's death is looked upon as merely adding another item to the long catalogue of mysterious crimes which have never been brought home to their perpetrators. The task has been given up as hopeless, other interests have come to the front, the reward remains unclaimed and soon the name of Edward Lumsden will have faded from the minds of all, save a few who were nearest and dearest to him."

She had risen, and was pacing the room slowly, with something of the air of a caged animal, her clinched hands pressed tightly to her bosom, as if to crush down the surging emotions at work below. Gray had no words at command.

For a little while the silence remained unbroken; then Mrs. Lumsden stopped abruptly in her walk, and fixing her large, dark eyes, luminous with a somber fire, full on the American, she said:

"You ask me, Mr. Gray, to give you my daughter's hand. My answer to you is, first do something to prove yourself worthy of the gift. You are here in London, idling away your time, with no object beyond the amusement of the hour, and yet the assassin of the father of her you would make your wife is still untraced, his crime goes still unpunished and you have never so much as lifted your little finger in the effort to track him down. Oh, that I were a man instead of the weak, helpless creature I am. Oh, that I had a son who"——

But at this juncture the door was opened.

"Dr. Hynton, ma'am," said the parlor maid.

Gray rose as the doctor entered. The widow gave him her hand, and with a smile that had in it much of her old sweetness, said:

"You will excuse me now, will you not, Mr. Gray? You must come and see me again a few days hence. It may be that I have talked a little at random today, but if you could only partially realize what I have gone through, you would know how to make allowance for me."

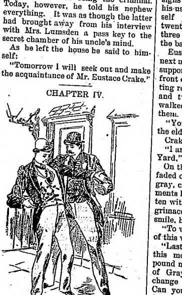
Gray bent and touched her fingers with his lips and withdrew. He had scarcely been ten minutes in the house and had not spoken more than a dozen words.

Without professing to be actuated by any other motive than one of simple curiosity, when Gray related to his uncle the result of the interview he drew him on to talk about the crime with a frankness he had never exhibited before. Mr. Orde was by nature a man of caution and reserve, and not even to his nephew had he heretofore confided the particulars in connection with Eustace Crake, nor how his suspicions, unsupported though they were by any direct evidence, pointed unequivocally to him as being the criminal. Today, however, he told his nephew everything. It was as though the latter had brought away from his interview with Mrs. Lumsden a pass key to the secret chamber of his uncle's mind.

As he left the house he said to himself:

"Tomorrow I will seek out and make the acquaintance of Mr. Eustace Crake."

CHAPTER IV.



"Yesh, but you won't see me tomorrow."

It was three weeks later. Marcus Gray had been as good as his word. Not only had he made Crake's acquaintance in the interim, but by this time the two, to employ an expressive locution, had become as "thick as thieves." He had sought out Crake at the billiard room of the Flagon and Cask, the tavern which Inspector Fountain's report to Mr. Orde had mentioned as being his favorite house of call. Gray's role had been that of a simple young American over in London for a holiday, with no lack of money to fling away, and not caring much how he got rid of it so long as he saw plenty of "life" in return. It was a part he played to perfection, and Crake clung to him like a leech from the moment he found that the supply of sovereigns to be squeezed out of him in one way or another had no apparent limit. They got into the way of meeting regularly about two o'clock in the afternoon, when Crake, who was really a crack player, would for the next two hours give lessons to his new found friend in the art and mystery of billiards, always of course for a consideration. Later on they would dine and spend the evening together, equally of course at the American's expense.

For the present there was only one thing that Gray stuck out against. He would have nothing to do with the betting on the turf, but Crake by no means despaired of being able by and by to overcome a prejudice so puritanical and absurd and one at the same time so inimical to his own interests.

On the night to which we have now come Gray and Crake left the Flagon and Cask together, as they had done several times before. It was half past twelve and closing time, and no sooner had they crossed the threshold than the door was shut and bolted behind them. They had been playing billiards together since eight o'clock, Crake of course giving his opponent a certain number of points, notwithstanding which the American had lost every game but two. Tonight, too, he had insisted on backing his play for half a sovereign a game, and as by some mischance—it was a thing which had never happened before—he had fallen short of ready money, the result had been that by the time they left off play Crake held his I O U for three pounds fifteen borrowed cash, as to which he was not at all uneasy, feeling sure he would be recouped on the morrow. It was evident that Gray, who was ordinarily most abstemious, had been drinking more than was good for him. He staggered slightly as he came out into the cool night air and clutched at the lapel of his companion's coat.

Crake drew the other's arm within his own, and as they strolled up the street together he said:

"I suppose I had better hail the first hansom we come across?"

To which Gray, who had left his uncle's house some time before and was now in lodgings at the west end, replied:

"Right you are, dear boy; only I haven't got a blessed sou to pay the cabby with." Here he gave a lurch which carried Crake and himself half across the pavement.

"My dear fellow, as if my purse wasn't at your service!" exclaimed Crake reproachfully.

A second or two later Gray came to an unsteady halt.

"Crake," he said with tipsy gravity, "I've made a dashed idjit of m'shelf t'night."

"Can't see it, my boy. What is it that you have done?"

"I've given you I O U for the money I owe you, while all the time I've a twenty pound note in my pocketbook."

"That's no good tonight, old man. There's no place open where you could get it changed. But what does it matter? You can redeem your bit of paper when I see you tomorrow."

"Yesh, but you won't see me tomorrow," answered Gray with another lurch and a hiccough. "Going to Paris by morning train. Telegram. Forgot all about it till now. Mush go. Be back in a fortnight or three weeks. If you can't change note, I O U mush stand over till I come back."

For a full minute or more Crake stood in silent thought. The chances were, he argued, that if the American once got as far as Paris nothing more would be seen of him in London, in which case his I O U would be so much waste paper. The sum was not a large one, but Crake was by no means minded to lose it.

He set his teeth hard for a moment or two and then he said:

"If you like to come with me as far as my lodgings, I think I can perhaps manage to change your note."

Half an hour later Marcus Gray was on his way home in a hansom. All signs of inebriety had vanished. He was his usual self—keen, alert and quietly self possessed. In exchange for his twenty pound note Crake had given him three five pound notes, his I O U and the balance in cash.

Eustace Crake was seated at breakfast next morning, with a sporting newspaper supported against the hot water jug in front of him when the door of his sitting room was unceremoniously opened and two men, entire strangers to him, walked in and shut the door behind them.

"You are Mr. Eustace Crake?" said the elder of the two interrogatively.

Crake nodded.

"I am Inspector Fountain, of Scotland Yard," added the officer.

On the instant every vestige of color faded out of Crake's face, leaving it of a gray, corpselike, pallor. For a few moments he was like a man suddenly smitten with the loss of speech; then, with a grimace which he evidently meant for a smile, he said:

"To what may I attribute the honor of this visit, Mr. Inspector?"

"Last night, or rather at an early hour this morning, you changed a twenty pound note for a gentleman of the name of Gray, giving him as part of the change three notes of five pounds each. Can you oblige me, Mr. Crake, by informing me when and from whom the notes in question came into your possession?"

Crake bit his lip hard for a moment or two, as if the pain might help him to keep down the nervous trembling that was beginning to overmaster him. Then he said:

"Really, you ask me more than I am in a position to tell you. In my profession, which is that of a betting man, such a number of notes pass through my hands in the course of a month that it is out of the question for me to keep any record of their numbers or to remember from whom I may have received this one or the other."

"I can quite understand that," replied Fountain. "May I ask whether you are acquainted with any one of the name of Parkinson—Mr. William Parkinson?"

Crake considered awhile and then shook his head.

"I have no recollection of having been introduced to or done business with any one of that name. But what is the object of all this catechising, if I may be allowed a question in my turn?"

"That you will presently learn. In the first place, I may inform you that it was a Mr. Parkinson who paid the late Mr. Lumsden a certain sum in bank notes on the morning of that gentleman's death, which notes were undoubtedly stolen by the person or persons who were guilty of the murder."

"Ah!" was all that Crake could find to say for a moment. Then, after moistening his lips with his tongue, he added: "You will pardon me if I fail to see in what way that fact connects itself with the notes paid over by me to Mr. Gray. My cousin, Mr. Charles Lumsden, in a talk I had with him a little while ago, distinctly assured me that the number of the missing notes were not known. Now, if that be the case how"— His eyes finished the question.

"It is quite true, Mr. Crake, that the number of the stolen notes are not known," said the inspector gravely "but that does not imply that there may not be other means of identification."

"Not one of the notes paid by me to Gray bore an indorsement of any kind. On that point I can speak most positively," was Crake's reply.

"In any case I must ask you to accompany me to Scotland Yard," said Fountain. "I have a cab waiting at the corner of the street."

On their arrival at Scotland Yard Inspector Fountain ushered his charge into a room where two officials in uniform were busy writing, with one of whom he held a brief colloquy in a low voice. In another room, although Crake did not know it, Marcus Gray and Mr. Parkinson were in waiting, in case any further evidence beyond that which they had already tendered should be required.

Their colloquy at an end, one of the officials produced from a drawer the three notes given by Crake to Gray a few hours before and handed them to Fountain, who proceeded to straighten them out on the smooth surface of the desk. They were old and crumpled and frayed at the edges: they had seen much service and were grimy with the contact of many fingers. As they lay there, face downward, no sign of an indorsement or memorandum of any so was visible on the back of any of them Fountain had beckoned to Crake, who with gray, set face and straining eyes, was now peering over his shoulder, and it was not till the former with his forefinger had drawn attention to what even when closely examined looked like nothing more than a few meaningless dots and scratches in faded ink on the soiled paper that Crake, sharpsighted as he was, as much as noticed their existence. Then, producing a small magnifying glass and offering it to the other Fountain said:

"And now, sir, if you will look through this you will see that on each of the notes is plainly to be read in phonographic characters—that is to say, in shorthand—the indorsement, 'William Parkinson,' together with the date of June the eighth, the very day, in point of fact, before the murder of Mr. Lumsden."

Scarcely had the last words left the officer's lips before Crake fell backward in a swoon. A careful search of his lodgings brought to light two more notes bearing a similar phonographic indorsement. The remaining five had probably been passed away by him in the ordinary course of his business. He was committed for trial in due course, but before that event took place he contrived to commit suicide in his cell. In a paper which he left behind him occurred the following passage:

"It is true that I killed my cousin, but I asseverate most solemnly that the act was wholly unpremeditated and was the result of a moment of ungovernable passion."

Some three months later one of the quietest of quiet weddings was celebrated in a certain suburban church. To the reader who has seen fit thus far to follow the fortunes of the personages concerned in this narrative it would be superfluous to mention the name of either the bride or bridegroom.—All the Year Round.

MOUNTAIN MISSIONS.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "POOR WHITES" OF THE HILL COUNTRY.

A Southern Clergyman Refutes the Charge That Ignorance and Squalor Are Prevalent to Any Remarkable Degree In the Mountain Districts.

Sectionalists who desire to create for themselves a field of operations and an income in a charming and healthful southern climate not infrequently write very touching articles for the northern press on the deplorable condition of the "mountain whites" of the south and the need of "mission work" among them. Such persons, in descriptions of life among the mountains of western North Carolina and east Tennessee, "pile on the agony" in a marvelous manner. Sometimes they do it with an utter disregard for the truth. They represent the exception to be the rule, and picture scenes and conditions common enough in parts of the north and west perhaps, large cities as well as country places, but very rare among the people of the Appalachian region of the south. One would think from their accounts that the southern mountains were swarming with cave dwellers. The aim seems to be to perpetuate the ideas of that class of philanthropists who find a peculiar pleasure in contemplating poverty, ignorance and degradation in the south since the civil war.

Not long since The Sun noticed an appeal of this sort for aid to "mission work for mountain whites," showing that it was in effect a libel upon the people it professed to describe. Any person familiar with the Appalachian region of the south would see at a glance how absurd the whole thing was. The Christian Union for Dec. 31, 1892, contains a letter from Rev. D. Atkins, a Methodist minister of Hendersonville, N. C., which completely demolishes the "mountain white" myth. Mr. Atkins will be conceded to know what he is writing about. He was born and reared in the alleged God forsaken region of poverty, ignorance, vice and degradation. He entered college there, entered the ministry there and spent 17 years there as minister and teacher.

"As a Methodist minister," he says, "I have gone into the most out of the way places and mingled freely with all sorts of people in 20 counties of North Carolina and Virginia and in nearly all the worst parts of east Tennessee. I have visited these people at their homes, have eaten with them, slept in their houses and seen them in every condition." Yet Mr. Atkins has not once beheld the slum scenes Mrs. Paddock described in a recent number of The Christian Union. "Your correspondent," he says, "must have found some secluded spot I never saw, for in all my travels I never saw the things she writes of, and it seems strange that I should not even have heard of such things in all these years. There is poverty here and ignorance, too, but neither is in that prevalent form you would suppose from the article of Mrs. Paddock. You might live here an age and never hear of such savage and weird funeral customs as Professor Bemis, another correspondent writing from the south, told your readers about."

The situation is not such as was described by The Union's correspondents. Putting it in a nutshell, Mr. Atkins says of Mrs. Paddock's picture: "She has presented the very worst possible case that could be found in the remotest part and made it a sample of all the 2,000,000 here, so that if any one should receive an impression from such writing he would suppose no other kind of people could be found here."

As a matter of fact, the "mountain whites" are not a distinct class. Their ancestors, says Mr. Atkins, were not outlaws, but pioneers from the coast country. They generally own their farms and make a comfortable living. To say they hunt for a living is absurd. There is little wealth and not as much luxury as might be, but the people live decently. There are some log houses, three-fourths of which have windows. None are plastered with mud, as alleged, or without wooden floors. But few have only one room. Generally the houses are quite comfortable. All have good open fire places. Fuel is abundant and costs nothing, so that the correspondent's story of children "covering their limbs with warm ashes to keep from freezing" is specially absurd. The people, Mr. Atkins affirms, are already religious and moral. They observe Sunday and attend Sunday school. There is scarcely a district where there is not a school for at least three months in the year. Few persons are unable to read and write, and such cases are so rare as to excite surprise among the neighbors.

As respects the girls who were described as overworked and vicious, Mr. Atkins says not one in a hundred would know herself by that description. "The common virtues," he says—"chastity, honesty, truthfulness, etc.—are rather more prevalent than in other sections I have seen. The girls are healthy, strong and full of spirit. They marry at a good age, make excellent wives and mothers, and do much less hard work than their sisters of the north and west," and Mr. Atkins spent four years in the west. They do not work in the field. "It is by no means," says the writer, "the custom of the country. Home life is as pure as it is anywhere I have been." In a word, the "mountain white," with his abysmal degradation, is a myth and needs no "mission."—Baltimore Sun.

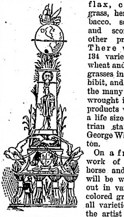
A NOVEL AGRICULTURAL EXHIBIT.

Missouri Will Display at Chicago a Pagoda Made of Grain.



THE PAGODA.

Missouri, as becomes the great central state of the Mississippi valley, is making great exertions to have a complete exhibit at the Chicago World's fair, and so much has already been done that the state's section in the agricultural building is a maze of designs in corn, wheat, flax, cotton, grass, hemp, tobacco, sorghum and scores of other products. There will be 134 varieties of wheat and 100 of grasses in the exhibit, and among the many figures wrought in farm products will be a life size equestrian statue of George Washington.

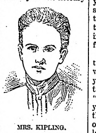
On a framework of wire horse and rider will be wrought out in variously colored grains of all varieties, and the artist promises a work so perfect that the features of the hero will be clearly recognizable. This will stand on a pedestal 12 feet long and 8 feet high and terraced so as to afford space for exhibiting grains of all kinds in sample jars. In the center of the east side of the 3,240 square feet assigned to Missouri in that building is a large stairway, and this, which would ordinarily be accounted a great hindrance, has been utilized in a beautiful manner.

A corn palace is so constructed as to conceal the entire framework of the stairway, and in this are corn in the ear and shelled corn, cornstalks, cobs, silks and tassels. In this corn palace will be the office of the exhibit's custodian, where visitors will be entertained and printed matter distributed to such as desire it. Missouri has in this building the largest area granted to any state in the Union, situated near the eastern entrance and to be traversed by all who go by that entrance to the forestry, live stock and agricultural exhibits. The space is surrounded by a handsome railing and is laid off with aisles convenient for visitors.

Another beautiful piece of work will be an agricultural pagoda, the base composed of a wooden framework arranged in circular form and surmounted by a triangular structure. In the sides of this triangle will be worked in grains and grasses the Missouri coat of arms, the seal of the United States and a Columbian medallion. From this will arise a shaft of grain, which in turn is to be surmounted by a silken globe with a map of the world, on which the state of Missouri is conspicuously exaggerated. The pagoda will contain a miniature lake, in which will be the native fish of Missouri and around it a diversified border of her native flowers.

MRS. RUDYARD KIPLING.

Something About the American Wife of the Anglo-Indian Romancer.



MRS. KIPLING.

Rudyard Kipling is a most peculiar man and has had a most peculiar career. He blazed out suddenly in the literary world as the Anglo-Indian infant phenomenon. He then tried, and very suddenly, to do some literary work in the staid old English style and produced results which were, English critics said, neither fish nor flesh nor passable red herring. He came to the United States and abused everything, and wound up by marrying an American lady and settling in Vermont.

His marriage was as romantic as any part of his career, and the most creditable thing about him is that he is devoted to his wife. In his first wild flight he fell in with Wolcott Balestier, the writer whose premature death saddened so many, and who from the start exercised an extraordinary influence over him. If Mr. Balestier disapproved of anything he wrote, Mr. Kipling suppressed it at once without other reasons, and they wrote in partnership with a harmony unusual among literary men.

Mr. Balestier was in London on some business connected with publishing when he died, and it was in London that Mr. Kipling met, wooed and won Miss Carolyn Balestier, sister of the author. They came to America and went soon to India, but left there when the cholera broke out, and are now settled permanently, they both say, on the old Balestier country place near Brattleboro, Vt.

Mrs. Kipling is a little under medium height, slender and petite, and has dark brown eyes and brown hair. She is a young woman of fine mind, but makes no pretense of literary attainments. Her admiration for her husband's genius is intense. They have a daughter but a few months old.

Mrs. Kipling's father was an eminent lawyer in New York and then in Chicago, went to Brattleboro for his health and died there, but the location was so attractive that the family remained. It is perhaps the most romantic spot in the Connecticut valley, and Mr. Kipling is building a residence which will be 80 feet long and 16 wide, and every room will reach across it, so at least says one of the builders. He calls it "Crow's Nest."

How the Pope Hears the News.

Some late gossip about the pope says that he takes a keen interest in mundane affairs. In the evening his favorite secretary, Mgr. Angeli, goes to his bedroom with the day's newspapers and reads aloud, sometimes late into the night, while the pope sits on the bed enveloped in woolen wraps and follows the reader attentively.

The Memory of Villains.

Although the world is said to know nothing of its greatest men, it has always had an unaccountable and it would seem invincible propensity for retaining remembrance of the very worst specimens of humanity, and it is really questionable whether the laurel of the conqueror and the bays of the poet are, in the long run, quite so certain of enduring fame as the halters which have strangled the most notorious of scoundrels. The French have not forgotten those old time villains Cartouche and Mandrin, while in England Dick Turpin and his apocryphal ride to York have not passed from the public memory.

The exploits of Jack Sheppard as a burglar and prison breaker turn up from time to time in the public prints, and it is an almost scandalous fact that quite modern fashionable dressmakers have devised a costume named after Claude Duval, a rascal in whose career there is not one single picturesque or romantic feature beyond the dubious story that he once refrained from stealing the jewels of a lady whose coach he had stopped on condition that she would alight from her equipage and dance a coranto with him. The varlet was a discharged footman of the Duchess of Portsmouth, and, taking the highway, was in due course of time caught, convicted and hanged at Tyburn. Yet somehow or another it seems next to the impossible to bury the memory of these and similar malefactors in oblivion.—Boston Herald.

Left In One Car In One Month.

A brown paper parcel of goodly proportions was turned in at the lost article bureau of the Wagner Palace Car company a few days ago, the contents of which give a fair idea of the kind of articles that the travelers on the rail leave behind them in their forgetfulness. The bundle aforesaid contained the collection of lost articles made by the conductor of one sleeping car for a month. The variety of articles thus accumulated was amusing as well as interesting. When the bundle was untied on the broad table in the lost article bureau, the first thing that rolled out was a silver handled shaving brush. There was no accompanying razor, the owner probably having remembered to put that useful instrument back in his satchel. A full set of false teeth nestled cosily in a cluster of false hair and a small copy of the Episcopal prayer book was jammed against a neat leather covered pocket flask. Of toothbrushes and hairbrushes and combs there were half a dozen each.

Other things in this odd collection included a baby's milk bottle, a pair of ladies' slippers, one patent leather shoe once worn by a man, a woolen undershirt, manicure set in Russia morocco case, two or three empty portmonnaies, and, most singular of all, a dainty little bonnet so attractive in form and color that it is a wonder how any woman could have forgotten it.—New York Times.

Hunting For an Old Man.

In the biography of Dr. Norman MacLeod there is an amusing account given of a visit he paid to one of the Western islands to see a man who was celebrated in the district for his great age. The doctor found an old man (we can only quote from memory) sitting on a bench outside the house and gave him the usual greeting, "I heard that you were a very wonderful old man, and I've come to see you." "It'll be my father you want to see," said the old man of the bench. So the visitor went inside, and there, sitting over the peats, was a very old man indeed, bent and doubled up, but still, for all that, with all his wits about him.

"Good day to you," said the good doctor. "I have heard about you, a very wonderful old man, and I've come to see you." Then he, too, declined the imputation and pointed with his stick to the "ben" of the house. "It'll be my faither you want to see," said this old man of the fireside. So there in the "ben" the original Simon Pure was discovered at last, a very, very ancient old man indeed, as may well be imagined.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A Scene In a Maine Town.

One of Caribou's popular young business men was in Buckfield recently with his bride, and when about leaving town, just before the train started, the bride discovered that she had left one of her wraps behind. A messenger was dispatched in haste to bring the garment, and the conductor very kindly held the train. The messenger arrived, and the conductor, impatiently waiting for the couple to enter the car, saw them start on a mission among their many relatives, and then remarked that unless his train started at once he would be obliged to claim a kiss from the bride. The happy young married married man heard the remark and hustled his bride on the car, while his relatives and many friends shook their handkerchiefs and hands as the door closed and the train pulled out from the station.—Aroostook (Me.) Republican.

Crow Quills Make the Best Pens.

A quill penmaker says that no pen will do as fine writing as the crow quill. It requires the assistance of a microscope to make a proper pen out of such a quill, but when made it is of wonderful delicacy. The microscopic writing told of in books of literary curiosities was all done with a crow quill. The steel pens of the present have very fine points, but somehow a finer point can be given to a quill than has ever been put on a steel pen, and for delicacy nothing can equal it.—New York Tribune.

An Instinctive Choice.

Uncle (to little Moses, aged 8)—Moses, as a reward for your diligence at school I will buy you a new book. What kind would you like?

Moses—Well, if I may choose, get me a savings bank book.—Exchange.

Ole Bjorgo passed through the city last Thursday with two carloads of fat cattle for the St. Paul market.

W. H. Averill and Sam Sutor came down from Fosston last Thursday to inhale a little of the metropolitan air.

O. H. Lucken returned on Saturday morning from St. Paul where he went to attend the State Encampment G. A. R.

Joe Smith, T. A. Dunlava and V. D. Carruth are the only pilgrims for Washington from Polk County, that we have heard definitely.

The Duluth papers last week stated that K. D. Chase had been suddenly called to Faribault owing to the severe illness of his wife.

H. F. Brown has rented the rooms over the Merchants bank, formerly occupied by the Red River Dalen, and will use them as a cigar factory.

The Red River Dalen outfit has been removed to the M. R. Brown building, three doors north of the Merchants National bank, on Main street.

Major Mix returned from St. Paul on Saturday morning. He has been visiting in the Twin cities for a fortnight and was a delegate to the State Encampment G. A. R.

Engineer Tom Hunt was pulling the train that was stalled in the snow last week on the Fosston branch. He said the boys had a jolly time eating crackers and cheese and waiting for relief.

Rev. Battey was prevented from meeting his appointment at Stephen last Sunday, owing to the extreme illness of his wife, but expects to be there on the coming Sabbath if no similar event occurs to prevent.

Attorney Wm. Watts went down to Fergus Falls last week returning on Saturday morning on the Northern Pacific road. This was his first visit to Fergus and the impressions he received were very favorable.

A. C. Schmidt: "I do not know where the Times man got his information about that insurance business. I am perfectly sure that I got all I was entitled to and am perfectly satisfied with the deal and I wish you to say that they had no authority from me to make the assertion that they did.

The Literary Northwest, published at St. Paul by D. D. Merrill & Co., is fast taking rank as one of the leading magazines of the country though only in its second year. It is a magazine that is worthy a place at every fireside in the Northwest, not only because it is a home production but also because it is an excellent magazine. Every family should have it.

S. L. Collins is fixing up the roof to his stables to withstand the pressure of the snow. Collins says it's no joke.

M. R. Brown left for Iowa last week where he went to purchase a carload of work horses. Look out for his announcement later.

In the plan for re-apportionment now being considered Polk County gets one senator and three representatives—but the bill has not passed yet.

Teams are beginning to arrive from Bagley's camp this week. It is expected that the work will all be done and the camp broke up for the season by the last of this week or first of next.

Our streets presented an unusually lively appearance on Saturday, being the first day in several weeks that the farmers could get to town handily. They were here in force on Saturday, however.

Engineer Fred Chapin, with his wife and baby are expected in the city this evening on a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hunt. Fred has a passenger run between Devils Lake and Minot.

Henry Steege: "Everything looks favorable for a big wheat crop next season. I never yet saw a wheat failure in this country after such deep snows as we have this winter. I am looking for the biggest crop we ever saw for this is the deepest snow we ever saw in Polk county."

While driving upon the foundry yard with a load one day last week, one of Deb. Lytle's dray horses was badly cut by a cylinder that was partly buried in the snow. The animal bled so copiously that Deb. got alarmed and took him over to Dr. M. Leguee who dressed the wound and put it in shape for recovery. At last accounts the horse was doing nicely.

Senator Burkhardt was suffering from a severe cold last week and was obliged to go home. The Senator intends to engage in brickmaking next spring and has engaged Adolph Bruner of this city to superintend the yards. He has found a bed of clay suitable to the manufacture of pottery and will probably add that industry in the near future.

Monday and Tuesday were extremely busy days at the treasurer's office, caused by the rush of dilatory personal tax-payers to get in before the 1st of March—the day when the ten per cent. penalty attaches. The prompt business man—he who had attended to the matter in the proper season, was not lost in the shuffle because he had attended to this duty when it should be done and did not wait until the very last minute.

Through the courtesy of our former fellow-townsman, W. H. Box, the JOURNAL is in receipt of the January issue of the Puget Sound Lumberman, published at Tacoma in the interest of the lumber trade in Washington. It is a paper that would be creditable to a much older city than Tacoma and shows that the lumber business is a very important industry to the new state and annually increasing. Many of those whom we knew in the early days at Crookston are there engaged in lumbering and from what we see in the Lumberman we should judge that they ought to be doing well.

The grocery firm of Barnes & Slocum assigned on Saturday to J. P. Foote. This firm started in business on Second street several years ago, buying out W. E. Hartshorn, and later on moved into the McKinnon block where they dissolved, Mr. Barnes succeeding to the business and Mr. Slocum opening out for himself on Broadway, continuing thus about a year when they again went into partnership. Last summer they bought out Geo. Vine's meat market and added that line. They have done a large business and made many friends who unite in the hope that they may come out all right yet.

In adjusting the loss on the Box hotel property the agent preferred to fix it up again so a new shingle roof has been put on the old part and the work of fixing up the balance is going on.

P. J. Russel went over to Grand Forks last Saturday evening to attend the senatorial banquet at the Hotel Dakotah, held in honor of the election of Roach to the United States senate.

Mrs. R. H. Battey suffered a severe attack of neuralgia of the heart last week and her case was at one time extremely critical. We are pleased however to note that her condition is very much improved this week.

Chief Gohyea returned on Tuesday morning from the twin cities. The train encountered a big snow storm a few miles out of Minneapolis which so interfered with its progress as to delay it five hours. It reached this city at one o'clock.

Judge F. Ives returned on Sunday morning from a visit to the southern part of the state and will open the March term of court on Monday. Notice has been given to the petit jurors not to appear before Wednesday morning as it will require two days for preliminary work and the Judge don't believe in having the county pay for services it does not get.

While a comrade of Col. Cobham Post was en route for home on Tuesday, he overtook a man who was lying in the bottom of his sleigh dead drunk and his team marching at will. In the army, if a soldier found a sentry sleeping on his post it was his duty to arrest him and old habits being strong within him the comrade at once took command of the craft, drove back to town with the victim of alcohol and surrendered him to the police who put him in the ice box to keep until he was sufficiently sober to be able to drive home.

Ever since the government issued the new Columbian half-dollar, and it has been on the market for from $1 to $2 we have been trying to nail enough of the coin of the realm to purchase one of the aforesaid Columbian half-dollars. Failing in that laudable effort we have been longing for the appearance of a Vanderbilt or some other railway magnate who should present us with one of those little souvenirs. We haven't seen him yet but on Tuesday morning engineer Jack Bunnell came within range of our vision and made us a present of one of 'em, and now we are happy.

The adjutant general's report at the encampment last week showed that there are very many old soldiers in Minnesota, who are not members of the G. A. R. Considering the many advantages to be derived from the organization for old soldiers it is singular that any old soldier should neglect to join, and calls up the question as to whether our organized posts are doing their full duty by these old soldiers. The officers of every post should do their best to enlist all who are eligible and each member of a post who knows of some one eligible to membership should do his best to enlist him. Every old soldier should belong to the Grand Army.

Will Walker is at work fixing up the old Box hotel. The adjuster sent over to fix up the matter failed to offer a satisfactory settlement and finally Dr. Thomas insisted on a board of arbitration. This was conceded and the board made an award within two dollars of the figures the doctor had offered to accept The building will be put in thorough repair and Fred Reyer has rented it for a hotel for five years. Next spring the doctor intends to put in some extensive improvements. Had not the adjuster insisted upon fixing up the building, the old part would have been torn down next spring, the other part moved away, and a fine brick building put up.

Mothers' Recommendation.

We are acquainted with many mothers in Centerville who would not be without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house for a good many times its cost, and are recommending it every day. The Columbia club rooms will be opened this evening.

Ed. George returned on Saturday morning from a flying visit to St. Paul.

Sheriff Grundysen went to St. Paul last week returning on Saturday morning.

The voters of Fisher will elect their village officers for the ensuing year, on the 14th inst.

Thos. R. Johnstone, of Fisher, attended the meeting of the board of directors of the N. M. A. and D. association.

The McLean-Prescott dramatic company passed through the city in a private coach on the N. P. road from Fargo to Winnipeg on Saturday morning. They played to a full house in Grand Forks on Saturday evening.

The ladies of Hauges Minde church will hold a festival with supper Saturday evening, March 4th. The proceeds will go to a church organ. Rev. B. B. Haugan, from Fergus Falls, will give a lecture to the young people during the evening. Singing rendered by an excellent chorus, traveling with Rev. Haugan.

The question of the Chicago excursion came before the senate last week and the invitation was accepted provided that the trip be made after the adjournment of the legislature. This view did not meet the approval of the farmers in the house who say that it will then be so late in the spring that they will have to go home to attend to spring's work. They favor an immediate trip or none.

Senator John J. Ingalls addressed the members of the legislature Thursday of last week in the house. While the Senator was defeated last fall he don't seem to be cast down—evidently expecting a new lease of life later on. Donnelly made a few remarks, in which he said that the people of Kansas had made a great error when they defeated Ingalls—and yet it was the work of the populists of whom Donnelly is the head on front.

Geo. Lipscombe has rented a farm in the town of Excel, four miles from Thief River Falls, and went up with his wife this week. George has a very excellent idea of where the money will be next fall and in addition to putting in 150 acres of wheat he will have 100 acres or so in oats about half as much in barley and from 10 to 12 acres of potatoes. He intends also to have from 50 to 75 fat hogs for next fall's market and if he don't come back to the city a millionaire next fall he will come as near it as a farmer ever gets in one season. He intends to purchase several good cows for summer dairying and intends to make the cows come pretty near furnishing running expenses during the summer. The JOURNAL wishes him abundant success and sees no reason why he should not achieve it if he carries out his ideas to the letter.

Died.

At his residence in this city on Friday, Feb. 25th at 6 p. m., of consumption, Andy H. Locken, aged 28 years. Mr. Locken was born in Sundalen, Norway, May 16th, 1865, and came to America in early youth. A number of years since he came to this city when he engaged in the mercantile business with his brothers J. H. and A. Locken, later he formed a co-partnership with Mr. Solberg under the firm name of Locken & Solberg. Ill-health caused him to withdraw from active business and for nearly a year he has been awaiting the summons to come up higher. Mr. Locken was married a few years since and leaves a wife and child to mourn the loss of a kind husband and an indulgent father. He was a member of the police force at one time, discharging its onerous duties promptly and well. Mr. Locken was a member of the Lutheran church at which place the funeral obsequies occurred on Tuesday conducted by its pastor, Rev. C. Saugstad. His remains were laid to rest in the town of Roome followed by a large concourse of friends and relatives. Always genial, lively and cheerful, Mr. Locken had made many friends to whom this sad news will come with feelings akin to a personal bereavement and in whose memory he will long survive.

To Whom it may Concern.

Notice is hereby given that the partnership heretofore existing between John N. Priester and Wm. H. Norrie under the firm name of Priester & Co., is dissolved by mutual consent; further, all bills due the firm to date of Feb. 11th, 1893, inclusive, will be collected by John N. Priester and all legal liabilities of the firm are assumed by W. H. Norrie with all accounts due after Feb. 11th, 1893, and the business will be carried on by W. H. Norrie.

A good-sized audience attended the minstrel performance given by home talent at the opera house Tuesday night. Sixteen numbers were rendered, and the boys acquitted themselves creditably considering the small amount of practice which they had.

Allen Manvel, president of the Atchison & Santa Fe railroad company, died in California on Friday morning of Bright's disease after a brief illness. Mr. Manvel was formerly connected with the St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba railroad (now the Great Northern) and was one of the hardest workers on the line. He had worked himself up to the responsible position of vice-president on the road, resigning it to accept the presidency of the Atchison, which road he took when it was in hardtimes and he placed it upon a paying basis in a very short time. He understood thoroughly every detail of his work and was considered one of the brightest railroad men in the northwest.

Allen Manvel was born in Alexander, Genesee county, N. Y., Sept. 26th, 1837. He entered the railway service March, 1859, in the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and was successively clerk in the purchasing agent's office, paymaster for the purchasing agent, assistant superintendent, and assistant general superintendent. May 3d, 1881, he came to the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba road as assistant general superintendent, and was made vice president and general manager Nov. 1st, 1881, which position he held till recently, when he was offered and accepted the office of president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road.

IN PROBATE COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk:—ss.
In Probate Court, Special Term, Feb. 23d, 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Stener Knutson deceased:

On receiving and filing the petition of Elias Steenerson of the County of Polk representing, among other things, that Stener Knutson, late of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, on the 11th day of October, A. D. 1891, at the County of Polk died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a son of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Elias Steenerson granted;

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said court, on Monday the 25th day of March A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the Probate Office, in the City of Crookston in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 23rd day of February A. D. 1893.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
[46-48] Judge of Probate.

Rheumatism Quickly Cured.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done, if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill.: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days. I am all right to-day; and would insist on every one who is afflicted with that terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once." 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Cholerine in Pennsylvania.

Swickley Penn.: We had an epidemic of cholerine, as our physicians called it, in this place lately and I made a great hit with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. I sold four dozen bottles of it in one week and have since sold nearly a gross. This remedy did the work and was a big advertisement for me. Several persons who had been troubled with diarrhœa for two or three weeks were cured by a few doses of this medicine.

DISTRICT COURT.

The Adjourned Term of Court Opened Last Monday, will be of Short Duration.

Most of the Cases Go Over to the Regular May Term of Court

As But Few of the Attorneys had Their Cases Ready for Trial.

Court convened at 10 a. m. Upon a preliminary call of the calendar of the December general term, it was noticed that several of the cases had been settled since adjournment.

The first case for trial was the J. I. Case Implement Co. vs John Geason. An action to recover the price of some second-hand sulky plows which Geason took from the company to sell, and which he afterwards returned to their agent. A verdict for the defendant was rendered. A. A. Miller appeared for plaintiff and Montague & Bucklen for defendant.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The first case on the list was Sandwich Mfg. Co. vs Rose Clement and Andre Clement. This was an action to recover on two promissory notes amounting to $216.45 given to the Sandwich Manufacturing Co. by R. and A. Clement, amounting, with interest to date to $309.26 which amount the jury found for the plaintiff, A. A. Miller appeared for plaintiff and P. G. Falardeau counsel for defendant failing to show up.

The case of the state vs Ole Bjorgo and "Doc" Gilmour of McIntosh for selling liquor without a license was continued to the next term of court, on account of the inability of the state to produce its witnesses.

Syver Nordrum alias Syver Haugstad vs Paul Slovarp was laid in in Ringebo, Norway. The defendant borrowed money, (650 crowns) from Ringebo Savings Bank, Norway, and the plaintiff signed his paper as an accommodation. The defendant, after making a written agreement with the plaintiff to repay him the amount as soon as he was able, came to America. The plaintiff had to pay the money for the defendant and he has never been repaid by defendant. The defendant pleaded statue of limitation as it has been over ten years now, but the plaintiff possessed letters from the defendant which took the matter out of that difficulty. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $230. A. A. Miller for plaintiff and Mr. Vaule of Brattland & Vaule for defendant.

Chas. T. Vine vs Mrs. Emma Austin. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover $114.87 balance due on meat bill. The jury brought in a verdict awarding the plaintiff half the amount claimed.

The court will adjourn Saturday.

Death of Col. H. Mattson.

Col. Hans Mattson died at his residence in Minneapolis, after a short illness, on Sunday. He was well known throughout the northwest and was at one time the owner of a farm in Kittson County. Col. Mattson was a member of the Loyal Legion and Rawlins Post, G. A. R., and a prominent Mason. He was one of the Scandinavian pioneers of this state and had done a great deal during the 30 year of his residence here for the development of the northwest. Col. Mattson was twice auditor of Goodhue county, commander of the 3d regiment of volunteers for four years, three times secretary of state and consul-general of the United States at Calcutta during the Garfield-Arthur administration.

Col. Mattson was born near Kristianstad, Sweden, in 1832, and was the son of a farmer. At the age of 17 he enlisted in the Swedish army, serving two years as an artillery cadet. In 1851 he came to America, going first to Boston. He was joined by his father later in Buffalo and the two came to Goodhue county, where they took up claims, and founded the now flourishing community of Vasa. On the second call for troops in 1861, Col. Mattson organized a troop of cavalry and went to the front as its captain. This was company D. of the 3d regiment. He received his title after the disastrous engagement at Murfreesboro. In July, 1881, he was appointed consul general to India by President Garfield. The commission was one of four documents signed by Garfield the day after he was shot. Col. Mattson remained in India two years, with headquarters at Calcutta. He was elected secretary of state of Minnesota in 1869, 1886 and 1888.

At the time of his death Col. Mattson was editor-in-chief of the North, the well-known weekly. He had been prominent, too, in a literary way, and had contributed much to the Scandinavian periodicals as well as writing for the daily press. His book, "The Story of an Emigrant,', an autobiography, was completed some time ago, and it has proved an interesting contribution to the literature of the day.

Constipation, and all troubles with the digestive organs and the liver, are cured by Hood's Pills. Unequalled as a dinner pill.

Now your blood should be purified. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best spring medicine and blood purifier.

"The Blood is the Life,"

Runs the old saying, and everything that ever makes part of any organ of the body must reach its place therein through the blood. Therefore, if the blood is purified and kept in good condition by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, it necessarily follows that the benefit of the medicine is imparted to every organ of the body. Can anything be simpler than the method by which this exellent medicine gives good health to all who will try it fairly and patiently?

THE FAIR.

The Directors fix a Date for a Fair and Race Meeting—July 26, 27 and 28.

The board of directors of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association met at the office of E. M. Walsh last Thursday to fix a date for holding an agricultural fair this year, and make other necessary arrangements.

The secretary reports that he had received about 200 letters from Polk county farmers in answer to the circulars which he had sent out, and that the majority of them favored holding a fair in the summer, and the directors, in accordance with this sentiment, selected July 26th, 27th and 28th as the dates for holding the fair and race meeting.

Secretary Wyatt made an exhaustive report to the directors, and gave his views upon the fair question. Among his suggestions was one that a man should be engaged to go through the county and get the farmers interested in the fair and get them to prepare their stock for exhibition. He also touched upon the question of whether it would be advisable to hold a county fair or take in all the counties of the Red River Valley. From what he had heard from the people in the surrounding counties he believed that they would co-operate with the directors of this association.

Thos. R. Johnstone of Fisher will probably be engaged to travel through the county in the interest of the fair and get the farmers interested in it. He will also be authorized to sell stock in the association. No better qualified person than Mr. Johnstone can be selected for the position, and if any person can stir up the farmers and get them enthused over this matter he is the man to do it.

The following committees were appointed.

Fair arrangements and premium list:—Hugh Thompson, E. M. Walsh and E. M. Lancaster.

Race meeting program—Hugh Thompson, R. B. Vining and S. L. Collins.

Building and repairing—J. E. O'Brien, E. M. Lancaster and Archie McKinnon.

Every county fair receives an annual appropriation of $250 from the state, and the Polk county fair will undoubtedly secure this aid. Besides this, the county and the city will be asked to contribute to this enterprise, and there is no reason why each shouldn,t give a liberal donation. With sufficient aid from these sources the fair cannot help being a success, as the letters already sent in by farmers show that they are taking a keen interest in it.

INDIANS MAY FILE.

The General Land Office Decides That Indians May Enter Land on Indian Reservations.

A peculiar land case has just been decided by the general land office, which establishes a precedent allowing Indians to enter land upon Indian reservations. The facts are as follows:

In 1890 a white man and his squaw wife settled upon a piece of land in the Red Lake Indian reservation, built a house and improved the land. The squaw—who bears the euphonious name of Onab Agomaybeck—then made application to the local land office to enter the land, which request was denied. She then laid the matter before the commissioner of the general land office, who on February 28th notified the land office here that the application should be received on the ground "that where any Indian not residing upon a reservation, or for whose tribe no reservation has been provided by treaty, act of congress or executive order, shall make settlement upon any surveyed or unsurveyed lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated he or she shall be entitled, upon application to the local land office for the district in which the lands are located, to have the same allotted to him or her and to his or her children in quantities and manner as provided in this act (act of February 8, 1887 and February 28, 1891) for Indians residing upon reservations; and when such settlement is made upon unsurveyed lands, the grants to such Indians shall be adjusted upon the survey of the lands so as to conform thereto.

IN THREE ROUNDS.

Miss Amelia Menzel Secures a Piece of Land After a Hard Contest.

The land contest case of Menzel vs. Valear has been finally settled by the secretary of the interior deciding in favor of the contestant Menzel. The land involved is 160 acres in Fanny township, this county, and in 1881 Tobias Valear filed a timber culture entry on it. In 1890 Miss Amelia Menzel filed a contest on the land, claiming that Valear had failed to comply with the requirements of the law. The local land office decided that Valear's entry should be cancelled, and Miss Amelia allowed to file on the land. On an appeal being taken to the commissioner of the general land office, he reversed the decision, but Amelia wasn't satisfied with this and took the case to the secretary of the interior who reversed the commissioner's decision, thus sustaining the decision of the local land office and placing Amelia in possession of the land.

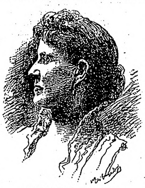
THE CABINET CIRCLE.

LADIES WHO WILL ADORN THE NEW ADMINISTRATION.

Personal Characteristics of the Wives of Secretaries Carlisle, Lamont, Smith, Olney, Bissell and Gresham—They Are All Typical American Women.

The wives of the members of President Cleveland's cabinet are more interesting, and, in many respects, as important national figures as their distinguished husbands, for while the latter will for four years steer the ship of state carefully through any shoals that may be encountered the ladies will be intrusted with a task equally difficult if less fraught with importance to the general welfare of the country.

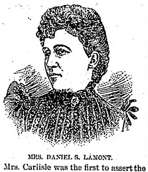


MRS. JOHN G. CARLISLE.

The lady who is better known in Washington society than any other of the wives of the members of Mr. Cleveland's cabinet is Mrs. John G. Carlisle. Mrs. Carlisle comes from an old and noted Kentucky family. Her father, John A. Goodson, was Covington's first mayor, and also held important state offices. Miss Goodson was the undisputed belle of Covington when, at the age of 21, she married a teacher in the city public schools named John Griffin Carlisle.

Two years later Mr. Carlisle was admitted to the bar, and within a year was elected to the legislature. During that time the sterling qualities of the woman shone forth, and it is no secret that the present secretary of the treasury owes his political success as much to the encouragement and advice of his wife as to his own undoubted ability.

Mrs. Carlisle's social duties in a national way may be said to have really begun when her husband became speaker of the national house of representatives. That she was a charming hostess, with the rare faculty of making everybody feel perfectly at home without any apparent effort to do so, any person who has ever partaken of her hospitality will cheerfully testify.

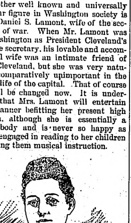


MRS. DANIEL S. LAMONT.

Mrs. Carlisle was the first to assert the claims of the speaker to official dignities, and she boldly selected Wednesday, or cabinet ladies' day, for her receptions. During the administration of President Arthur she claimed precedence upon ceremonial occasions, and until the marriage of President Cleveland asserted the same right by virtue of the constitutional rank and title of the speaker.

Mrs. Carlisle is a woman who would command respectful attention anywhere. She is handsome, tall and well made, with a walk and carriage noticeable for their dignity. The home of the Carlisles is at 1426 K street, which will doubtless be the scene of many brilliant and thoroughly enjoyable entertainments between now and March 4, 1897.

Another well known and universally popular figure in Washington society is Mrs. Daniel S. Lamont, wife of the secretary of war. When Mr. Lamont was in Washington as President Cleveland's private secretary, his lovable and accomplished wife was an intimate friend of Mrs. Cleveland, but she was very naturally comparatively unimportant in the social life of the capital. That of course will all be changed now. It is understood that Mrs. Lamont will entertain in a manner befitting her present high station, although she is essentially a home body and is never so happy as when engaged in reading to her children or giving them musical instruction.

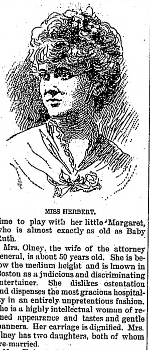


MRS. WILSON S. BISSELL.

Time has strewn some gray hairs upon Mrs. Lamont's head, but these inexorable reminders serve to heighten rather than to lessen the attractiveness of her face, which literally beams with intelligence and good nature. Mrs. Lamont has a soft, sweet voice, which never becomes harsh under any circumstances, and which is an index of the gentleness for which she is noted. She is 35 years old, was born near Cortland, N. Y., and married Mr. Lamont in 1876, when they were both college students. She is the mother of three girls. Mrs. Lamont is a woman of fine appearance, and is a loving wife, a devoted mother and a sensible woman.

Many persons predict that the lady who will be most intimate with Mrs. Cleveland during her reign at the White House is the vivacious wife of Postmaster General Wilson S. Bissell. There are several facts which lend probability to this prophecy. The ladies are of about the same age; they come from the same locality; they are both young mothers; their tastes are similar, and their husbands are intimate friends and ex-law partners. It is at any rate a foregone conclusion that Mrs. Bissell will be one of the most important social figures in Washington. She is 27 years old, decidedly handsome, although perhaps not pretty, and an ideal hostess. She is a musician of great ability. Her voice was cultivated in Europe, and everybody supposed that the concert platform would claim Louise Fowler Sturges. It did really look so until she met Mr. Bissell while she was on a visit to Buffalo, was beloved by him, reciprocated the tender feeling and was married to him.

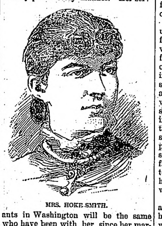
Mrs. Bissell has since lived in a magnificent mansion in Buffalo, and her entertainments have been the talk of society in the Bison City. She is a charming conversationist and observant hostess and a particularly attractive woman. Devoted as Mrs. Bissell is to the pleasures and amenities of society, she is nevertheless a thorough housewife and is never so busy that she cannot find time to play with her little Margaret, who is almost exactly as old as Baby Ruth.



MISS HERBERT.

Mrs. Olney, the wife of the attorney general, is about 50 years old. She is below the medium height and is known in Boston as a judicious and discriminating entertainer. She dislikes ostentation and dispenses the most gracious hospitality in an entirely unpretentious fashion. She is a highly intellectual woman of refined appearance and tastes and gentle manners. Her carriage is dignified. Mrs. Olney has two daughters, both of whom are married.

Mrs. Hoke Smith, the wife of the secretary of the interior, is a representative of the far south, and she is a decidedly creditable one. Miss Bertie Cobb was one of the prettiest girls in Athens, Ga., when she met Hoke Smith while visiting her married sister in Atlanta. She was then but 15 years old, but love recognizes no age, and she and the brilliant young lawyer, after an engagement of five years, were married. Mrs. Smith, although the mother of several children, is still a very young woman. She will entertain a great deal, but not in a merely perfunctory manner. Her servants in Washington will be the same who have been with her since her marriage.



MRS. HOKE SMITH.

Mrs. Smith will have as guests next winter several Georgia belles, and it is therefore safe to assume that her residence will be one of the most popular in the national capital. The wife of the new secretary is what would be called a fine looking woman, and her good breeding is manifest at a glance. She is very charitable, as many a poor person in Atlanta knows.

Secretary Herbert has been a widower since 1886, but his household and entertainments will be presided over by his young and beautiful daughter. It is said that Miss Herbert, previous to her father's elevation to his present position, had attained a greater popularity than any other young lady in the congressional circle. In manner she is quiet and dignified, but she knows how to entertain and will probably be one of the most popular of the cabinet hostesses. There was an elder Miss Herbert, but she is now married.

Mrs. Walter Q. Gresham was born Matilda McGrair. She was married to the present secretary of state in 1858, when he was a struggling young lawyer. Her father was a farmer near Corydon, Ind. Mrs. Gresham was never noted as an elaborate entertainer, her tastes having always run toward quiet comfort in the home life. She is the mother of two grownup sons.

WALKING IS FASHION

HOW HEAVY NEW YORKERS TRY TO REDUCE THEIR WEIGHT.

Central Park a Favorite Place For Wealth and Beauty to Walk as Well as to Ride. Good Natured Comments on the Daily Procession as It Passes By.

Pedestrianism is quite the proper thing nowadays. Even when the streets are in a filthy condition, the daily constitutional is quite as necessary to the average man as his daily bath or his evening of recreation. He takes a stroll on the avenue perhaps to limber up his joints and meet his friends. Perhaps, if he is inclined to rotundity, he does it to reduce his weight.

Of late Central park has been growing in popularity among the portly class. If you will take a trip up to the big reservoir at almost any time of the day, you may see any number of people of all ages, conditions and degrees of prosperity plodding about the 1½-mile track which surrounds it.

The reservoir is the highest portion of Manhattan Island. The view from all sides is picturesque. On the south the city lies stretched out in a magnificant panorama as far as the eye can reach. It is a spot particularly adopted for the purpose for which it was intended—the pleasure of the people.

Some of the pedestrians there are sprinters, and do their work without regard to dignity. Others strut around with all the dignity of a game cock. It is not an uncommon sight to see a woman weighing from 200 to 300 pounds puffing along like a slow going locomotive with a heavy train attached, her arms swinging at her sides like the driving rods of an engine. She is out for what there is in it. She cares nothing for the questioning looks of the spectators nor for their unkind remarks. She has just so many pounds to remove per the doctor's orders, and she is trying to do it.

So regularly do these open air fiends make their appearance on the track that the men employed at the gatehouse on the south side in the capacity of watchmen, gatekeepers and helpers can spot one half a mile away.

"There comes Aunty So-and-so," they comment. "What a gait she has got on this morning! See that stride! She's trying to break the record."

"And there is Popper So-and-so. He's making good time too. Wonder if he'll overtake her before she reaches the turn? Whew, but he's making the gravel fly! Five pounds off this morning sure," and as the reducers of flesh go flying past the gatehouse the nod familiarly to the men who happen to be in sight.

"Who is this coming?" asked a reporter of the men at the gatehouse a few days ago as he saw a young woman approaching.

"Why, we call her Beauty," one of the men replied. She was a tall young woman, fair, and with the form of a Juno. She was striding along on the other side of the lake. As she passed the men she nodded good morning and strode away, her head in the air, her shoulders back, chest thrown forward and with a 3-foot stride. She was out for oxygen. Her cheeks glowed with the rosy hue of perfect health, and her eyes sparkled like diamonds.

"She lives on Fifth avenue," continued one of the helpers. "Every morning at 9 o'clock, if the weather is anyway pleasant, she is here walking for dear life. But ain't she a 'beaut?' And she's not stuck up a bit. She has a nod and a smile for all of the boys, just as you saw her then. I'll wager every dollar I have that there isn't a man on this road that can overtake her if she is in the mood for sprinting. Look at that stride of hers. She covers three feet two, I'll bet," and taking a tape measure from his pocket he measured the marks of her feet after she had passed.

"I told you so," he exclaimed, holding up the tape so it could be seen. "Three feet two and one-half," and he grinned with delight. "Yes, I've measured it before," he acknowledged, when accused of it. "You see, I take a great interest in the girl, because two years ago when she first began coming here she looked as if she could not live a month. She was as pale as a ghost. Her chest was sunken in, and I thought she was going into consumption. You would never think it to see her now, bub. Winter or summer she seldom misses a day except perhaps during the extreme heat of the summer and rainy or wet weather. Her father is a commission merchant down town, and very often he accompanies her in her walks. Everybody likes to watch her, she is so graceful and strong."

Then came a man of about 50, short and very obese. He had a very large head, short gray whiskers and legs that were no larger than baseball bats. "Morning," he said, with a nod of recognition. "Fine air—lots of it. Three pounds off this morning or die. Lots of people out. Goodby," and as his spindle shanks, working at the rate of 100 times a minute, carried him out of range of hearing he was still talking. He was a Wall street broker. He has been trying to reduce his flesh for a year, but he is as fat now as ever.

"But here comes the hummer."

"Morning, boys, morning. Can't stop talk. In hurry. Make circuit 20 minutes or bust. By by." And he was out of hearing.

He was a short man, thin and about 55. He had a smooth face and was wiry of limb.

In a few minutes a bevy of pretty girls—seminary girls—came along with their chaperon, a young woman who looked as if she had but just graduated herself. She eyed the men suspiciously as much as to say: "Don't you dare flirt with these girls. They are out under my care, and I will protect them."—New York World.

A City In a Mountain.

The city of Banian, in Bokhara, is cut in the side of a mountain. There are 12,000 artificial caves, some very large, and two statues—one 90, the other 20 feet high—each hewn from a single stone.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SHE DROPPED HER MITTEN.

And She Was Angry Because the Deaf Old Man Misunderstood Her.

It was just 6 o'clock, and the car was packed with people going home.

She carried some bundles, and in her efforts to handle them and save them from crushing she dropped her mitten. She saw it go, but was powerless to stay its descent, and it went down in successive stages in a triangular space between herself, a man who looked over her head, and an individual who was deaf.

"There goes my mitten!"

The deaf man leaned over and said, "Eh?"

"My mitten—mitten—it fell down."

"Well, ye can't git it, mum. Y'll have to wait till the car gits to the end of the line, so the conductor kin pull up the floor."

"I'll do nothing of the kind. Besides I ain't goin to have all these people walkin on it for half an hour."

"Haven't ye got another one?" said the deaf man.

"Course I've got another one," and she wiggled the hand incased in her other mitten.

The deaf man saw the movement, and knowing that women often carry car fare inside their hand coverings reached over and pulled her mitten off for her.

Then she screamed.

The conductor was the only man who could edge his way to the scene of trouble.

"What's the matter here?"

"Lady dropped her nickel and can't pick it up," said the deaf man.

"Didn't drop my nickel—dropped my mitten," said the lady with the packages.

"Said she had another one," pursued the deaf man, "but she lied."

"You're an old doorpost," said the woman with one mitten.

"Queer how folks go travelin about town with only one nickel," said the deaf man.

"They get along better'n people with no cars," said the woman who didn't drop her nickel.

"Was that all the money yer husband give ye?" asked the deaf man in a tone of sympathy. "He must be a regla'r brute."

"If he was here now, he'd eat you up."

"I s'pose them's collars and cuffs she's been doin up and is goin to deliver 'em," said the deaf man to the passengers.

Then the conductor said, "Fare, please," and the woman gave up a nickel that she had been carrying in her mouth.

"Thought it was in yer mitten," said the deaf man.

"You don't know how to think," said the woman.

"Wonder why she didn't carry 'em both in her mouth?" said the deaf man.

"You ought to stuff both your own mittens in yer mouth," said the woman.

"Ain't ye afraid ye'll swaller yer nickel that way some time?" asked the deaf man.

"If I do, I reckon it won't injure my hearin," said the woman.

Then the conductor got down on the floor and recovered the woman's mitten, and she got off at the next crossing wondering why some people didn't carry ear trumpets.

The deaf man said, by way of enlightening the other passengers, "I guess it was her mitten instead of her nickel that she dropped."—Chicago News-Record.

Woman to Woman.

The attitude women assume toward strange women was amusingly brought out in a New York court a few days ago. A female witness in a case where a young man was accused of slashing a young woman's dress while riding in the elevated was asked by one of the lawyers, "Do you mean to say, madam, that you saw all those tears or cuts, whichever you please, in a lady's skirt and yet hadn't the politeness to tell her of it?" "I do," said the witness. "I have often told women when their dress was out of order in the street, but I always got snubbed for my pains, and I made up my mind not to do it any more. If a man should tell a woman that her dress was out of order, she would be very apt to thank him, but she never thanks a woman."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Trees Require Good Soil.

Southern soil seems to possess the necessary substances for the growth of all species of trees and plants natural to warm climates. Substances that contribute to the nutrition of plants will act as food for trees, and, as we see the physical properties of the trees themselves, leaves and other matter, have a direct share in their nutrition. There are some soils so hard and clayey that the roots of trees cannot spread, and thus they fail to reach the substances which they require for food. Hence the tree becomes stunted in growth and is soon dead, falling to the ground to become, through its ashes, nutrition for some other frailer plant which can subsist in such soil.—Boston Transcript.

A Good Dressing For Shoes.

When meditating a trip on a rainy day, it is a wise plan to rub the shoes with a waterproof mixture, which will make them soft, pliable and hardy. A very good recipe for this is an ounce of beeswax, an ounce of turpentine, a quarter of an ounce of Burgundy pitch, melted over a slow fire with a half pint of oil. Be cautious with the turpentine. This mixture may be applied often and will be found really excellent.—New York World.

Did You Ever?

Did you ever expect a letter from a dear friend and get instead a cross grained note of complaint? Or confidently expect a check in the morning mail and get an invoice of bills? Did you ever rush with beating heart to get your mail and receive nothing but an advertising circular?—Boston Commonwealth.

"Shop" Expressions.

The curiosities of talking "shop" were never better exemplified than in the case reported by an unloving woman. In a country trip she occupied in a short transit the seat beside the driver. "He told me," she said, "that he had been 'bus-ing it' this winter; had 'hack-ed it' all last summer."—New York Times.

SIX SPASMS A DAY.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine to any one afflicted with nervous complaints with the assurance that it will not disappoint them. When our boy was eighteen months old he was attacked with violent spasms. Sometimes he would have five or six spasms in a single day. WE TRIED MANY PHYSICIANS WITHOUT BENEFIT; finally our druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. We tried a bottle, and could see that he WAS BENEFITED FROM THE FIRST DOSE. We used three bottles, and I am happy to say the child was ENTIRELY CURED. We used no other remedy, and his cure is complete. He is now three years old and perfectly healthy. You are at liberty to use my name in SOUNDING THE PRAISE OF THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY.

THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL

MONEY AND THE VARIOUS TERMS USED TO DESIGNATE IT.

Mediums of Exchange Among Many Nations—Rude Articles That Were of Stable Value—The Names of the Various Coins of the Great World.

In Great Britain at the time of the Norman conquest were two kinds of money—"living money," i. e., slaves and cattle, and "dead money," that of metal. In the 13th century Nicolo and Matteo Polo found a money in use in China which was made of the inner bark of the mulberry tree, and which it was death by torture to counterfeit or to refuse to take in any part of the country. Among the South Sea islanders iron was so valued that it became money, and axes a standard of payment, the value of other articles being stated at so many axes. Cowrie shells are used as small coins in India, the East Indian islands and Africa, more than 1,000 tons being brought to Liverpool in 1851 from India to be exported to the African coast in exchange for palm oil. In America wampum was used by the Indians and was even counterfeited in 1635 by the colonists of Massachusetts.

In India cakes of tea and in China pieces of silk pass as money, while at the great annual fair at Nizhnee-Novgorod in Russia the price of tea has to be known before the prices of other commodities are fixed, it being the standard by which all exchange of merchandise is regulated. In 1574 quantities of pasteboard were coined in Holland, and in 1770 in Scotland workmen carried nails as money to bake shops and alehouses. Notched wood was used at one time in England, and in central parts of South America soap, chocolate, cocoanuts, eggs, etc., pass as money. In British West Indies until of late years pins, a slice of bread, a pinch of snuff or a dram of whisky served the same purpose. In America at various times raccoon, deer and bearskins, corn, beef, tobacco and codfish have been legal tender.

The Jews, in addition to their ordinary money of shekels, talents and drams of silver, had "jewel money." To this people we are also indebted to the use of paper money in lieu of that of metal. And among the curious facts in connection with this subject may be noted that the sum paid Judas for the betrayal of his master would be, according to the relative value of money in our day, a little more than 40 cents, a small price with which to purchase eternal infamy. The first mention of money in any of the ancient records speaks of it as being weighed and not counted, and no mutilated piece was ever rejected. Under the Norman kings silver was coined with deep crosses, so that smaller bits could be obtained by simply breaking off what was required, something as we tear off postage stamps today.

An interesting study is found in tracing out the origin of the names of coins familiar to us now. The American dollar has quite a little history of its own. In northern Bohemia is a little valley called Joachimstal, or Joachim's valley, and in the 16th century the reigning duke of this region authorized this little mining city or district to coin a silver piece, which was called Joachimstaller. But the Joachim part of the name proving too much for everyday use, it was dropped and that of thaler deemed sufficient. The piece being of convenient size and well molded passed into general use in Germany and Denmark, and again underwent a change in orthography, finally turning up as the "daler," whence it came into English as the dollar, and was adopted as such by the Americans.

In France the Mexican dollar is generally called the "piastre," and the name is also applied to the American coin, but in either case the appellation is incorrect, for the name piastre, or piaster, has for the past 50 years been applied correctly only to a small silver coin used in Turkey and Egypt, and which is worth from about 5 to 8 cents in American coinage. The word cent comes of course from centum, being a hundredth part of the American dollar, the dime also meaning a tenth.

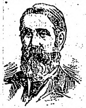
The word shilling is of Saxon origin and was introduced into England by that people. Penny, formerly "pfennig," was also brought into England by the Saxons and was first coined in silver and originally derived from the word "pand," to pawn, with the diminutive suffix "ing." The cognomen, "crown," of the English piece, worth about $1.20 in American coinage, was first issued by Edward III and named in consequence of the image placed upon it. The groat was first coined by the same monarch and is a corruption of the word "grosses," in contradistinction to the small coins or pennies. Its value was equal to about four of the latter coins.

The Russian "ruble" comes from the verb "to cut" and was so called from the ornamental edge the piece formerly had. The kopeck is equal in value to twopence, as is also the kreutzer in Austria, cent in Holland, Italy, France and Spain. In the last country the 5-pseta piece, called the escude, corresponds to the American dollar, the pseta being the small coin representing the monetary standard and meaning simply "little piece." For several hundred years and until a recent date money was coined in from 20 to 30 places in France, but all is now issued from the mint at Paris.

Few French gold coins are now in circulation, except those stamped with the head of Napoleon III, and silver pieces of the same issue are almost as common. French silver coins were the best in the world, and coins are often met with bearing the stamp of Charles X, Louis XVIII and Napoleon I. The franc, in value in American money of 20 cents, was so designated by King John, who first coined these pieces in 1360. They bore the motto "Le Roi Frank" (King of the Franks, the ancient name of the French), and were of two kinds, one representing the king on horseback and the other on foot. It was formerly called the "livre" (pound) as well, though the connection with any specified weight is not evident.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A BURNS BIBLIOPHILE.

Captain Smith and His Rare Collection of a Poet's Works.



WILLIAM R. SMITH.

Captain William R. Smith, who for 40 years past has been the efficient superintendent of the National Botanic gardens at Washington and is president of the Society of American Florists, can repeat from memory every word and line of Burns' poems, from beginning to end. His love and reverence for the Scotch poet began when he was a lad of 10 in Athelstoneford, Haddingtonshire, Scotland, when with the first 2 shillings he ever earned—won as a prize at school for reciting Gray's "Elegy" without a flaw—he purchased a copy of Burns' poems. His appreciation of the bard's Scottish declaration of independence, "A man's a man for a' that," brought him to the United States and caused him to become a thoroughly ingrained American. Since then, by patient rummaging of old book stores, by purchase, correspondence and exchange, Captain Smith has gradually assembled his wonderful collection. As his first 2 shillings were spent for a copy of Burns, he says, so will his last half dollar be.

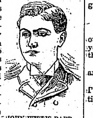
In Captain Smith's collection the American and British editions of Burns are grouped separately. Among the 150 different editions is a beautiful facsimile of the first edition published, that of 1786, printed at Kilmarnock, 8vo. Then there is a well preserved copy of the first Edinburgh edition, 1787, printed for the author and sold by William Creech, with Bengo's famous engraving of Nasmyth's portrait, 8vo., and an equally well preserved copy of the second Edinburgh, 8vo., with portrait and typographical error which escaped the eagle eye of Burns and has been repeated in many editions, down to some of the very latest, notably in Alexander Smith's Globe edition. In addition to these he has copies of all the early British and American editions, making 650 volumes in all.

The superb and almost priceless collection is the labor of Mr. Smith's life, and in size and quality it is inferior only to the famous Burnsiana at Glasgow. Besides old books there are in the collection valuable Burns manuscripts, prints, short songs, portraits, autographs, curios, relics and mementos gathered by years of fervent enthusiasm.

The place where these literary treasures are kept is the 1½-story lodge which Captain Smith occupies in the Botanic gardens. In this lowly dwelling Captain Smith has resided through the varied mutations of politics at the capital for a longer period than any other official there, save in the case of the venerable Captain Bassett of the senate. There, with his dogs and his books, Captain Smith finds the most congenial companionship for his declining years.

AN ACTIVE WORKER.

John Willis Baer, General Secretary of the Society of Christian Endeavor.



JOHN WILLIS BAER.

The United Society of Christian Endeavor is now considered one of the great institutions of the country, and its growth is so rapid that any statistics would be obsolete soon after publication. The truly catholic spirit in which it works, the liberal conditions on which members are received and the methods employed to give effect to all deep religious feeling are of course the main causes of its rapid growth, but much is also due to the high character and efficiency of its officers.

None of these has made a better record than its present secretary, John Willis Baer. To his shrewd business management is largely due that the United society has been able to pay its way by the sale of supplies, with but little demand upon individual members. Mr. Baer was born in Rochester, Minn., March 2, 1861, and is therefore but 32 years old. He was partially reared in Cleveland, but at 18 went back to his native state and was for some years in the business office of an elevator company, after which he did newspaper work for two years in Cedar Rapids, Ia.

He was among the first in the Christian Endeavor movement, was president of the Rochester local union and served also on the state board of officers. In the spring of 1890 he was called to succeed Mr. George M. Ward as general secretary and has been constantly busy in that capacity ever since, excepting a short trip abroad for a necessary rest. He has spoken in almost every important city in the country, always speaks without notes and is quick at repartee, keen at illustration and full of an earnestness that carries conviction.

Two Novel Timepieces.

The newest wrinkles in timepieces are a watch that talks and a clock that marks the time by the consumption of a candle that illuminates its translucent dial. The watch, which is ingenious, but intricate, announces the hours and quarters in a voice given it by a phonographic attachment. It is the invention of a Swiss named Casimir Livau. The clock is for night use. The dial can be turned by hand, and before going to bed the hand is placed opposite the hour of retiring. As the candle burns lower and lower it pulls the hand on the dial mechanically, which, illuminated in the rear by the burning light, shows the hour until daybreak.

Large Price For a Picture.

Painting pictures pays handsomely if a fellow only has enough reputation. Millet's painting "La Bergere" has been sold to M. Chauchard, a wealthy Parisian, for $240,000. M. Chauchard also owns "The Angelus."

A SUN WORSHIPER.

Since no song bird's lyric gush
Breaks the gray and [illegible] hush,
Since the meadows are in bond,
And white fetters chain the pond,
Since the barren boughs bewail,
And the bright hours swiftly fail,
Since the nights are one black blur,
I have turned sun worshiper.

Though my vision may not scan
Precepts Zoroastrain,
Yet have I some rapture caught
That the ancient Parsees taught.
Winter prisoned, I am won
By the promise of the sun,
And I lift my prayer that he Set the weary captive free.

He can shatter frosty bars,
Edge hillpaths with blossom stars;
He can heal the bare bough's grief
By the boon of bursting leaf,
Woo the solitude to song,
Right the wasting winter's wrong;
He can golden life confer—
I have turned sun worshiper!

—Clinton Scollard in Youth's Companion.

A Pneumatic Coal Chute.

"The man who goes about with a big shovel and a big basket over his shoulder looking for a job at putting in coal finds less and less to do," said a citizen. "The coal wagons which have bodies that may be elevated and adjusted at almost any angle, and which are provided with extension chutes through which the coal is made to run straight from the wagon into the coal hole, appear to be multiplying. But of course coal wont run up hill, and when it is to be used above the first story it still has to be carried up stairs. But perhaps the next thing will be a telescopic tube with a flaring lower end big enough to fit right over the top of a coal wagon and provided at its upper end with an apparatus to exhaust the air. Then when the tube is in the window and you're all ready, zip! and there you are, 'Coal delivered on the fourteenth floor without extra charge.'"—New York Sun.

Early Races In Russia.

Russia is so vast and includes so many races that it might seem well nigh hopeless to determine its most ancient inhabitants. Nevertheless this is a problem at which Professor Anatola Bogdanov has been laboring for the past 35 years, and which he attempts to solve in a paper read before the congress of anthropologists at Moscow. The kurgans or tumuli of central Russia contain the relics of a tall, strong, dolichocephalic race, with light brown hair, as well as a short, smaller bracycephalic race, with dark brown hair. The blond type preponderates in the southwestern districts, and the brunette in the northwestern. Bogdanov considers the long heads to have been Slavs, and that the modern Russians of those parts are an amalgam of the Slavs with the broader headed race, which is probably Mongoloid.—American Register.

The Use of the Adjective "Old."

Some one has noted that the adjective applied by college graduates and students to their alma mater is always "old." It is "old Harvard," "old Yale," "old Dartmouth," and one enthusiastic admirer and attendant at the University of Chicago has been heard to refer to certain rules of that institution as "a way we have at old Chicago." There is certainly an affection conveyed by the word "old" that no other adjective carries, and like the terms of address "old man" or "old boy" it signifies that loving familiarity with which every one regards his college home.—Boston Journal.

A Suggestion.

Prison Warder—It's just been found out that you didn't commit that crime you've been in for all these years, and so the home secretary has pardoned you.

Innocent Man—Um! I'm pardoned, am I?

Prison Warder—Y-e-s, but don't go yet. I'll have to telegraph for further instructions.

Innocent Man—What about?

Prison Warder—Seems to me that, considerin you hadn't any business here, you ought to pay for your board.—London Tit-Bits.

Misplacement of a Comma.

A popular captain's wife was more than usually anxious over the safety of her husband, and accordingly handed a parish clerk a slip one Sunday morning bearing the words, "Captain Wilson having gone to sea, his wife desires the prayers of this congregation on his behalf." Unfortunately, by the misplacement of the comma after the "sea," the congregation were told that "Captain Wilson having gone to see his wife, desires the prayers of this congregation on his behalf."—Cornhill Magazine.

Of Course Not.

The day was a warm one, and the gentleman from Kentucky was coming up from the spring at the foot of the hill with a bucket in his hand.

"Ah, colonel," inquired an Ohio visitor sitting on the porch, "have you something to drink in that pail?"

"Oh, no," responded the colonel, "it's water."—Detroit Free Press.

A Queer Performance.

Several years ago a Hampshire baronet was amazed to find that, although he went to bed clothed as is customary, yet he invariably awoke naked in the morning and could not find any trace of his missing garment. A great number of shirts disappeared in this inexplicable manner, and as every nook and corner in the room was searched without result the baronet at last told one of his intimate friends, and requested him to sit in the room all night and watch developments. This the friend did, and after the baronet had for some time given audible evidence that he was asleep the watcher was surprised to observe him get out of bed, open the door and proceed with a quick pace along a corridor, descend the stairs and emerge into an open yard.

Suddenly the baronet, divesting himself of his only garment, seized a pitchfork and buried the linen in a dunghill. Afterward he proceeded leisurely back to his bed. In the morning the baronet, incredulous at what his friend related, repaired to the dunghill, and after digging for some time found several shirts stowed away in this anything but pleasant receptacle.—Boston Globe.

A REPUBLICAN caucus of members of the state legislature favor adjourning the legislature about April 10th.

"WE depreciate," says the Daily Times of Saturday. Well, that's an honest admission, at any rate, but hardly necessary when the fact is so obvious to its readers.

THE Times attempts to exculpate its slurring attacks upon the Scandinavians, and only succeeds in getting itself deeper in the mire. As usual, when it makes an extremely bad break it attempts to shoulder the blame on the editor of the JOURNAL, but it will not work. The people are onto the milk in that cocoanut and in due time the Times will appreciate the fact.

THE North Dakota legislature has adjourned sine die. As a law making body it was not a success. Most of the session was consumed in the efforts to elect a senator. The question of re-submitting the prohibition law to a vote of the people was defeated as was also the woman's suffrage resolution. The standard of North Dakota legislatures seems to be getting lower with each successive session.

THE Duluth Evening Herald has put in a web perfecting press and moved into larger quarters. The Herald is now one of the brightest and best evening papers in the state. Its issue of March 4th, commemorative of the event, was a hummer, consisting of twenty pages well filled with interesting news items, live ads, heavy editorials and a fine description of the Herald's nice new four-story home. The Herald is a good live newspaper and the JOURNAL wishes it abundant success in the future.

THE new president's inaugural has one merit at least—brevity—that will commend itself to the better judgment of the people. From its perusal we cannot gather any indication of an intention to a radical overturning of the established financial system of the country—nothing that indicates a radical change in any department, in fact it would puzzle a lawyer to discover any very definite line of action in it. It congratulates the country upon the election of Grover—which seems to be the most important feature in the case.

BISMARCK TRIBUNE:—The Fargo Argus asks Hon. George H. Walsh where he is at? The Grand Forks Plaindealer has him in the democratic column but he tells the Bismarck Tribune that he has not renounced his allegiance to the republican party and that the statement to the effect published in the Plaindealer is incorrect.

This is as the JOURNAL supposed it would be. Geo. Walsh—who is a brother of E. M. of this city—has always been a stalwart republican, and while he may have a grievance against the party because he was not elected senator—which at one time seemed probable that he would be—still, as the principles of the republican party haven't been changed any, it is hardly probable that a man like Walsh would desert his ship in time of need.

J. S. NICHOLS, of Fertile, has a few words to say in this issue of the JOURNAL regarding diversified farming and he wants to hear from other farmers who have any suggestions on the best way to make the farm pay. A discussion of this question though the press cannot help but be fruitful of good results, and the JOURNAL invites the farmers to use its columns freely. Mr. Nichols is alive to the injury being done the farmers by the wheat speculators, and he accuses all our representatives of being owned by the wheat gamblers. This is not fair, and the JOURNAL wants him to place the blame where it belongs—on the democrats, the party that the populists fused with last fall. The measure to do away with option gambling, was introduced by a republican, and it was through the opposition of a few prominent democrats in the house that the bill was defeated.

THE Washburn anti-option bill, which had passed the United States senate, was killed in the house by the democrats. This measure was clearly in the interest of the farmers, and while not a party measure, the opposition in the house came from the democrats. There is so much opposition to this bill from the wheat gamblers of the country—who have millions of dollars to fight it—besides other interests which are dependent upon the gamblers, such as the Western Union Telegraph company, whose business with the wheat brokers amounts to a million dollars a year, that the chances of it ever passing are very slight indeed, and now that the complexion of congress is decidedly democratic, no hopes need be entertained for it during this administration. The last vote in the house was 172 ayes, 123 nays. This was on a motion to suspend the rules and concur in the senate amendments, and it required a two-thirds vote to do this.

Moorhead News: Governor Nelson has declined the invitation of the World's Fair managers to visit Chicago for the purpose of receiving and dedicating the state building at the fair, pleading pressure of official business. The state senate accepted the invitation, the trip to be made the day after final adjournment. "Conscience makes cowards of us all," says Shakespeare. Politics and fear of losing votes makes the modern American a coward.

That fling is unworthy of you, Bro. Lamphere, and you know better. You know that Governor Nelson is not the man to be influenced by any such consideration. You know that he is striving to give the people an economical administration and that is the reason why he was opposed to wasting the people's time and money on a junket to Chicago during the session of the legislature. Because you are a worthy member of the board that extended the invitation and have done good work in the cause is no reason why you should indulge in such an exhibition of boyish spleen.

THE first political fight of this session of our legislature occurred in the house over the bill to place all country elevators under the control of the grain and warehouse commission. The bill was drawn at the instigation of Governor Nelson and championed by the republicans and opposed by the democrats and populists. The inconsistency of the farmer members in voting against this measure shows that they place party above the interests of their people. At present there is no state inspection of grain except at terminal points—Minneapolis, Duluth and Superior—and the small farmer who cannot ship his own wheat, but must sell it to the country elevator, has no state protection whatever, and it is only the bonanza farmer—who ships his own wheat—who gets the benefit of state inspection. The poor farmer must accept the price and the grade offered him at the country elevator or take his wheat home. It was to place these country elevators under the control of the grain and warehouse commission—and thus protect the small farmer—that the measure opposed by the democrats and populists was introduced and passed in the house. Every farmer knows that whenever he has shipped a car-load of wheat—or his neighbor has done so—it has resulted in a net gain to the shipper—in the way of better grades and less dockage—of from 2 to 5 cents a bushel, and in many instances more, above what he could have got at the elevator at his station. But if this grain was inspected at the country elevator, the farmer would get the same grade and dockage that he would get at Duluth or other terminals. The measure spoken of is in the interest of the small farmers of the state—who are the great majority—and should become a law. Our representatives—Juelson and Knutson—voted against the bill and Mr. Chesley was absent. In speaking of the action of the populists and democrats on this measure the Minneapolis Journal says:

> The populists with the democrats united in their opposition to the elevator and warehouse bill in the house yesterday. These opponents have been for some time howling for the extension of state weighing, grading and inspection to all the elevators of the state for the protection of the average farmer from the local dealers, who are believed by him to be continually watching a chance to swindle him out of his grain. Gov. Nelson, in his inaugural advocated such a bill as was approved by the republicans of the house yesterday. Such a measure has been indorsed even by alliance organs, and it certainly embodies every essential provision for the protection of the farmer from possible imposition. This measure is opposed because it is indorsed by the republicans, and because it expresses the limit to which the republicans think such legislation should go. The men who want state elevators and a horde of new high salaried officers and additional taxation for the farmers to pay for them are opposed to the measure. The men who have hypocritically been shrieking for legislative relief for the "oppressed farmer" turn tail and run when a measure designed to accomplish what they have been asking for is brought forward. And this opposition is due to the simple fact that the bill emanates from republican sources. The farmer has an opportunity here to test the sincerity of his professed and noisy friends.

WORK OF CONGRESS

WHAT WAS DONE AT THE LAST SESSION.

Silver, the Tariff and Anti-Options, the Leading Topics Discussed—Retrenchment in Expenditures Did Not Cut Much of a Figure.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The silver and tariff question, the anti-option bill and the reduction of appropriations were the leading topics of consideration by the Fifty-second congress, which expired by constitutional limitation at noon Saturday. Secondary only in importance to these matters were measures relating to the world's fair, equipment of railroads with automatic car couplers, national quarantine and immigration, Behring sea and Hawaiian annexation. Nothing of an affirmative nature except to prevent two items in the McKinley bill taking effect was actually accomplished so far as respects silver, the tariff or anti-options.

Retrenchment of Expenditures is not apparent in any considerable change in the aggregate appropriation bills for they amount to about as much in the Fifty-first congress, laws on the statute books preventing some large reductions which otherwise would have been made, while the decrease which it was possible to effect was offset by increased appropriations for pensions and rivers and harbors.

The silver question was kept steadily before the attention of congress by the alternate efforts of the advocates of free coinage and of the repeal of the Sherman law. The coinage committee of the house in the first session reported a free silver bill, which after an exciting debate was saved from defeat by the casting vote of the speaker, but was afterwards the friends of the bill failing to secure the signatures of a majority of the Democrats to a petition asking for a cloture rule in its behalf. The senate then passed a free coinage bill, but when the silver men renewed their fight in the house they were outnumbered by 14 votes and of course failed. The anti-silver men met a similar fate in their efforts to secure appeal of the law.

Fillibustered to Death,

On the tariff the dominant party in the house adopted a policy of attacking the McKinley bill in detail largely for political reasons, and partly for the reason that in view of the political complexion of the senate it was practically out of the question to pass a while special measures might stand some show of passage. The result was the enactment into law of two bills continuing block tin on the free list and fine linen at 35 per cent. ad valorem. Under the McKinley bill large duties were to take effect on these items in the near future. Other separate bills were passed through the house only to be pigeonholed in the senate.

The anti-option bill passed both houses, but was killed by the refusal of the house to suspend the rules and agree by a two-thirds vote to the amendments put on the bill by the senate. The pure food bill, the running mate of the anti-options bill, passed the senate, but was never able to get consideration in the house.

The automatic car coupler bill, shorn of its drastic features, was enacted into law, as was also a national quarantine bill increasing the powers of the marine hospital service to meet the threatened dangers from cholera and an immigration law imposing additional reduction on immigration, but not suspending it entirely.

The Behring Sea Trouble.

The senate averted trouble over the Behring sea fisheries by ratifying a treaty of arbitration. It also ratified extradition treaties with Russia and other countries, but still has before it a treaty of annexation of the Hawaiian islands.

The opening of the Cherokee outlet was provided for in the Indian bill under a clause appropriating $8,295,000 for its purchase from the Indians, $295,000 to be paid in cash and $8,000,000 in five equal annual installments.

Approximately 425 house and 235 senate bills and joint resolutions became laws, making 660 acts as the result of the work of congress. A majority of these measures were of interest only to individuals or localities, being for the relief of citizens for the bridging of streams, etc. Three bills were vetoed by the president. All were of comparatively small importance.

Put on the Statute Books

The pension and census offices, the whisky trust, Panama Canal and Pacific Mail companies, the Watson-Cobb charges, the Pinkerton system and Homestead troubles and the Maverick and Spring Garden bank failures and the Ellis island immigration station were investigated by congressional committes, but nothing came out of the reports submitted.

MONTANA'S SENATOR.

Lee Mantle, of Butte, Has a Toga Dropped in His Lap.

HELENA, Mont., March 4.—Governor Richards has appointed Lee Mantle, of Butte, United States Senator. Mantle is at present mayor of Butte, and was the last Republican caucus nominee.

A Biography of Blaine.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The announcement is publicly made by Gail Hamilton (Miss Abigail Dodge) that with the co-operation of Mr. Blaine's family she is preparing a biography of the late James G. Blaine, but cannot yet say when it will be completed and issued.

Gresham Has Resigned.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Judge Walter Q. Gresham has filed his resignation as judge of the Seventh circuit, and it has been accepted.

THE GEORGIA CYCLONE.

Destruction of Life and Property Worse Than at First Reported.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 6.—Reports of the cyclonic visitation to Western Georgia, while not full as to details, show it to have been terrible in its effects. The cyclone seems to have struck the state near West Point. The first serious trouble was at Greenville, in Merriweather county, where the destruction was terrible. Every business house has been swept to the ground. The college there is a mass of ruins, half the churches of the town have met the same fate. Three-fourths of the houses of the town are wrecks. The storm struck about 8:30 o'clock and the people were glad to Escape With Their Lives.

Many got out in their night clothes and nothing else. Rich and poor alike are sufferers. The citizens met and issued an appeal to the public for aid. The appeal states that great suffering is reported from the country outside of the city. From Grange is reported great destruction in the lower part of Troup county. The path of the cyclone was 200 yards wide and every house for some distance was demolished. Several people were injured, but none were killed outright. Many narrow escapes are reported. A party was being held in one house, when a giant tree was uprooted and crashed through the building, splitting it into kindling wood, yet nobody there was hurt. A baby not a month old was carried from the house a distance of 30 yards and for half an hour laid beneath a ton of boards, apparently uninjured. At Piedmont

The Destruction Was Great.

Only two houses in the little town escaped. Here Miss Daisy Hawkins was killed outright, as was a negro whose name is not given. Many were injured, some fatally. Near Burnsville Andrew Revier, was killed and a number of others more or less injured. At Melena, Pike county, all the principal buildings of the town were swept away. A white lady, a Mrs. Felt, was killed, as were four negroes. The storm passed off between Macon and Savannah, lessening its fury. It seems to have gone out by the way of Wilmington, N. C.

Nine Bodies

have been recovered from the wreckage at Parnell station, three miles south of Meridian on the Queen and Crescent railroad, seven of them being members of the family of Daniel Barnett.

Twenty-two Dead.

MERIDIAN, Miss., March 7.—Over 800 families have been rendered homeless and destitute in two districts of Marion county by the cyclone. Reports are coming in slowly and reveal a distressing state of affairs. Two more of the injured at Toomsuba died during the day, making the total dead 22 so far as known.

DROPPED SEVERAL FEET,

Residents of Sandgate, England, Have a Startling Experience.

LONDON, March 5.—Last Saturday night the people of Sandgate, county of Kent, were aroused by the rocking of the houses and loud rumblings under ground. Walls split, ceilings fell, foundations sank and roofs fell. As the inhabitants fled to the streets they found large rents in the ground and were almost overcome by obnoxious vapors. Everybody supposed that the town was being shaken by an earthquake, and as the rumbling continued hundreds fled in a panic to the nearest towns. An investigation was made and it was found that the ground on which Sandgate stands and that a less subsidence had extended throughout the surrounding district affecting in all about a square mile. The gas main had been broken and the connection of the water pipes had been disturbed so that supplies of both gas and water had been stopped completely. Two hundred houses were destroyed.

Had Sunk Several Feet

SENTENCES PASSED.

Dempsey and Beatty Each Get Seven Years—Other Sentences.

PITTSBURG, March 5.—In criminal court Judge Stowe passed sentence on the convicted participants in the Homestead poisoning case as follows;

Dempsey and Beatty each seven years, Gallagher five years and Davidson three years.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

McIntosh.

From our regular correspondent.

Another masquerade on St. Patricks day. This one will be gotten up by the sons of Ireland and the wearers of the green.

J. Rosholt shipped two carloads of cattle and hogs last Saturday.

A. Gilmour and Ole Bjorgo left for the county seat last Saturday.

J. P. Johnson and W. G. Hunt returned from St. Paul last Saturday, where they have been since Christmas. The mission they went on, which is probably known to the most of them, is reported a success and you may look for something to drop in the near future.

Ole Bjorgo returned from St. Paul last Friday, where he disposed of two carloads of cattle.

The merchants of McIntosh are not assigning but they are again buying their spring and summer goods. That accounts for the town being overcrowded with traveling men.

Mr. and Mrs. P. O. Mandt leaves for St. Paul next week where Mr. Mandt goes to consult Dr. Hauk the celebrated Norwegian physician. The old gentleman has been ailing for the last year or so with heart trouble.

Some of the prominent ladies of the town opened up their phonographs some time ago and a few of the populace have had quite an uproar.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. M. Jenson a daughter. Mother and child doing well.

What is the matter with our band now-a-days? Its melodious sounds have not been heard for many weeks which makes it very lonesome. Why don't you liven up again boys and get a stir on you. It would be a shame to drop it now after it got along so nicely.

License or no license, is now the local issue of the day. On the 14th of March we have to decide. But before we go to the polls it would be well to stop and consider the state of affairs during the past year. The whiskey traffic will exist and no matter whether it is licensed or not it is sold which can plainly be seen. Therefore it would be better for the town to have three or four saloons, than to have that number of blind pigs.

The democrats are having quite a conflict as to who shall get the postoffice, but as yet it is undecided and probably will be for a long time, hence it would be better for us all if it could remain where it is as we are not likely to have as convenient a postoffice when the change is made.

Hurrah for the new county and the new county seat. Where will the county seat be? Why in McIntosh of course.

Dr. McEachran, S. H. Drew and Guy Pratt drove over to Fosston last Thursday evening to the dedication of the Masonic hall

Than Oystad returned from the pineries last Friday night where he has been on a kind of exploring expedition and taking a pine claim. Than says that on the account of the deep snow the only way a person can navigate over in that country is on skis as without them it would be impossible to get through. The snow being about five feet on the level.

Euclid Items.

From our regular correspondent.

EUCLID, March 7, 1893.

P. Fairweather and C. Stuhr were among the Euclidites in the Queen City last week.

C. Teal, Sr., returned from his trip to Ontario Saturday. He says that he had a nice time, socially, but as to hard times, the Red River valley is not in it as compared with that section of the Queen's dominion.

Mine host Hanson of the Keystone house, gave a party to a few invited guests Tuesday.

Boss Lindman thinks the hand car too tedious. Says he prefers the cannon ball.

Our village blacksmith took a run up to Argyle Tuesday.

Miss Ollie Rose who has been visiting in Crookston for some time, returned to her home Wednesday.

Subscribe for the JOURNAL at the post office.

William Casmey of Ontario, is among the new comers.

Dr. and Mrs. Chapin went to the Forks Saturday, where the doctor has gone to have an operation performed.

Mrs. Fritz Mellot who has been visiting in the southern part of the state, returned home Monday, and now Fritz wears a happy smile.

M. P. Losey, Sr., took the train for Crookston Saturday, where he goes to act as juror.

John Schantzen took a run over to the Forks Thursday. He does not speak in very favorable terms of business there. Says that it is very quiet.

Julius Burg, correspondent for the Goose Lake country, was in last week with a number of items of interest. Among them were that his wife and children were at home, sick, while he was around indulging in that which makes the brain dizzy.

B. Burns who moved with his family to the Forks last fall, has returned to the farm to get ready for spring work.

James McGoley has sold the south one-half of section 29, town of Euclid, to W. A. Gordon, of North Dakota.

Mrs. Julius Zimmerman presented her husband with a bright bouncing boy last week.

Dr. Just of Crookston, takes hold of the reins here during the absence of Dr. Chapin.

Capt. L. L. C. Brooks is up on one of his regular monthly visits.

J. R. Regan who has been visiting in Wisconsin, returned Monday to take charge of his school here, which opened Monday morning.

Chas. Teal, Jr., who has been up in the "shanty" all winter, returned to civilization Saturday.

Charlie Terrill and Geo. LaBarron, who are connected with the Link Belt Supply Co., of Minneapolis, are up looking over the Keystone elevator.

Our old friend Geo. Easby, who is visiting in Pennsylvaia, writes that times are very hard, lots of snow and a great deal of sickness down there.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING.

A Few Thoughts From J. S. Nichols, of Fertile, Upon This Subject.

FERTILE, Minn., Mar. 1, 1893.

EDITOR JOURNAL—I have been watching our home paper to see if some communication would not appear therein in regard to the farmer's situation—ways and means, as it were. To be a successful farmer a man must not only study all the late improved methods for best production, but it seems to me also as necessary that we should study the law of supply and demand. This is a grain country—you might say almost exclusively, for our long, hard winters make it almost an impossibility to raise stock successfully. Then the question is, "Does it pay you to raise wheat at the present price or the price you can reasonably expect next fall?" We have in this country too large an acreage. We raise such immense crops that the profits are eaten up by the cost of production. Then does it pay to take these chances? I have often heard farmers say in Illinois that they made more off of 80 acres than their neighbor made from the 300-acre farm. Now, I believe it will be necessary for farmers to watch future prospects the same as our option gamblers (who have bought our representatives body and soul). For instance, if the March government report gives winter wheat prospect good, that will indicate low prices for wheat next fall, providing crops in the spring wheat belt are fair. Then we should figure to sow less wheat, more oats, barley and rye, get a few more shoats, raise more chickens, and feed more grain. If every farmer in the northwest would feed 500 chickens, in a good 200-dollar chicken house, it would be the best investment he ever made. Now, there is no earthly use of us being robbed by gentlemen of leisure who are legalized by our government to do so. Have a vast quantity of different products to sell; if one article is too low to suit you, house it—store it in your own storehouse—until the price suits you, and dispose of that which will bring you a fair price. Be square in your dealings; make and keep your outstanding paper good, and you will not be required to pay extra to be carried on for a few months, but set your mark to raise your indebtedness and when it is raised try and keep out of debt, without you can see by accumulating a debt a sure chance for gain. I would run in debt for a good farm at half price any day if such farm could be properly handled or I saw a sure chance of making it worth double by improving, or I would also take chances on young stock which were sure to grow into money; but I should buy neither—no matter how low—if I had all I could handle, for there is our fault, trying to do more than nature cut us out for. Hoping this will bring out some thoughts from brother farmers, I am

HIS SECOND TERM.

CLEVELAND AGAIN MADE PRESIDENT OF THE NATION.

There Was a Big Crowd From All Over the Country and Democratic Enthusiasm Was Not Checked by the Snow Storm and Cold Weather.

WASHINGTON, March 4. — Grover Cleveland was made president of the United States for the second time today. But for the storm of snow and rain, which raged during the forenoon, the ceremonies, parade and display would have been greater and grander than when Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated eight years ago. There were four great leading features of the inaugural day ceremonies—the closing hours of congress, into which very much lawmaking was crowded; the ride of the retiring president and vice president elect, with military escort from the White House to the Capitol to lay down and take up the reins of power respectively; the pageant of the returning procession, and the inaugural ball.

The March to the Capitol.

President Harrison and President Elect Cleveland rode from the White House at 11 a. m., in an open landau drawn by four black horses with white harnesses. Senator Ransom of North Carolina, and Senator Teller of Colorado, also rode in the presidential carriage.

Vice President Elect Stevenson rode directly behind the presidential carriage, also in an open landau, drawn by white horses wearing black harness. The procession required nearly an hour to reach the East front of the Capitol. President Harrison went directly to the President's Room in the Senate Chamber, while Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Stevenson went to the vice president's room.

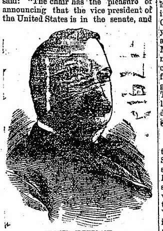
Scenes in the Senate.

Soon after 11 a. m. the senate chamber was changed into a vast auditorium. The senators all gathered on the right of the chamber, while the left, or Democratic side, was occupied by distinguished visotors and by the diplomatic corps, in full uniform, or national costumes. Justices of the supreme court, in their heavy silk gowns, were seated on the right of the vice president's station. The families of the incoming president and vice president were closely observed as they came in.

The official announcement was made that President Harrison had no more communications to make to the senate. Then came a moment of waiting, and the "president of the United States" was announced, and he entered at once and went directly to the front of the vice president's desk. President Elect Cleveland followed, and went to the side of President Harrison.

Mr. Stevenson Takes the Oath.

Vice President Morton then arose and said: "The chair has the pleasure of announcing that the vice president of the United States is in the senate, and if agreeable to him I will now administer to him the oath of office. Mr. Stevenson promptly stepped to the desk and accepted the oath and immediately began to discharge his duties as vice president. He announced the extra session of the senate, for confirming cabinet appointments, and then the newly elected senators, and those reelected, were sworn in, and the new Democratic vice president had performed his first official acts.



GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. Cleveland's Inaugural Address.

Mr. Cleveland then became the chief actor. It was almost 1 p. m. when he appeared at the east front of the Capitol preparatory to delivering his inaugural address, the thousands of people packed in the great park before the Capitol cheered themselves hoarse before they allowed him to begin his inauguration address.

Mr. Cleveland spoke without manuscript, but with brief notes to refresh his memory. He first expressed his profound gratitude to the people for the honor thus a second time conferred upon him as a mark of confidence in him and belief in the principles upon which he was elected.

Summary of the Speech.

Mr. Cleveland urged that the government must have a sound and staple currency, entirely removed from dangers of depreciation in its purchasing power.

Frugality and economy in public life must be the aim of all officials, and the people's money should be carefully used. Wild and reckless pension expenditure should be checked, if existing, and the general plan of civil service should be adopted so far as possible in all government offices. Trusts, combinations and conspiracies should be wiped out, because they invariably operate against the welfare of the people.

Indian rights and interests should be honestly considered and their civilization and advancement studied, so as to make them eventually self-supporting and independent.

Delusions and misconceptions of vicious tariff laws should be torn aside and tariff reform should be the American watchword. Burdens of taxation should be lifted from the daily lives of our people.

Obedience to constitutional commands should be the rule by which the president's official conduct must be guided. I am saved from discouragement when I reflect that I shall have the support and counsel of wise and patriotic men throughout the Union of States.

Ready to Take the Oath.

When he had finished Mr. Cleveland turned to the chief justice and said:

"I am now prepared to take the oath prescribed by law."

The scene that followed thrilled the multitude and it awed them into stillness.

The oath was administered and accepted, the new president bowed and kissed the Bible, a detachment of artillery saluted and cheers went up from the crowd on the platform, in the park below and in adjoining streets, and there was no restraint to Democratic ardor.

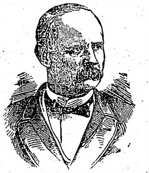
The oath taken by the president is what is known as the constitutional oath and reads as follows:

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States.

The Inaugural Ball.

The inaugural ball Saturday evening in the pension building was a social and spectacular success.

The concert which preceded the program of waltzes had been enjoyed when the president and Mrs. Cleveland came in at 9:40 and made a circuit of the vast ball room and then retired to an upper reception room and received in social greeting many members of congress, foreign officials and men of prominence in the American business world. Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland left the ball room before 10:30.



ADLAI E. STEVENSON.

The Stevenson family arrived at 10 and remained until after 11, being constantly the center of a brilliant group of friends.

Precisely at midnight "Home, Sweet Home" was sounded, and the second Cleveland inaugural ball passed into history, to be remembered as a staid and stately affair, lacking almost every characteristic of a modern ball.

The Inaugural Parade.

The military and civic parade would have been greater in numbers and more imposing than that which ushered Mr. Cleveland into the White House eight years ago, had the weather been warmer and the skies clear. General Martin McMahon of New York was grand marshal. The escorting division was composed of artillery, cavalry and infantry of the regular army, drawn from garrisons in and near Washington. Then came Grand Army veterans, followed by the civic procession of six divisions, headed by Tammany with gorgeous banners and badges.

An Immense Crowd of People.

Every foot of standing room along the route of two miles was occupied. Seats in windows and reviewing stands sold at prices ranging from $1 to $5. Reviewing stands were erected at all street corners. The main stand from which President Cleveland witnessed the procession stood in front of the White House. The vast treasury buildings was almost walled in with stands, all crowded far beyond their seating capacity. The decorations were not of great variety or artistic.

The many public and private stands erected along the line of march from the Capitol to a point beyond the White House had an estimated seating capacity of 60,000 persons. And every one of them was crowded.

It is estimated that about 40,000 men made up the procession, and that it was witnessed by almost half a million people. It was after dark when President Cleveland left his reviewing stand and entered the White House.

President Cleveland's Cabinet.

In his new cabinet President Cleveland has particularly honored the legal profession. Six out of eight portfolios went to lawyers, and old newspaper men secured the remaining two. The legal luminaries are Walter Q. Gresham, John G. Carlisle, Hilary A. Herbert, Hoke Smith, Wilson S. Bissell and Richard Olney. The newspaper men are Daniel S. Lamont and J. Sterling Morton, and Mr. Smith is also prominent in the newspaper world in the South.

The new cabinet has been completed by the appointment of Richard Olney of Boston, to be attorney general. The names of all cabinet officers are as follows:

Secretary of State, Walter Q. Gresham of Illinois.

Secretary of the Treasury, John G. Carlisle of Kentucky.

Secretary of War, Daniel S. Lamont of New York.

Secretary of the Navy, Hilary A. Herbert of Alabama.

Secretary of the Interior, Hoke Smith of Georgia.

Postmaster General, Wilson S. Bissell of Buffalo, N. Y.

Attorney General, Richard Olney of Massachusetts.

Secretary of Agriculture, J. Sterling Mertion of Nebraska.

Nominations Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The senate, in executive session, immediately confirmed all the cabinet nominations.

THE LEGISLATURE.

TWENTY-EIGHTH SESSION.

Tuesday, Feb. 28.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 28.—President Pro Tem. Sanborn presided in the senate in the absence of Lieutenant Governor Clough.

A resolution was passed for a committee of one from each judicial district to redistrict the the state judicially.

Senate file 36 providing for a five-sixths jury verdict in civil actions; Senator Davis' fire insurance bill, and the bill increasing the salary of the supreme court reporter were all reconsidered.

The calendar was taken up and the judiciary committee's bill relating to a constitutional amendment prohibiting the organization of corporations for holding real estate was defeated by a vote of 23 to 12.

Senator Tawney's bill for the protection of motorneers and gripmen was passed by vote of 39 to 0.

One of the most important measures of the session was passed. It was the bill known as Governor Nelson's and provides that all country elevators shall be public elevators and subject to the supervision of the state grain and warehouse commission.

Wednesday, March, 1.

ST. PAUL, March 1.—In the house the committee on public buildings reported a substitute bill for H. F. 339 (new capitol) and recommended it to pass. The substitute is H. F. 694, and provides for the governor to appoint a commission of five members, to secure the erection of a new capitol. The governor is ex-officio a member of the board. The board shall have a per diem of $5, and give bonds in $10,000, and take an oath that he is not interested in contracts or lands. The board shall appoint a superintendent of building and secretary. The substitute retains all the old features of the bill, as to location within three-quarters of a mile of the present site, and the financial scheme of a levy of 3-10 mills and an annual appropriation of $5,000 for commission expenses. The same limit of $2,000,000 as total cost is retained. The bill was made a special order for next Tuesday.

The senate resolution limiting the time of introducing appropriation bills to March 8, and fixing the time when they shall be reported back at March 20, was also concurred in.

In the senate the Markham bill taxing railroad lands was the special order for 2:30 p. m. Aside from the resolution extending the time for the introduction of appropriation bills to March 8, this was the only measure of great importance considered.

Thursday, March, 2.

ST. PAUL, March 2.—The house has resolved to go out of the debating society business. Bob Dunn called up his resolution limiting debate. The resolution allows the introducer of a bill or resolution 10 minutes in which to explain it. No other member is allowed more than five minutes to speak on a measure and the time which may be occupied in explaining a vote is limited to three minutes. Mr. Cotton only wanted to allow a member one minute in which to explain his vote and offered an amendment to that effect, which was adopted.

At the afternoon session bills were passed as follows:

H. F. 272—To prohibit the sale of liquor to minors. Passed by a vote of 68 to 12. This is the bill which prevents "rushing the growler."

H. F. 93—Liability of indemnity insurance companies. Passed by a vote of 63 to 27.

H. F. 337—To license elevators. Passed.

H. F. 434—The anti-scalper's bill. Passed by a vote of 73 to 42.

In the senate Davis insurance policy bill was passed after amendment.

March's bill to empower a five-sixths of a jury to bring in a verdict after six hours deliberation was also passed, 20 to 22.

The senate went into committee of the whole with Senator Stevens in the chair and resumed consideration of the Markham bill, the special order of the day. The discussion lasted the remainder of the session and it was finally agreed that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole next Tuesday at 2:30 p. m.

Friday, March 3.

ST. PAUL, March 3.—By a vote of 23 to 5 the senate went on record in favor of annual sessions of the legislature and a salary to members of $1,000, as against the present system of biennial sessions limited to 90 days and a per diem salary. The expense would be about $450,000, or more than three times what the legislature costs at present.

The senate in committee of the whole took action on the following bills:

H. F. 279—Giving the Duluth district another judge; to pass.

S. F. 220—Requiring $10,000 capital before banks can incorporate; to pass.

S. F. 328—Increasing the powers of the state board of health; to pass.

The Lineau amendment to the Australian law was also recommended to pass by the committee of the whole. The Glader freight rates bill, however, was killed, although there is a possibility of a revision when there is a full senate. The measure creating the office of commissioner of agriculture was defeated and the freight rate bill was indefinitely postponed.

The house passed some important measures. One was to loan farmers who lost crops last year money to purchase seed, the loans to be a lien on the farms.

In committee of the whole F. M. Wilson's bill conferring upon the superintendent and board of managers of the state reform school the authority to release any of the youthful inmates of that institution when they deem it wise to do so was recommended to pass.

The bill making eight hours a legal day's work on all state, county and municipal work was also recommended to pass.

Saturday, March 4.

ST. PAUL, March 4.—The proceedings of the Minnesota legislature were unique Saturday. In joint convention, the senators and representatives, casting party politics to the wind, indulged in a love feast and passed resolutions complimenting the outgoing president, Benjamin Harrison, upon his splendid administration, and congratulating the new president, Grover Cleveland, upon his inauguration as the chief executive of the nation. After addresses by a number of members of both houses the following messages were telegraphed to Washington:

St. Paul, March 4.—To Benjamin Harrison: The senate and house of representatives of Minnesota, in joint convention assembled, congratulate you upon your splendid administration just closed.

To Grover Cleveland: The senate and house of representatives of Minnesota, in joint convention assembled, send greeting and congratulations upon your inauguration as president.

In the house the Hastings and Dakota forfeiture bill was recommended to pass. Very little other work was done in either house.

Monday, March 6.

ST. PAUL, March 6.—The house acted upon the following bills in committee of the whole:

S. F. 84 and 85—To amend the law relating to cruelty to animals; recommended to pass.

H. F. 266—Accepting the grant of land in Itasca Park to the state; recommended to pass.

H. F. 424—Requiring the payment of interest on notes secured by real estate at any point where the loan was made; recommended to pass.

These bills were passed.

S. F. 95—Bill to legalize conveyances of married women prior to 1865; passed.

H. F. 189—Requiring the acceptance by railroad companies of tickets in either direction as fare between two points; passed.

H. F. 426—Creating a bureau of labor and defining its duties; passed.

The senate met at 3 p. m. and Senator Donnelly started things up by introducing a resolution calling for a committee to investigate the adulteration of linseed oil. Adopted. He also introduced a bill prohibiting the making of contracts payable in gold.

Senator J. D. Smith introduced a bill to expunge the amendment to the constitution adopted last fall prohibiting special legislation. Also a joint resolution instructing Minnesota's representatives in congress to support the non-sectarian amendment to the federal constitution now pending. No bills of consequence were passed.

Crinoline to Be or Not to Be.

The vexed controversy concerning crinoline, which has been raging in the papers of late, is due to the dearth of fashion news rather than to actual facts. Whilst newspaper fashion writers have busied themselves discussing the appalling consequences of the revival of the hoopskirt in Paris and whilst the influence of the Princess of Wales has been appealed to to stand as a barrier against this coming threatening event, the leading dressmaking houses of the French capital have not yet made a single crinoline for any of their customers. All there is to be said on this subject is that the several pretty novel models of skirts coming from Paris are as a general rule flat around the waist with considerable fullness at the bottom. In order to thoroughly comprehend the actual tendency of Fashion and to get reliable information as to the best way of securing fine models of these stylish skirts, one must consult the McDowell Fashion Magazines: La Mode de Paris and Paris Album of Fashion are invaluable to dressmakers and sell at $3.50 a year, or 35 cents a copy. The French Dressmaker, $3.00 per year, or 30 cents per copy, is noted for its practical styles. La Mode, $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a month; is the Family Fashion Journal, par excellence. Gas.

There are several kinds of gas—marsh gas, sewer gas, natural gas—a good deal of this furnished by politicians, but illuminating very poorly—oxygen gas, hydrogen gas, and a long list of others. Artificial lights are obtained either by combustion or incandescence. Of the former class is what is known to us as illuminating gas, now generally made from bituminous coal, though it has been, and can be, procured from wood also. Perhaps few of our readers are aware that the discovery and use of coal gas is of comparatively recent origin. It was about 1792 when Robert Murdoch a studious and inventive Scotchman, began experiments in procuring illuminating gas from coal. His experiments were successful but it was not until 1812 that the process was made cheap enough to be of commercial importance. In that year the first gas and coke company was formed in London. One of the recent applications has been the lighting of railroad cars—the most successful being the Pintsch system, which is briefly the storing of gas at a very high pressure in iron cylinders under the cars, and supplying it in smal quantities to jets burning in a glass globe. This has been adoped by the Burlington Route for its trains out of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and meets the warm approval of patrons. ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk—ss. In Probate Court, Special Term, March 8th 1893.

In the matter of the estate of Ingeborg N. Tysse, deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of Ole J. Tysse setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into his hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to him granted to sell the whole of the real estate of said deceased. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said administrator to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate;

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court, on Monday the 3rd day of April 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston in said county, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Ole J. Tysse to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said County.

Dated at Crookston the 8th day of March A. D. 1893.

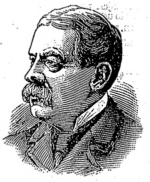
THE NEW ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Richard Olney Has Been Very Successful at the Bar.

Richard Olney, the new attorney general, has long been known as a leading lawyer in Massachusetts, and, it might be said, as a lawyer only. Though an unflinching Democrat, he has persistently declined office and was a candidate for attorney general of Massachusetts only when the nomination was a mere compliment, his party being in a hopeless minority. He has, however, served one term in the lower house of the Massachusetts legislature.

He was born in Oxford, Mass., Sept. 15, 1835, and was graduated from Brown university in the class of '56. He studied at the Harvard law school and entered the law office of Judge Benjamin F. Thomas in Boston in 1859. In his chosen profession he advanced rapidly. He was for many years counsel for the Eastern Railroad company, and after the consolidation he was retained as counsel for the Boston and Maine, a position which he still holds. He is also counsel for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroads. He has twice declined a place on the supreme bench of the state, and it is said that he has invariably supported the Democratic ticket except when General Butler was the candidate for governor, when he "bolted with emphasis."



RICHARD OLNEY.

His home is in Boston, but he has a summer residence not far from Gray Gables, and is therefore a sort of summer neighbor of Mr. Cleveland, from which some people draw conclusions. His income as a lawyer has for some time been $50,000 a year, and he has lately completed a magnificent residence on Commonwealth avenue, Boston. He therefore makes a great financial sacrifice in entering the cabinet, but this is only what many others have done.

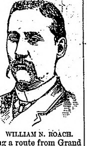
Socially he and his family are well equipped for the position they will be called to fill in Washington. It is also a pleasing fact that though his selection was quite unexpected it is warmly approved by New England congressmen, and it now transpires that his name was urged upon Presinent Cleveland for the place of chief justice of the United States at the time Judge Fuller was appointed.

Why Smuggling Revived In Mexico.

"At one time during the administration of President Diaz," said a Mexican gentleman in Chicago, "the smugglers became so numerous that the president issued a proclamation stating that all smugglers who would put themselves in the hands of the revenue department would be forgiven for past offenses and be given profitable employment in the custom house. Many of the smugglers took advantage of this offer and were given good positions under the government. This plan was successful, and smuggling was becoming rare along the United States border until the Mexican government reduced the salaries of the reformed smugglers. Then one by one they deserted their offices and engaged in their old customs. They are now fully organized along the Rio Grande and conduct their unlawful business most profitably."

North Dakota's New Senator.

William Nathaniel Roach, Democrat, has been elected to the United States senate by the legislature of North Dakota, though it has a large Republican majority. He is therefore an object of lively curiosity to the whole nation. He was born Sept. 25, 1840, in Virginia, but in his infancy his parents removed to Washington, where he spent his early life, being educated at Georgetown college. He followed mercantile pursuits until 1875, when he went to Dakota in connection with mail contracts, operating a route from Grand Forks to Fort Totten. During this time he took a homestead and tree claim near Larimore, where he has since resided. He was interested in Larimore, platted in 1881, and an agent of the Townsite company, which organized the city government in 1883, and was first mayor and re-elected for three successive terms, operating his farm meanwhile.



WILLIAM N. ROACH.

The irony of the situation is considerably heightened by the fact that he was a Democratic leader and candidate in the times when men of that party were distressingly scarce in Dakota, and was elected a senator most unexpectedly and by an independent movement of the Republican members of his own county, Grand Forks, after he had, as it were, retired from politics. In 1885 he was the only Democrat in the territorial legislature. In 1889 he was defeated for governor by 14,000 votes, and in 1890 by only 600. He married a daughter of Dr. Liebermauer of Washington in 1872 and has three sons and one daughter. Mrs. Roach died in 1890. Two sons are now in Georgetown college. The senator is a tall gentleman with iron gray hair, mustache and goatee, and presents a very dignified and commanding appearance.

Learning From Englishmen.

It is true that the English have cultivated sprinting, hurdling and the various field events somewhat less successfully than we, but for all distances above the quarter mile the English records (to use our American standard of comparison) are the world's records. This means that the prevailing interest abroad is less in the close gymnasium and on the dreary cinder track than in cross country runs and paper chases, which lead the athlete through woods and fields, blow his lungs full of fresh air and steep his senses in sunlight. Likewise the Englishman's yacht is, as it were, his summer home, while his horses are the companions of the hunt and his travels. If yacht or horse wins races for him, so much the better.

But he draws the line when it comes to sacrificing their sounder merits for the passing glory of sweepstakes. Thus sport with him is pleasanter and less intensely exciting. It is fruitful in mental relaxation and rest as well as in bodily health. In short, Americans lack the strength that comes through moderation and repose, through wholesomeness of mind and body. We have yet to learn that the work of life is too serious for us to set our hearts and stake our health on the pastimes of idle hours; that our years are too few to be shortened by devoting workdays and playdays alike to the wasting passion of achievement.—John Corbin in Outing.

Living With a Broken Heart.

A remarkable case of survival for a week with rupture of the heart is reported. The man, who was 52 years old, short and plethoric, was playing football, when he suddenly fell down in a sort of faint, but recovered in a few moments and continued his play. Soon after the game was over, however, he had another and more severe attack, accompanied by pain in the cardiac region, and a few minutes later he was in a state of partial collapse, with shallow breathing, almost imperceptible pulse, and very severe pain over the heart. He gradually improved and was able to sit up, but seven days later he had another fainting fit and died.

At the autopsy the heart was found to be fatty, degenerated and very friable, and in the wall of the left ventricle was a break or rupture half an inch in diameter. It seemed most probable that the rupture was at first very minute or partial, not allowing the escape of blood into the pericardium, and that a week later some extra exertion caused a completion or enlargement of the rupture, resulting in the escape of blood and death.—London Lancet.

Untimely Criticism.

Untimely criticism is a barrier, shutting out affection from us and spontaneity. "Don't wriggle your feet so, my son," says the critical father to a boy vibrant with enthusiasm. The correction could have waited, and the boy, with dampened ardor, turns away, telling his next story elsewhere, while the father some day wonders why boys are sealed books to their elders. "Where did you buy that dreadful cravat?" Mary says to John in the midst of his cheerful salutation, when he is just about to tell her of a bit of good fortune. "Such silly sentimentality!" says John, with a shrug of indifference, to Mary at some new thought springing out of her heart, dewy in freshness as a newly plucked rose. And John and Mary each grow to mourn the fact that the best of the other sheds its fragrance elsewhere.

There are a hundred other barriers—the dwelling on material cares, the wanton disregard of social amenities, the sensitiveness to personal peculiarities.—Harper's Bazar.

Said to Be Better Than Morphine.

Mention is made of codeine sulphate as an extremely prompt sedative in affections of the respiratory tract, possessing an advantage over morphine in that it does not check the secretions, nor does it lead to a habit, nor has it disagreeable after effects, and it will alleviate pain. The dose varies from one-eighth to one-half, and, exceptionally, one grain, given in pill or in solution, frequently in sirup of wild cherry.

The officinal alkaloid is rarely used, the sulphate being preferred for the purpose. If administered in water, an insoluble residue is sometimes found, which, on examination, proves to be the alkaloid codeine, found in codeine sulphate from the excessive heat employed in concentration of the solution for crystallization.—New York Tribune.

A Bogus Bear's Ham.

The late Sir Richard Owen, the eminent anatomist, often had his skill in identifying bones tested. On one occasion his friend and neighbor, Lord John Russell, sent him a specimen for this purpose, and the professor quickly pronounced it the thigh bone of a pig. This explanation of the query was subsequently offered by Lord John: "President Buchanan had sent from America to the English statesman the present of 'a choice bear's ham,' and the family had breakfasted off it several times with much enjoyment. Somehow or other, however, suspicion was aroused, and the bone was sent to their scientific neighbor, with the result stated."—Cor. Pall Mall Gazette.

Ancient Forms of Life In Australia.

Australia seems to have been a place of refuge for many ancient forms of life, and every now and then some supposed to have become extinct are found still existing there. The latest in this respect is a discovery by a Mr. Ogilby, a naturalist, in certain rivers of New South Wales of fresh water herrings, identical in every way to those before not found later than the latter part of the cretaceous and early part of the tertiary period.

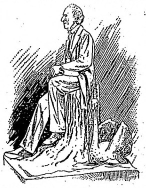
HE WROTE FAIRY TALES.

And Now the Children Erect a Statue of Hans Christian Andersen.

Chicago is to have a large bronze statue of Hans Christian Andersen to stand on a commanding site in Lincoln park, and the children of the country are to pay for it. It was a beautiful idea that the little ones, by penny and 5-cent contributions, should raise a memorial to the great Danish story teller, who loved children so warmly and did so much to make them happy. So no effort was made to secure large subscriptions. Andrew Peterson, Danish banker in Chicago and president of the association to secure the statue, gave something, and so did others, but the children are to give most of the $10,000 required.

Johannes Gelert, a Danish sculptor of Chicago, has completed the clay model which represents Andersen as he was in 1855, 20 years before his death. He is shown sitting upon the stump of a tree at the edge of a lake. In the lake and a little farther back than the statue is a swan with arching neck and lifted wings, suggesting Andersen's most famous story, "The Ugly Duckling." In one hand and resting on his knee he holds a notebook, while in the other is a pencil.



GELERT'S STATUE OF HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN.

Hans Christian Andersen was born in Odense, Denmark, April 2, 1805, and died in Copenhagen Aug. 4, 1875. The period of 1855 is selected because at that age the largest number of good portraits of him were taken, and he had then acquired all the dignity with none of the decrepitude of age.

It was designed to have the statue set up and unveiled during the World's fair, and it is hoped that many of the little ones who contributed will have the opportunity of seeing it. Mr. Gelert, has made a special study of Andersen's features and of many other distinctively Danish subjects.

The Blue Hen's Chickens.

The Delaware society of New York has issued a list which shows that there are about 500 residents of the metropolis who were born in Delaware, and the Delaware colony in Philadelphia is so large that the society there has been able to set up a clubhouse.

When Traveling Was Dangerous.

Hounslow heath, Finchley common and Gadshill, in the neighborhood of London, were celebrated haunts of the highwayman, and the secluded roads of Epping forest, on the route to Cambridge, were often the scenes of plunder in broad daylight. These desperate robbers at last became so dangerous, and the peril of their attacks so serious to travelers of all kinds, as well as to the postmen, that the government passed a law making highway robbery an offense punishable by the death of the criminal and the confiscation of all his property. But robberies still occurred.

In 1783 mail coaches, protected by armed guards, took the place of post boys. The coaches carried passengers also, and as these generally carried arms the mails were better protected, but still daring and oftentimes successful attacks were made upon them.—St. Nicholas.

Santa Fe employes have organized a federation to prevent strikes, only going to such an extreme measure when all other means of effecting a settlement have failed.

M. V. Gannon, president of the Irish National league, emphatically denies that he authorized the address said to have been issued Saturday by the officers of the league directed against the Gladstone home rule bill.
